"For us, as a program, it has never been about winning," Fritz said in a release. "I have been fortunate to have been surrounded by talented coaches and players. I am very proud of the tradition we are establishing here at K-State."

K-State was led by junior Sandy Werner and sophomore Rita Lilliom, each grabbing 10 kills. Junior Joy Hamlin followed suit with nine kills on 14 attempts and a .571 hitting percentage. Sophomore Stacey Spiegelberg tallied 39 assists, placing her one assist from 500 for her career.

The Wildcats began game one at 5-4, and eventually built their lead to 26-18 on a block by Hamlin and Werner. An Oklahoma attacking error sealed the Wildcats' victory in game one. K-State hit .452 while holding the Sooners to a .036 clip.

The Sooners opened up game two with a 3-0 lead. The Wildcats then took control at 10-6. Although Oklahoma would never have the lead again, it fought to bring the score back to 29-28, only to be halted again by a Hamlin kill.

Game three was a battle with multiple lead changes. However, an Oklahoma service error, a solo block by Werner and tandem block by Spiegelberg and Hamlin gave K-State a 26-24 advantage, and eventually, the victory.

K-State will resume competition at home for two-matches against Texas Tech at 7 p.m. on Saturday.

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tamar Kvaratskhelia feels the pressure. The sophomore has the task of trying to improve on the most successful freshman season in K-State women's tennis history.

After setting four new K-State tennis records, Kvaratskhelia said she thinks everyone is watching.

"Everybody is expecting something from me, and I don't want to screw up," Kvaratskhelia said.

Kvaratskhelia, who achieved All-Big 12 honors for singles play in 2005, does not want her local celebrity status to mess with her performance.

"I don't want to let things get into my head like being recognized at the mall or Wal-Mart," Kvaratskhelia said.

Kvaratskhelia, nicknamed Tako by her teammates, was introduced to the game of tennis at the age of seven by her father. She said her interest in the sport was not strong until she began competing in tournaments.

At K-State, she said college tennis practice is less intense, with more emphasis on academics.

"I used to practice like five or six hours a day really hard, but now it's more school and tennis," she said.

Kvaratskhelia must also deal with the home sickness of being on the other side of the world from her home in Tbilisi, Georgia.

Family and food are what she misses the most, she said.

"It has been really tough for me here because I haven't seen my family for over a year," she said. "I haven't been able to find any place that has food like we have back home."

Coach Steve Bietau said he believes Kvaratskhelia will deal with her home sickness.

"I believe it would be a factor for anyone, but Tako's a tough kid, and she'll get through it," Bietau said.

Bietau said despite her impressive freshman season, Kvaratskhelia has not been named the No. 1 singles player just yet.

"Nobody here is a lock to play any position," Bietau said. "We have more competition for spots than we've ever had."

Bietau said it is more important to have a strong team rather than a talented superstar.

"I could care less who plays No. 1, because having a good No. 1 doesn't win team matches for you," he said. "The more important issue is who is No. 6, because how good you are at five and six is a lot better indicator of how good your team is than how good you are at No. 1."

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore tennis player Tamar Kvaratskhelia posted her best season as a tennis player as a freshman last season. Kvaratskhelia ranked as a top-100 player by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

Jessica Simosa, a senior from Valencia, Venezuela, said with so many players from other countries, the Wildcats have created a support system on the team.

Simosa said once the season begins, it becomes easier to forget about home.

"We are all far from home so we help each other out like sisters," she said. "You get used to being away from home once the season starts because you're traveling and meeting new people."

Kvaratskhelia was recently ranked No. 95 by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

She said despite the high bar she has set for herself, she will not try to do too much.

"I will try to improve and hopefully not do worse than last year," she said.

NCAA ban on mascots doesn't make sense

KENT HILDEBRAND

The NCAA is at it again. In an effort not to offend a group of people, it did a good job making nearly everybody mad.

In August, it decided to ban the use of American Indian mascots and nicknames from postseason tournaments. The move was well-intended; if people believe a mascot is insensitive and offends them, they shouldn't have to be subjected to that. But when you mess with something students, alumni and fans across the nation passionately identify with, you're going to get burned.

Under the ruling, at least 18 schools with mascots considered "hostile or abusive," such as Illinois' Fighting Illini, would not be able to use the mascot or nickname on any team uniforms or clothing during an NCAA tournament after Feb. 1.

The same schools also may not host a postseason event.

Problem is, several schools have permission from local tribes to use the mascots. Such was the case for the Florida State Seminoles, Utah Utes and Central Michigan Chippewas, which all won appeals to the NCAA and will be able to use their mascots.

And, in a study by the University of Pennsylvania's National Annenberg Election Survey, 90 percent of American Indians polled nation-wide were not offended by the use of Indian-themed mascots.

Even those American Indians in favor of the ban aren't completely pleased. Vernon Bellecourt, a member of the Anishinabe-Ojibwe Nation in Minnesota, is upset because the ban is limited only to postseason play.

"We would have hoped the NCAA would have provided the moral leadership on this issue, but obviously they've chosen to only go halfway," Bellecourt said.

The NCAA can't make anybody happy. Now maybe everyone else who's ever been offended by a mascot will come forward.

Why should those with Irish and Norwegian heritage put up with Notre Dame or the Cleveland State Vikings?

For those of Greek descent, how do you feel about the Trojans and Spartans?

Any farmers or agriculture majors shouldn't have to deal with the distress brought on by the Aggies of Texas A&M and New Mexico State.

That's just the tip of the Working unusual jobs gives students life experiences

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students run through their mental checklists one last time as they rush out the door.

Coffee? Check.

Briefcase? Uh-huh.

Laptop? Got it.

They start up their car, turn on the radio and prepare themselves for another typical day at work as they zip through the morning traffic.

To many, the above scenario could read like an autobiography of their professional careers at a bank, office or restaurant.

But three Manhattan residents in particular have chosen jobs that defy convention.

Their occupations place them away from a traditional workplace setting, and they don't regret it in the least.

Wes Steimel, junior in criminology and anthropology, pens cattle at the Manhattan Commission Company on U.S. Highway 24.

"I once told a girl I worked at the sale barn, and she thought I sold sailboats at Tuttle Creek," he said.

In reality, Steimel and his co-workers are responsible for leading and sorting cattle as they are sold at large auctions and maintaining the Commission Company's grounds and facilities.

He considers the job a perfect fit for his course schedule and his personality.

"I'm not really much of a people-person," said Steimel. "You don't have to worry about losing business if you yell at the cattle."

Long nights and lots of walking can take their toll, but Steimel said his boss, co-workers and the flexible hours keep him coming back to the sale barn.

Layla El-Chami, junior in family studies and human services, is a Multicultural Assistant, at Ford Hall.

While many on campus are familiar with the resident assistants who staff each floor of the residence halls, El-Chami has found few people who are familiar with her position.

"My job in the building is to put on diversity programs," she said. "I try to educate and raise awareness of diversity issues, and to promote tolerance, acceptance and respect for all people."

El-Chami is officially on duty one night a week and on selected weekends, but her status as a staff member makes her available to residents 24 hours a day.

Acting as a role model to the young women at Ford has also built El-Chami's leadership skills.

"Being an MA is so unique," she said. "It allows me to express my knowledge of diversity but also to grow and learn even more from the people around me."

Matt Goss, Manhattan resident, has had more jobs in his 29 years than many have in a lifetime.

He has managed a restaurant, worked as a bill collector, served in the army and holds two associate degrees from a technical college.

But it's his current position as an apprentice at Stray Cat Tattoo on Laramie Street that Goss has enjoyed most.

"I work with guys I've known for ten years," he said. "And I get to draw. I love art."

El-Chami, places personality profiles on a bulletin board she is designing for her job as a Multicultural Assistant in Ford Hall.

Learning to become a tattoo artist is not glamorous. Goss works at least 60 hours a week cleaning, sterilizing equipment, drawing and stenciling.

The nature of the work is also challenging.

"It's really hard to figure out what's in somebody's head, and then transfer it down on paper into something you're comfortable with, and they're comfortable with putting on their bodies," he said.

Despite the long hours and demands of his apprenticeship, though, Goss said he would never return to any of his old occupations.

"I've worked all of those jobs, but this is what I want to do."

Heartier meals require more cook time, effort

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Extra effort in the kitchen makes awesome lasagna.

Quick and easy just doesn't hit the spot every day. Days like this require a meal with some substance and flavor.

This is where a pan of lasagna makes an entrance.

It requires a little more work than normal, but the payoff is high.

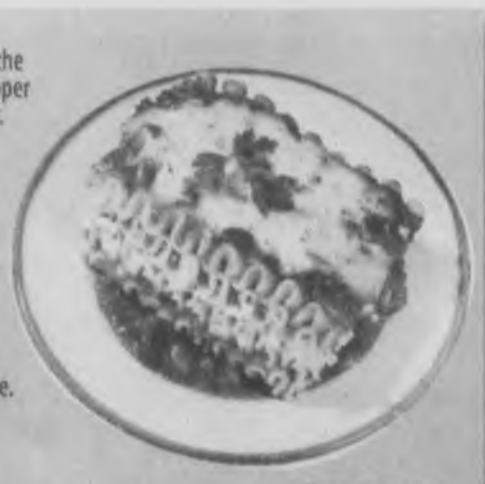
This lasagna can even be prepared in the morning and left uncooked in the refrigerator until evening. Just put the pan in a pre-heated oven for an easy supper.

Imagine that piping-hot, saucy lasagna, dripping in cheese. Don't bite in just yet, though. Allow it to cool slightly before serving with a side of garlic bread.

Leftovers can be refrigerated or frozen, and reheated for a quick meal later.

Worth the time recipe

Lasagna:



1 pound of ground beef
2 (6 oz.) cans of tomato paste
1 ½ cups of hot water
1 ½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
1 package (dry) of spaghetti sauce mix
1 pint (2 cups) of cottage cheese
2 eggs
1 pound of mozzarella cheese
¼ cup of Parmesan cheese
Lasagna noodles, boiled or the no-cook noodles may be used

Brown the ground beef. Mix the tomato paste, hot water, salt, pepper and spaghetti sauce mix together. Combine with the ground beef.

Beat eggs and mix with the cottage cheese.

In a 9-inch-by-13-inch pan, layer half of the noodles, half of the meat sauce, all of the cottage cheese mixture, and half of the mozzarella cheese. Add the rest of the noodles, the meat sauce and mozzarella cheese. Top with the Parmesan cheese.

Bake at 350 degrees for 35 minutes.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius: Jan. 21 - Feb. 18
A financial matter could be settled while the moon is full in your Pisces house of assets and values. It might not seem like a big deal, but if you feel overwhelmed, simply go with the flow.

Pisces: Feb. 19 - March 19
It is said faith can move mountains; can it also remove the emotional garbage piling up around you during the Pisces full moon? If you feel your emotions are confusing at other times of the year, imagine what sort of crap can overwhelm you this weekend.

Aries: March 20 - April 19
A down-to-earth mindset could compete with your ambitious intentions as pragmatic Mercury and your Mars ruler favorably align this weekend. Do the work, make the effort, collect the reward.

Taurus: April 20 - May 20
Get your head into the game. Having athletic Mars in your sign doesn't automatically make you a better physical specimen, but it can provide more energy, sharper focus and a stronger competitive spirit than you usually admit to.

Gemini: May 21 - June 20
Digging up dirt about a potential or past partnership arrangement could take on a greater importance than it actually warrants. Try to maintain a fair and balanced Libran frame of mind.

Cancer: June 21 - July 22
To a Moon Child, each full moon signifies something crucial is about to be resolved. This weekend's harvest moon promises a period of rewards and a sense of fulfillment not usually found in the course of the year.

Leo: July 23 - Aug. 22
Whether you're seeing the forest or the trees this weekend depends on what the Virgo-Pisces full moon reveals about your financial status. Virgo focuses on the specifics; Pisces scans the big picture. Between them, something pertinent to a money matter should emerge.

Virgo: Aug. 23 - Sept. 22
The last days of summer (autumn begins on the 22nd) are far from the hazy, lazy days of song. While Mars and Mercury form a constructive bond, you're likely to be busier than you've been.

Libra: Sept. 23 - Oct. 22
While you'd like to play by the book and earn brownie points from the establishment this weekend, the rebel in you is bursting at the seams, eager to break some rules and have fun in the process.

Scorpio: Oct. 23 - Nov. 21
Scorpions don't often get permission from the cosmos to play or make love to the full extent of your desire. This weekend, the Pisces full moon in your house of pure joy and creativity encourages you to open your heart.

Sagittarius: Nov. 22 - Dec. 21
They may not be easily recognizable, but when your optimistic Jupiter ruler lends its support to Pluto in your sign, the benefits shouldn't be taken for granted. If there is a group you identify with who can do you some good or with whom you can do some good, get in touch.

Capricorn: Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Every full moon brings tears, sometimes of joy, more often of pain, fear or confusion. It's the best time to release tensions that have built up since the new moon, to clear your mind for the resolutions to come.

City considers indoor recreation, aquatics center

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan is taking the first steps to providing local residents with an indoor recreation and aquatic facility.

The facility has the potential to include an indoor pool, meeting rooms, classrooms and gymnasiums, said Terry DeWeese, director of Parks and Recreations with the City of Manhattan.

Citizens have been voicing the need for a family indoor recreation and aquatic center for many years, DeWeese said.

"I've been here since '85, and we've heard it periodically since I've been here," he said.

The most recent push for a center was started at the 2004 Chamber of Commerce retreat, where the need for an indoor recreation facility was identified as one of the top three Manhattan community needs.

Since then, community members have been encouraged to offer their opinions and advice on the matter.

Task forces, public meetings and surveys have all been used to gather the opinion of the community about what to include in the facility and where it should be located.

"Well before the summer we had been hearing, 'we need more gym space,'" Ivan Wilkinson, superintendent for Parks and Recreation, said.

Currently, the city has hired a consulting firm, RDG Planning and Design out of Kansas City, Mo., to help analyze a site, determine construction and operating costs and come up with a preliminary design.

In order to hear more of what the public wants in the recreation facility, the City of Manhattan will have a series of public meetings at different locations in Manhattan.

Along with the meeting, suggestions may be submitted to the city through its Web site, www.ci.manhattan.ks.us.

"It's very important for the community to come and be heard," Wilkinson said. "It's a public process, and in any public process you need the public to come out."

If you go

What: City of Manhattan meetings concerning indoor recreation and aquatic facility
When/Where: 7 p.m., Oct. 4, Chamber of Commerce board room
7 p.m., Oct. 5, Senior Center
7 p.m., Oct. 6, City Hall, city commission room
What: A chance for local citizens to voice their opinion on the possibility of a facility

Students paired to learn culture, language

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At times, it can be hard for a student from China to adjust to life in the United States. Coming from a different culture and speaking a different language, they may feel like outcasts.

Meanwhile, there are many college students hoping to learn more about East Asian culture and language.

Wednesday night, the K-State Department of Modern Languages tried to help both groups with the first Chinese Language Partnership Party.

The party was an opportunity for Chinese language students to meet students from China, practice what they have been learning in class and find out more about Chinese culture.

Wei Wu, modern languages instructor, was the driving force behind the event. This is Wu's first semester at K-State, and she was brought here to start and organize K-State's East Asian minor program.

"She brings a lot of energy and enthusiasm with her," Robert Corum, head of the modern language department, said.

Wu was able to come to K-State thanks to a $160,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

"Students will be able to minor in East Asian Studies and that minor will help them find employment," Kenneth Holland, associate provost of international programs, said. "So many companies in the U.S. do business with China and Japan."

K-State has been offering students classes in Chinese language for the past three years, but it was never taught by a K-State faculty member.

"Three years ago we realized there was a need to study Chinese because of the growth of China," Corum said.

After beginning the semester, Wu decided she wanted to have an event to group students learning Chinese with students from China, and the partnership party was started.

The event started out with Chinese food catered by Panda Express. After the meal, American and Chinese students mingled by playing an ice breaker game.

After the game, Corum spoke, followed by David Graff, associate professor in history.

Graff is set to be the new director of the East Asia minor program, after it is reviewed by the Kansas Board of Regents today.

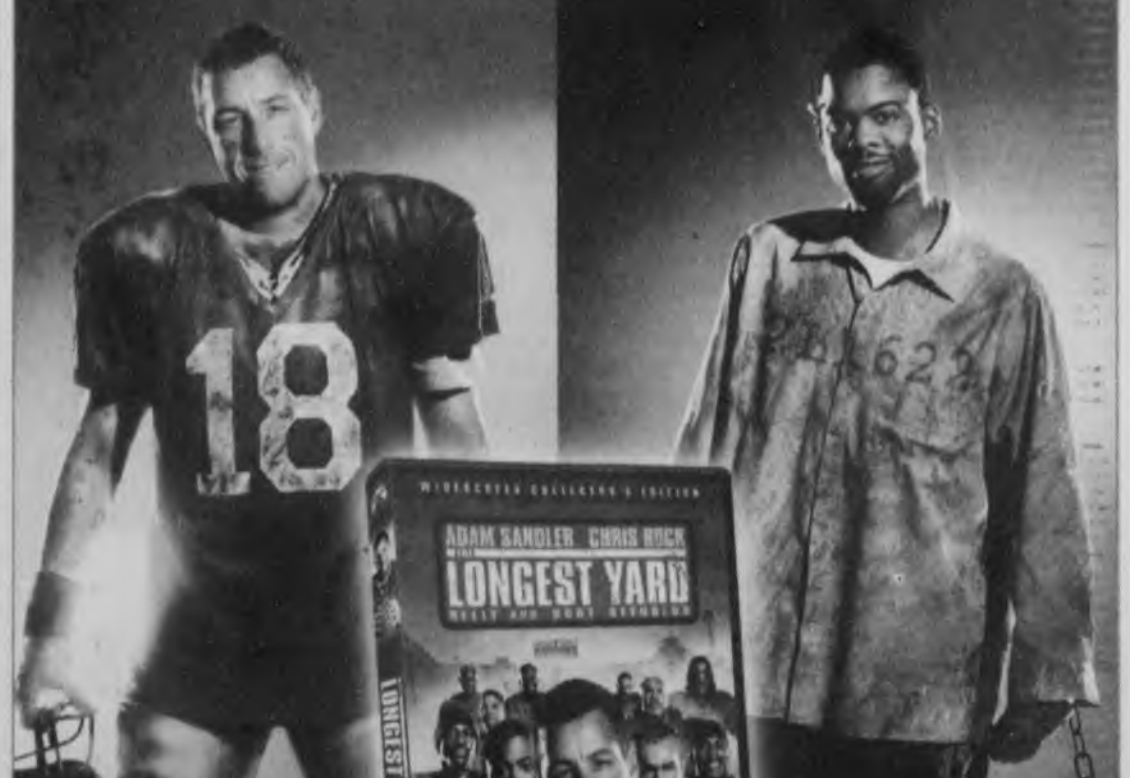
Graff said the whole program would not be possible without the grant from the Department of Education.

"The grant was their way of priming the pump," he said.

After the presentations, students played another game, pairing a Chinese student with an American, with one trying to guess a word from hints given by their partner.

Then, the students had to recite the word in Chinese.

Along with helping students learn Chinese, the event helped to make Chinese students feel more at home at K-State and perfect their English skills.



"We learn in the home for 10 years, and then we go to study abroad, and we can't speak one word. We don't practice enough," Wei Han, a graduate student in biological and agricultural engineering, said.

Ethanol helps ease gas prices

University vehicles utilize alternative fuels

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It can be made from corn, grass or manure and may extend the life of an engine.

It's ethanol – an alcohol-based fuel produced by fermenting plant sugars.

University Motor Pool, which leases vehicles to university departments for the transportation of employees and students, uses ethanol in about 40 percent of its 950 registered vehicles to alleviate gas cost.

The recent spike in gas prices has led Motor Pool Director David Gronquist to consider purchasing more vehicles that burn E85.

"If they let us go out and buy new vehicles, that is what I am going to look at," he said.

E85 is a blend of 85 percent ethanol fuel and 15 percent gasoline and usually costs 15-25 cents less than regular unleaded, said Chris Walton, dispatcher for Capital City Oil, Topeka.

Walton said to burn E85, vehicles must have a flexible fuel engine.

According to www.iowacorn.org, flexible fuel vehicles can burn anything from 100 percent unleaded to 85 percent ethanol fuel and they cost about the same as a gasoline-only vehicle.

E10 is another blend with 10 percent ethanol and 90 percent gasoline. All vehicles can burn E10, Walton said.

"A lot of people use it and don't know about it," he said.

Walton said a Kansas law passed in June allows gas stations to sell E10 fuel without posting it, so it could be listed as regular unleaded gas.

"Some gas stations are using it to lower prices and compete with other stations," he said.

Although E10 is not 100 percent gasoline, Walton said it costs more than regular unleaded fuel at Capital City Oil.

Tuesday E10 was $2.61 a gallon, unleaded was $2.59 a gallon and E85 was $2.54 a gallon.

"Those prices have increased along with gasoline since Hurricane Katrina," Walton said.

Besides the benefits of being cheaper, Walton said it is also better for an engine.

"The ethanol knocks up the octane in gas which is better for the engine," he said. "It runs like premium gasoline."

Fast facts

Ethanol

- A 10 percent ethanol-blended fuel is warranted for use by all auto manufacturers marketing vehicles in the United States.
- Many auto manufacturers, including General Motors and Chrysler, recommend the use of oxygenated fuels, such as ethanol, in their vehicles.
- Ethanol guards against gas line freeze by absorbing moisture that may get in the tank during cold weather.
- Ethanol is a proven octane enhancer and replacement for lead and other toxic compounds in gasoline.
- The blending of 10 percent ethanol boosts the octane rating of gasoline by an average of three points.

Illness exposure increases in community living areas

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students are exposed to more illness and infection when they move to college, and this is especially true for those dwelling in community-living environments.

Megan Stewart, junior in elementary education, said she didn't get sick more often from living in the residence halls. However, she heard of numerous other students who caught colds more frequently.

Vivian Nutsch, infection control coordinator at Mercy Health Center, said she sees students come in through the emergency room with various problems.

"Infected bug bites, skin rashes, nausea, diarrhea, alcohol poisoning, some drug overdoses and STDs are things that come through the ER," she said. "[They are] not in any kind of order, but we do see those things."

More commonly, Nutsch said that they see several upper respiratory infections.

"The symptoms for a respiratory infection are coughing, shortness of breath and fever," she said.

One health problem that can affect students who live in residence halls is meningitis. Nutsch said the symptoms for meningitis are fever, stiff neck and muscle ache.

"These symptoms can mean meningitis or simply the flu," she said.

Nutsch said the hospital sees both viral and bacterial meningitis. Between these two, the symptoms are incredibly similar, she said.

"Students should be aware of them," she said. "However, you can't tell the difference between viral and bacterial meningitis because they have the same symptoms."

When patients do have meningitis, they are kept in the hospital for an amount of time determined by the severity of their problem, Nutsch said.

"They generally need an antibiotic for 10 days, and from then, it is a very individual thing," she said. "Some people are healthier and can get over it very quickly. Others are different."

Nutsch noted meningitis is much easier to catch in residence halls because of the communal living, as students are constantly in close quarters with other students. Lafene Health Center offers a meningitis vaccination for $95.

Many symptoms require immediate medical attention. Nutsch said nausea, vomiting and/or diarrhea for more than eight to 10 days are signs to seek health care.

"Fever over 100.5 degrees for over 24 hours is a symptom that requires health care consideration," she said.

A burning or frequent urge to urinate, or any type of pain in the genital area has the possibility of being a urinary tract infection or STD and should be evaluated at a health care facility, Nutsch said.

There is also mono, short for mononucleosis, which Nutsch said is extremely common for college students.

"The symptoms for mono are sore throat, extreme fatigue and fever. The only way to determine whether or not you have mono is to take a blood test," she said.

The rate at which someone catches colds or even serious infections is different for each person, Nutsch said. She said there is one simple way to stay generally healthy.

"Washing your hands is the very best way to prevent any type of infection," she said.

Although some students encounter serious problems living in the residence halls, others notice no change at all in their well-being. Alicia Casey, junior in chemistry, said she doesn't recall having any problems catching colds more frequently when she lived in the residence halls.

"It seems like as long as you don't go lick the toilet seat you should be okay," she said.

Fast facts

Common ailments

■ Common cold

Symptoms: Ache and fatigue

Problems if not treated: Can morph into bronchitis, pneumonia and sinusitis as your system is weakened. The less sleep you get, the more susceptible you are.

Remedy: Antibiotics are ineffective, and the cold usually just needs to run its course, which is usually 7-10 days.

Best remedy: Chicken noodle soup and sleep.

■ Strep throat

Symptoms: Sore throat and fever, swollen glands in the neck, although sometimes a person can have strep throat and never know it.

Problems if not treated: Is highly contagious.

Remedy: Can be cured with antibiotics. Recommend throat lozenges, warm salt water gargles and humidity.

■ Flu

Symptoms: Muscle ache, weakness, fatigue, upset stomach, runny nose, vomiting, diarrhea and a headache.

Problems if not treated: Is highly contagious, can take down entire residence hall in one weekend.

Remedy: Can be fought with anti-viral medications and vaccinations.

■ Mononucleosis

Symptoms: Fever, swollen glands, sore throat and fatigue. Symptoms usually show up four to six weeks after contact with the virus.

Problems if not treated: No kissing. Mono is transmitted through saliva, which is why it is often referred to as the "kissing disease." Mono is most prevalent in high school and college students.

Remedy: After being officially diagnosed with a blood test, there is little a person can do. Just rest and eat healthy, most people are well within a month. The good news is once a person has had mono, they usually won't get it again.

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.
We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.
We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.
Talk about a radical way to live.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

Poyntz may become wider

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the undergoing downtown redevelopment, the city is bound to see many changes.

Robert Ott, Manhattan city engineer, said one of the major changes is with road construction.

Downtown Manhattan Inc. submitted a proposal to change the congested roads and ill-structured parking spots in the downtown area of Poyntz Avenue, Ott said.

This week, city engineers started conducting a study on Poyntz Avenue, determining what changes need to be made to the area.

If the study goes as Ott expects, the downtown area can look forward to the four-lane road changing to two lanes. There is also a possibility of adding at least 32 more parking spots to the existing 118.

Meri Werner, owner of Appleseed Art and Frame, 423 Poyntz Ave., said she thinks reconstructing parking is important.

"One of the problems down here is that there is not enough parking," she said. "If they straighten the parking more, we'd at least have more spots."

The extra spots are a hope of Werner's. She said the newer spots could draw more businesses to the downtown area.

However, the city will not know of the possibility of the conversion until the study is finally assessed. Intersections at Poyntz Avenue and Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Streets are the focus of the study.

"We literally have an individual at each intersection and they will count how many people turn left or right at each intersection," Ott said.

Then, city engineers, would be able to compare the traffic flow data with other cities, allowing engineers to predict whether making major road lane change is in Manhattan's best interest.

Ott said he was most concerned with existing problems on Poyntz Avenue.

"Right now, existing parking stalls are sitting at 30 degree angles, and some of the widths vary between nine and 11 feet," he said. "They all vary too much. It's bad."

Once the study is completed, Ott said there is a possibility to extend the road width to 18 feet for drivers. He said, although the newer street width seems rather wide, it is the most appropriate change.

"This will also allow us to widen sidewalks, so pedestrians spend less time walking on the street."

Werner thought the road construction was a positive alternative for the downtown area.

"This is one of our best options in comparison to the downtown redevelopment," she said.

City considers compensation

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those forced to move due to downtown redevelopment, the city wants to monetarily compensate those displaced persons.

While a compensation plan has yet to be adopted, it was decided on at the Sept. 13 City Commission meeting as an appropriate monetary parameter for relocation for those property owners, residential districts and businesses targeted by redevelopment, Mayor pro tem Bruce Snead said.

"It's based on a potential need to use it," Snead said.

Those affected have one of two options if the tax increment financing district tax is adopted.

"By statute, we must have a redevelopment plan," Jason Hilgers, assistant city manager, said. "It consists of feasibility studies, a detailed project plan and relocation plan."

First, Dial Realty – the developer Manhattan has hired to head the task – will try and purchase the desired property from the owners. If that fails, then the city acquires the property and the plan goes into effect, Hilgers said.

At the same time, if Dial purchases property from a property owner who has tenants, the tenants fall under the city's plan.

According to the plan, residential tenants who have resided in their property 90 days before the approval of the redevelopment plan will be granted a referral to comparable housing, a replacement housing payment of $5,000 and dislocation allowance. Tenants who have resided in their property for less than 90 days receive all benefits, except the housing payment of $5,000.

Residential owners or occupants who have owned housing 180 days before the approval of the redevelopment plan will receive a replacement housing payment of $22,000 and dislocation allowance. Owners or occupants who have owned housing less than 180 days receive a dislocation allowance.

Any business occupant who has been working in the project area for a year or more before the approval of the redevelopment plan qualifies for the lower of two estimates to move personal property – a one-time payment of $5,000 or re-establishment cost, depending on the square footage, of $10,000 to $20,000.

Business owners also have the option of submitting verified receipts for moving and re-establishment costs, if they do not believe the $5,000 is sufficient. Businesses choosing not to relocate and not accepting other payments may receive a one-time fixed payment of $10,000.

"This is what we'll do if they (occupants) don't come to an agreement with Dial," Snead said. "The plan is based on a federal law and figures used when Manhattan Town Center was developed."

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

spokesman for a group of his fellow geology students who have relocated to K-State.

"I'm a loud-mouthed one so I got elected by the rest of the students to get up here and talk," he said.

Myers described how the students and his family escaped New Orleans, learned of the destruction of their homes and now have started to put their lives back together. He praised the help his family has received from the community.

"The people in Kansas have been great," he said. "Southern hospitality has moved north. The only thing that's mine that I'm wearing are my boots."

Bob McNair, United Black Voices adviser, said the entire service was powerful, but the story of the Louisiana students affected him the most.

"Those are the most moving for me, when you hear personal testimony," he said.

Once Myers finished, 11 religious leaders led those present in prayer. Each spoke briefly, finishing with "God, in your mercy."

"Hear our prayer," the audience responded 11 times.

After the prayer, United Black Voices President Akeia Rossiter sang the African-American spiritual song, "There is a Balm in Gilead." Fallon said the song was chosen because of "its emphasis on healing."

April Clydesdale, Student Governing Association cabinet member, came after being told about the service by an e-mail from Burns.

"I personally thought it was very moving and touching to have all the faiths in Manhattan join together and remember the victims of Hurricane Katrina," she said.

price, Roberts said.

"People just gave what they could give."

The turnout was much larger than Roberts expected.

"It's amazing what you can make off people's junk."

Dix Edition resident and Manhattan High School student Dionna Clark, said she was impressed with the overall turnout.

"Some people weren't so receptive, but it turned out great," she said. "I was completely astonished."

Residents in Dix Edition experienced heavy flooding in their neighborhood back in 1993.

"Everybody out here had water-damage, lost their homes or something," she said. "If anyone can understand the Katrina disaster, it's these people."

People in the area remembered that part of their past, so they wanted to help, she said.

"Besides, you can't get away from it, when you're watching television and all," Robert said. "If you turn away, something is wrong with you."

The generosity of the Dix Edition neighbors is what keeps Lantz going while he organizes many parts of Katrina and local relief efforts, he said.

"Today, the Flint Hills American Red Cross has collected nearly $100,000," Lantz said.

For students wanting to help with the relief effort, Lantz outlined a few possible options.

Students can volunteer. Throughout the year, the American Red Cross organizes several workshops and training for relief efforts such as Katrina. Lantz said, however, not to be distracted by national disasters.

While Katrina victims do need support, Lantz said local families are always the concern of the local Red Cross.

"With tragedies like this, it just affects people," she said. "We help out. That's why we're America. You really don't know what your community is like until you have stuff like this happen. Even the men came down – I never had to ask for help, they just came."

Roberts said the reality of the situation was too harsh to ignore.

"These people have no job, no money, no car, nothing," she said. "Most are without families. We need to give back to them."

making the switch was deciding what needed to be changed while making the card distinctive. A new design was chosen in May and the Student ID Center received new card stock two weeks ago.

The first distribution will be to faculty and staff on Nov. 14.

Their new cards will be effective Jan. 2. Johnson said the cards will be printed in a couple weeks and will serve as a test run before student cards are distributed.

Student cards are tentatively set for release in late April, though they will not be valid until May 22 when the 16-digit ISO numbers will be issued.

Students said the switch to new cards might be challenging.

"It's going to become a hassle to replace all the student IDs," Miguel Perez, sophomore in modern language, said. "Students are going to have to deal with having to remember that their new IDs aren't going to be the same as they have been for the past few years."

However, Johnson said moving from the old to the new should be relatively simple.

"It should be a seamless transition," he said, "and there's no cost to students, faculty or staff for the new cards."

A seamless transition means accounts on current cards, like Cat Cash balances, will be automatically transferred to the new ID cards. Smart chips will also be on the new cards.

It also means that students will be able to pick up their updated IDs in April at the Union without paying fees for the new cards.

Students need only bring their old ID cards to claim their new ones. They can then either keep or throw away old ID cards.

Photographs on the new IDs can be the same as the old ID photographs, but students have the option to retake the photograph before the new cards come out.

COLUMN | NCAA should leave decisions to schools

by the Aggies of Texas A&M and New Mexico State.

That's just the tip of the iceberg. Someone's going to want to protect all the furry, four-legged mascots, too – ranging from Wildcats, Badgers and Buffaloes to Lions, Tigers and Bears. Oh, my.

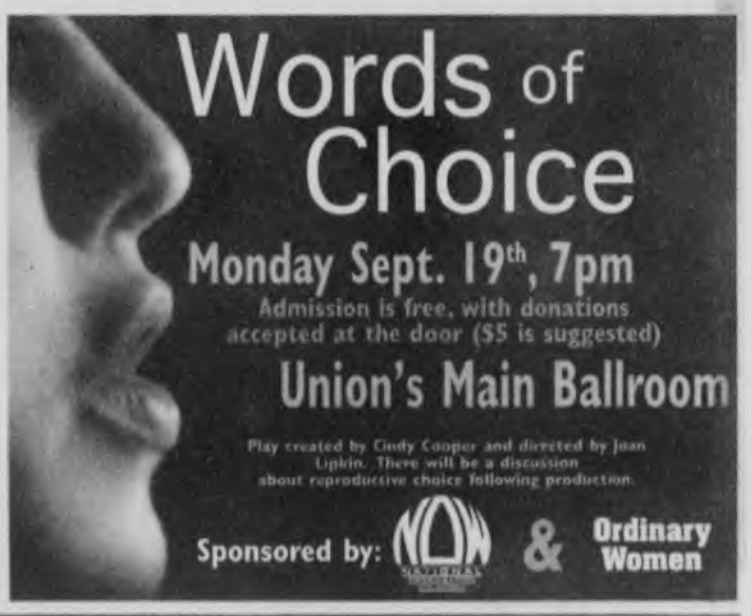
What about religious groups offended by Blue Devils or Demon Deacons? Or nonreligious groups and the use of Saints and Friars. There's potential for offensiveness everywhere.

You name it, Scots, Runnin' Rebels, Banana Slugs (the ferocious symbol of the University of California, Santa Cruz). The list goes on and on.

And what's the deal with classifying a mascot as "hostile or abusive." I don't know about you, but I kind of prefer my mascots a little hostile and abusive. There's a reason K-State is the Wildcats and not the alternative.

Maybe Florida Governor Jeb Bush summed the situation up best when he supported keeping the Seminole as the Florida State mascot.

"How politically correct can we get?" Bush said. "The folks that make these decisions need to get out more often."



His sentiments may be a little extreme, but that can only be expected when you come between people and their mascots.

Next time, NCAA, leave the mascot decisions to the schools and groups they affect. Your time could probably be better spent wrecking other aspects of college sports. Shouldn't college basketball have a BCS, too?

MP3 players can lead to permanent hearing loss

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The box of an MP3 player is covered with information from battery life to the amount of storage on the device. The information fails to state that the device may cause permanent hearing loss.

"MP3 players' users blasting loud music for long amounts of time can cause permanent hearing loss," Cornell Cheung, a Manhattan audiologist, said.

Batteries in MP3 players allow for longer use than previous portable music products and new technology has amplified the sound it can produce. Put these two factors together and MP3 players allow for longer listening at louder volumes, making exposure to dangerous levels more likely.

But, companies producing MP3 players could be liable for the damage their product causes if they don't alert consumers to the dangers in using the product. Although there has not been a case involving MP3 players and hearing loss, William Westerbeke, professor of law at the University of Kansas Law School, said all manufacturers have a legal duty to the consumer when their product could cause harm.

"The manufacturer has a duty to provide a warning that is obvious to the user," Westerbeke said. "The duty is to not hide it. The warning has to be seen and understood."

Neither Apple's iPod nor Sony's Hi-MD Walkman puts a warning label on the exterior of the box, although Sony's box contains instructions on how to open the box to avoid danger. If either of these products contain a warning inside, some consumers said they are not made aware of the danger before purchasing the player.

"I sure didn't see any warning. If I would have, I wouldn't have bought it," Montreal Devine, junior in radio and television, said.

Devine purchased his MP3 player last Christmas and has been listening to it almost nonstop for nearly 10 months. He listens to music about 16 hours a day, seven days a week.

"I didn't know using it could cause hearing loss," Devine said. "That's messed up."

If Devine has damaged his hearing, it's doubtful he would have noticed any signs.

"The bad thing about hearing loss is that doesn't happen the next morning. It happens 10 to 20 years later," Cheung said. "We see 40- and 50-year-olds that have hearing loss that we see much earlier than the normal aging process of 60 or 70 (years old)."

Many products in the United States are required to have warnings on the box to alert consumers before purchasing the product. Warnings such as surgeon general's warnings on cigarettes or a warning on how to open the MP3 player's box are two basic examples.

"I didn't see a warning that was bold and in your face, like a surgeon general's warning," said Adrienne Carraway, junior in broadcast journalism and political science.

Carraway said she is aware that listening to MP3 players for long amounts of time can result in hearing loss.

"I read about hearing loss at concerts in some magazine and I figured it was the same with MP3 players," she said, "but I run five to six miles a day and listening to music helps, so I keep my music fairly loud," she said.

European countries like France passed laws requiring MP3 companies to limit the volume on the devices to 100 decibels. But limiting the volume will not necessarily protect consumers from hearing loss, Cheung said. When determining whether a person is at risk for hearing loss, the level of noise is considered, but also the length of exposure.

Police arrest Fort Riley soldier

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man was arrested Wednesday in connection with an attempted rape last month.

Matthew Huntwork, Fort Riley, Kan., was arrested Wednesday afternoon for attempted rape, a press release from the Riley County Police Department said.

RCPD Captain Gary Grubbs said the alleged incident happened Aug. 28 in north-central Manhattan.

The release said he was known by the victim of the alleged crime, and the suspect was in the victim's residence with her permission at the time of the incident.

The release said he is attached to the 300th MP Company in Fort Riley.

Assistant Riley County Attorney Bryant Barton said Huntwork would face a prison sentence between 38 and 247 months if found guilty. The trial date was not set by Thursday afternoon.

Bond was set at $15,000.

After weeks of anticipation, Student Senate inducted 25 Student Senate interns into the governing body Thursday night.

To become a senate intern, interested students submitted an application, attend special meetings and had a final interview.

Lydia Peele, senate intern coordinator, said 68 students applied for positions, 46 were interviewed and 25 were accepted.

Madison Loeb, new senate intern and freshman in political science, said she was glad the process is over.

"I found out about it from a sorority sister of mine," she said. "It really grabbed my attention because I'm a political science major and it's something I'm interested in."

"It was a slightly intimidating process," Loeb said. "But since I didn't know how many people applied, I didn't feel as scared."

Constitution Day aims to educate students with quizzes, displays

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students at K-State will celebrate Constitution Day today.

K-State's first Constitution Day, sponsored by the Union Program Council, the Office of Student Life and the Office of the Provost, will feature a U.S. Constitution quiz, table displays and a panel discussion from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the K-State Student Union.

A 10-question quiz testing students' knowledge of the Constitution will be given from 10 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Union Food Court. Students who answer at least seven questions correctly will receive a pocket book containing 32 important historical documents, including the Constitution, the Mayflower Compact, George Washington's Inaugural Address and Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech.

"We'd encourage people to come test their Constitution knowledge and win a prize," Ben Hopper, program adviser for UPC, said.

A film titled "Free Speech in the Digital Age" will be shown at 12:30 p.m. in Forum Hall. This broadcast is provided by National Public Radio, the Annenberg Public Policy Center, the National Archives and Records Administration and the New York Times Network.

"We wanted something that would appeal to college students, something that they would find interesting and could relate to on a higher level," Hopper said.

"Freedom, Equality and the New Supreme Court," a live panel discussion, will take place at 1:30 p.m. in Forum Hall. The four-person panel will feature John Fliter, associate professor of political science; Todd Simon, professor of journalism and mass communication; and Lou Williams, associate professor of history. Manhattan attorney Sheila Hochhauser will also join the discussion.

"With two vacancies on the Supreme Court, I don't think their topic could be more relevant," Al Cochran, assistant provost, said. "Hopefully it will make for an interesting discussion."

Constitution Day began in December 2004, when Senator Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who is also the unofficial Constitutional scholar of Congress, proposed an amendment calling for a holiday that would increase Constitutional knowledge among primary, secondary and post-secondary students.

A Notice of Implementation was released by the U.S. Department of Education on May 24.

"The way we look at it, obviously, as a state university, we are required to do this," Heather Reed, assistant dean of

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Executives return cash

Two former Westar Energy Inc. executives found guilty of looting the company were ordered to hand over cash and assets Thursday. David Witting was told to give up his Topeka home, thousands of shares of stocks, a split-dollar life insurance policy and $9.7 million. Douglas Lake was ordered to turn over $2.5 million in stock dividends and sales as well as stock shares.

Neighborhoods reopen

The mayor of New Orleans announced plans Thursday to reopen over the next week-and-a-half some of the city's neighborhoods, including the once-rollicking French Quarter. The move could bring back more than 180,000 of the city's original half-million residents and speed the revival of its economy.

Bubonic mice disappear

Three mice infected with the bacteria responsible for bubonic plague apparently disappeared from a laboratory in Newark, N.J., about two weeks ago, and authorities launched a search though health experts said there was scant public risk. Among other things, the rodents may have been stolen, eaten by other lab animals or just misplaced in a paperwork error.

DON'T FORGET

The 19th Annual OPUS Competition will begin at 5:30 tonight in the Bosco Plaza.

The Texas Hold 'Em Poker Tournament will begin at 7 tonight in the Main and West Ballroom in the K-State Student Union.

The Constitution Day Celebration will be today, beginning with a Constitution Quiz from 10 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the K-State Student Union Food Court, a film at 12:30 p.m. in Forum Hall, and a panel discussion at 1:30 p.m. in Forum Hall.

'Choking game' kills students, raises concerns in schools

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fifteen-year-old Kimberly Wilson was found dead in her room with a bicycle chain around her neck last month. Her parents said she died playing "the pass-out game," also called "the choking game."

Kimberly was a student at Veritas Christian School in Lawrence.

Her parents have begun to voice the details surrounding her death, as they want to inform other parents of this scary new game.

Around the nation, the "choking game" has claimed the lives of four children so far, ranging in ages 10 to 15. Many experts agree this age group would have a harder time finding actual drugs and are experimenting with this alternative as a result.

The fad usually involves two or more people, causing each other to pass out using belts, chains or even hands around the neck. After a few seconds of unconsciousness, one person will revive the other.

Teenagers are playing this game because they accomplish a slight buzz when the oxygen supply to the brain is cut off.

And just like a drug, it becomes addictive.

When played solo, the game is deadly.

Kimberly's parents said without their knowledge, she had played the pass-out game for a year or two.

Jeff Barclay, administrator of Veritas Christian School, said the students were shocked by the context of her death.

"This behavior is really not going on in our school," he said. "The police actually tracked Kimberly's behavior as something she learned from a student of another community."

A month previous to Kimberly's death, a 10-year-old boy from Idaho was found dead in the same manner. He was hanging from a tree when found, apparently attempting to achieve that same high.

"I haven't even heard of this," Kevin Pelzel, senior in psychology, said. "I could almost see how doing this in groups would be to get attention. But doing it alone?"

Barclay said the game was used to increase attention.

"We're keeping our eyes open," he said. We also have counselors available at all times, and send e-mails to parents if an issue arises."

Robert Seymour, associate superintendent of Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said they haven't really seen the problem here.

"Everyone is alert and aware of this," he said. "If we hear about an issue, we can counsel and discipline if necessary."

Psychologists are recommending that parents educate their children of this dangerous fad, just as they would about alcohol and drugs.

Free heart screening clinic honors late K-State athlete, prevents future problems

The fifth annual free cardiac screening day in memory of Anthony Bates will be Sunday at the K-State Alumni Center.

Anthony Bates was a K-State football player who died suddenly of undiagnosed hypertrophic cardiomyopathy in 2000 at age 20. The Anthony Bates Foundation, the event's organizer, was founded in 2002 and is dedicated to detecting HCM to save young people's lives through free screenings.

Sharon Bates, Anthony Bates' mother and Phoenix resident, said her son only had occasional symptoms of dizziness in high school. He had no family history of heart problems or other warning signs of HCM.

More than 2,400 young people have been screened and more than 170 people have had heart problems discovered.

According to the American Heart Association, cardiovascular disease is the number four killer of people aged 15-24.

Thirty-six percent of young athletes who die suddenly have probable or definite HCM.

Sharon Bates said echocardiograms and electrocardiogram tests will be available at the screening.

Echocardiograms are sonograms of the heart and measure the functional structure of the heart.

"Sometimes an enlarged heart is a sign of high blood pressure, which is also something people should be concerned about at a young age," Sharon Bates said.

More than 100 volunteers will be at the screening, including people from Mercy Regional Health Center, Alpha Kappa Psi, Retired and Senior Volunteer Program, and Manhattan Medical Associates' cardiologist Dr. James Arturtig.

Bobbie Hamm, senior cardiovascular sonographer with Mercy Regional Health Center, will help administer the testing.

Hamm said it is important for students to be tested since those with HCM show no symptoms.

"It is especially important for athletes to be tested because there is nothing to let you know you have the problem, and it could be life-threatening," she said.

Bates said it is through the Foundation and heart screenings that Anthony Bates' legacy lives on.

"It's a great opportunity to keep my son's spirit alive," she said.

TO THE POINT

'Choking game' signs obvious on teenagers

Children are dying after choking themselves for fun. What would Darwin say?

More importantly, why aren't parents and administrators saying anything? The bruises and lacerations that would result from being choked would be slightly difficult to disguise.

If students have been playing the "choking game" for a "year or two" then there is little excuse for not noticing erratic behavior in children. Erratic behavior could include such things as acting like someone whose brain is oxygen-starved.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

If conversations include things like, "Gee, honey, you sure are behaving like a lobotomy patient," then why aren't red flags going up?

Additionally, an administrator claiming that "this behavior is really not going on in our school" following the death of one of his students is a bizarre statement to make.

It only takes one occurrence to prove something is "going on." If this is as widespread as some are saying, now is not the time for buck-passing.

What we need is responsibility. And blaming the "choking game" on boredom is hardly a solution. Magically, many people made it through adolescence without throat trauma by doing such radical activities as watching TV, playing a game, exploring outside or, God forbid, reading a book.

Words of choice important for all women

RACHEL THOMPSON

At 7 p.m. Monday, Sept. 19, the play "Words of Choice" will be performed in the Union Ballroom. Why is this important? What does this have to do with you? Kansas is a conservative state with a hefty majority of anti-choice residents.

But this play addresses much more than abortion, it addresses an entire range of reproductive freedom. And the circumstances that brought the play to Kansas – the invasion of the privacy of medical records – influence everyone's lives.

"Words of Choice" is a collection of stories, presented as monologues, including a father's view of his daughter's rape, an anti-abortion protester, a contraception burrito, one woman's wanted pregnancy, old-wives' tales from the South, the true nature of abstinence-only education and emergency contraceptive, among others.

After the play, there will be an Education Forum on Reproductive Choice with a range of panelists, including a feminist, a pastor, a doctor and a political scientist, as well as the play's creator, Cindy Cooper.

It seems that many people avoid open discussion concerning curiosity and facts about sex, pregnancy and a number of related topics. I don't understand why. It make senses that a person informed about sex can prevent pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease, while the uninformed can discover by accident that sex produces babies. Knowledge is a powerful influence on actions and ignorance can have many repercussions.

This play is a chance to initiate dialogue and raise awareness of rights that affect every woman, not just views concerning abortion. Dealing with rape, domestic abuse, and many other issues apply to all women regardless of who they are. A rapist does not discriminate based on beliefs, opinions or religions, and both women and men need to say that rape is not acceptable.

But, what brought this controversial play to the heartland?

The group decided to perform in Kansas because of the actions of Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline. The Attorney General has served subpoenas for the medical records of 90 women from two Kansas reproductive health centers.

This invasion of privacy has prompted the play to enter into the conservative Midwest. The threat of having personal medical records open by those who are not doctors have bad consequences for everyone. If people think their medical history may not be kept confidential, they may not trust doctors and may withhold important information.

The doctor-patient privilege needs to be upheld. Doctors and teachers are required to report any evidence of child abuse, which they should, but having to report things like a girl kissing her boyfriend is absurd.

"Words of Choice" has come to K-State wanting to create dialogue and to make a statement against the invasion of privacy Phill Kline has made. By attempting to raise awareness, this play is a wonderful, free way to talk about women's rights and privacy.

Having financial help isn't bad; just don't abuse it

ADDIE LAUE

I am a senior this year, and am lucky enough to have had my parents' help throughout school. They have always been there when I needed advice, home-cooked food, and yes ... books, tuition payments and living expenses. But hold on, before you call the Fourum, let me elaborate.

Although I have had help with school bills, I have never had a credit card, especially one my parents pay for. Not even a "just for emergencies" credit card.

When my parents help me through school, it is with the understanding that I am working hard and making something of myself. And the second I stop, so do they.

I am not saying there is necessarily anything wrong with having a credit card, even one that parents pay for. I just know that if I racked up a bar bill or charged a Louis Vuitton and sent the bill to my dad, I would be lucky if all he did was laugh in my face and tell me I better go get another job.

It is obvious that this could be hard for students who work multiple jobs to put themselves through school to take. My mom put herself through school that way, and I think she still wonders, sometimes, if I understand the gift I am being given.

The bottom line is that it is not fair. It is not fair that some students have all bills paid and an unlimited credit card while others work every spare minute to make ends meet, and there are a lot of situations in between, like mine. It will never be fair, but there are benefits to every situation.

I'll be the first to admit that sometimes I wish I had a credit card for that one pair of shoes or expensive handbag, but I don't, and that is the way it is.

Maybe some of the students who have credit cards from their parents will find it hard someday to budget their own money, or to live within their means. Or maybe not.

Maybe the students who worked and paid to put themselves through school will have a sense of accomplishment that the rest of us will never know. Or maybe some will just feel like it sucked, like there were no benefits.

We can't change the families we were born into, their different views or our current financial situations.

So the best thing we can do is try to make the best of it.

If you are fortunate enough to have spare time or money, you should study harder or get involved with something that will improve yourself or benefit someone else.

If you have to work all the time, try to remember that you are doing something that will benefit you for the rest of your life.

But whatever we do, we need to stop assuming we know someone because we know their financial situation.

Addie is a senior in print journalism. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

To the parking services guy who didn't give me a ticket on my birthday Tuesday, you are a god.

So do you have a big truck to compensate for something that doesn't size up? Sorry, but you walked right into that one.

I love a boy very much. I think that he also loves me but he doesn't. I can't live without him. So what shall I do to make him fall in love with me?

You know what they say, for every hour in studio you want to shoot yourself.

My roommate's boyfriend just said "my face is in the butt." Not going to lie, I feel a little uncomfortable.

I sat in front of a fat chick at the KSU concert last night, and she wouldn't stop talking about how good her boyfriend was at oral sex.

To the guy who passed out on the porch of 1131 Ratone last Thursday night, please come get your keys, they are still there. Hope it was comfortable for you.

Dale Earnhardt had it coming.

Kody Cooper is a tool. A tool of God.

Liquor in the front. Poker in the back.

It's kind of mushy. But you know you're in love with a girl when one dang kiss is worth the hundred fights you've had with her, man. It's awesome.

So is an asshat like tighty-whiteys or what?

My roommate just told me this story about how the clouds, one time, spelled out "pot."

My economics teacher just totally threw a piece of chalk at me.

If K-State pays for my cab ride home through SafeRide, do I have to pay for the tip?

To the guy who just beat me in a race that I didn't know I was racing, congratulations, I hope you feel better.

My friend just dropped trou and peed in the middle of campus. Just so you know.

If England speaks English, and France speaks French, Russia speaks Russian, Spain speaks Spanish, the Greeks spoke Greek, why didn't the Romans speak Romanic?

Fort Riley prepares for more soldiers

By Kyle Lauridsen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For years the prospects of new soldiers at Fort Riley has been discussed in Manhattan and surrounding towns.

Now the influx of troops is imminent.

More than 9,000 soldiers are expected to be stationed at Fort Riley, which will double its current population to approximately 20,000 and affect local communities as well as K-State.

"We have been working with the Lieutenant Governor and higher headquarters to help with housing and to get additional facilities," Linda Hoeffner, civilian deputy garrison commander said.

Hoeffner said the first group of soldiers should be arriving in October, followed by a smaller group in December and a larger group from January to March.

And the move will be permanent.

The growth is due primarily to the federal government's Base Realignment and Closure plan, which will eliminate and consolidate dozens of the nation's military installations.

The government is already preparing additional homes for soldiers and their families. Major growth can be expected in Manhattan and Junction City, as well as the surrounding area.

Many soldiers are also expected to take classes at K-State.

"We have had one of the longest running relationships with the fort," Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said. "We work hard to meet the needs of soldiers and their families."

Soldiers will have the opportunity to participate in evening and online classes. There also will be a support group for military personnel and their family members, Bosco said.

It is unknown how many soldiers will be enrolling in classes at K-State.

"We will have to wait for the soldiers to get here to figure out the education part," Hoeffner said.

The university is already making preparations to develop an appropriate response to deal with the influx of soldiers.

"The opportunity for us to respond is going to be driven by a needs assessment," Bosco said. "We will prepare for academic programs based on needs of the soldiers."

Effects on the current student population will probably be minimal.

"I don't think it will affect us greatly," Cole Kimbro, freshman in architecture, said. "We already have people with all different backgrounds."

Local church choirs to perform Sunday

Habitat for Humanity presents interdenominational service

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students looking for something to do Sunday evening could consider attending "Any Given Sunday," a concert presented by churches from Manhattan and Ogden, Kan.

The local chapter of Habitat for Humanity, a Christian organization that builds homes for those in need, is holding a concert at 7 p.m. Sept. 18 at the band shell in City Park.

In the event of rain, the concert will be moved to the shelter house.

Nine churches from Manhattan and Ogden will each perform one song of their choice, and an ensemble of the choirs will sing a selection from the Habitat for Humanity song book at the conclusion of the concert.

"It's an opportunity for people to sample other congregations' songs," said David Redmon, Manhattan Habitat for Humanity's church relations committee chair.

The Manhattan Habitat for Humanity will also present a video at the opening of the concert and literature about volunteer opportunities. A sign-up sheet will be available for those interested.

"About 300 people attended the concert last year and hopefully more people will attend this year," Redmon said. "People who attend will probably be those who appreciate good, home-grown music or who are interested in volunteering for Habitat for Humanity."

This is the second year for the concert in its present form, but it has been a tradition for about 10 years. It is Manhattan's celebration of Habitat International's "Building on Faith" week.

"['Building on Faith' week] is an opportunity to reflect on our roots as a Christian-based organization for building homes," Redmon said.

The concert is expected to be about an hour-and-a-half long.

The Manhattan Habitat for Humanity has built 17 homes, housing about 90 people, and will break ground for a new house on Oct. 2.

Ohio State fans take emotions too far

MATTHEW GIRARD

There is no denying football is an emotional game.

You see it every weekend: players, coaches and fans all hyped up like little kids who have downed a few too many Pixie sticks.

That said, there is such a thing as being too emotional.

On Wednesday, Ohio State tight end Ryan Hamby said in an interview with the Akron Beacon Journal he had received "hate" e-mails from Buckeye fans for dropping an eight-yard pass in their 25-22 loss to No. 2 Texas last Saturday.

Yes, the No. 4 Buckeyes were playing the No. 2 team in the nation, at home, in the second game of the season, on national television, and Hamby catching the ball might have given Ohio State a more comfortable lead, but actively finding a player's e-mail address and sending him hate mail is ridiculous.

Isn't dropping a pass on national TV embarrassment enough?

I'm sure most of us wouldn't appreciate an angry e-mail from a complete stranger after bombing a test.

That's not being a fan. That's just being an ass.

Thankfully, K-State fans aren't like that.

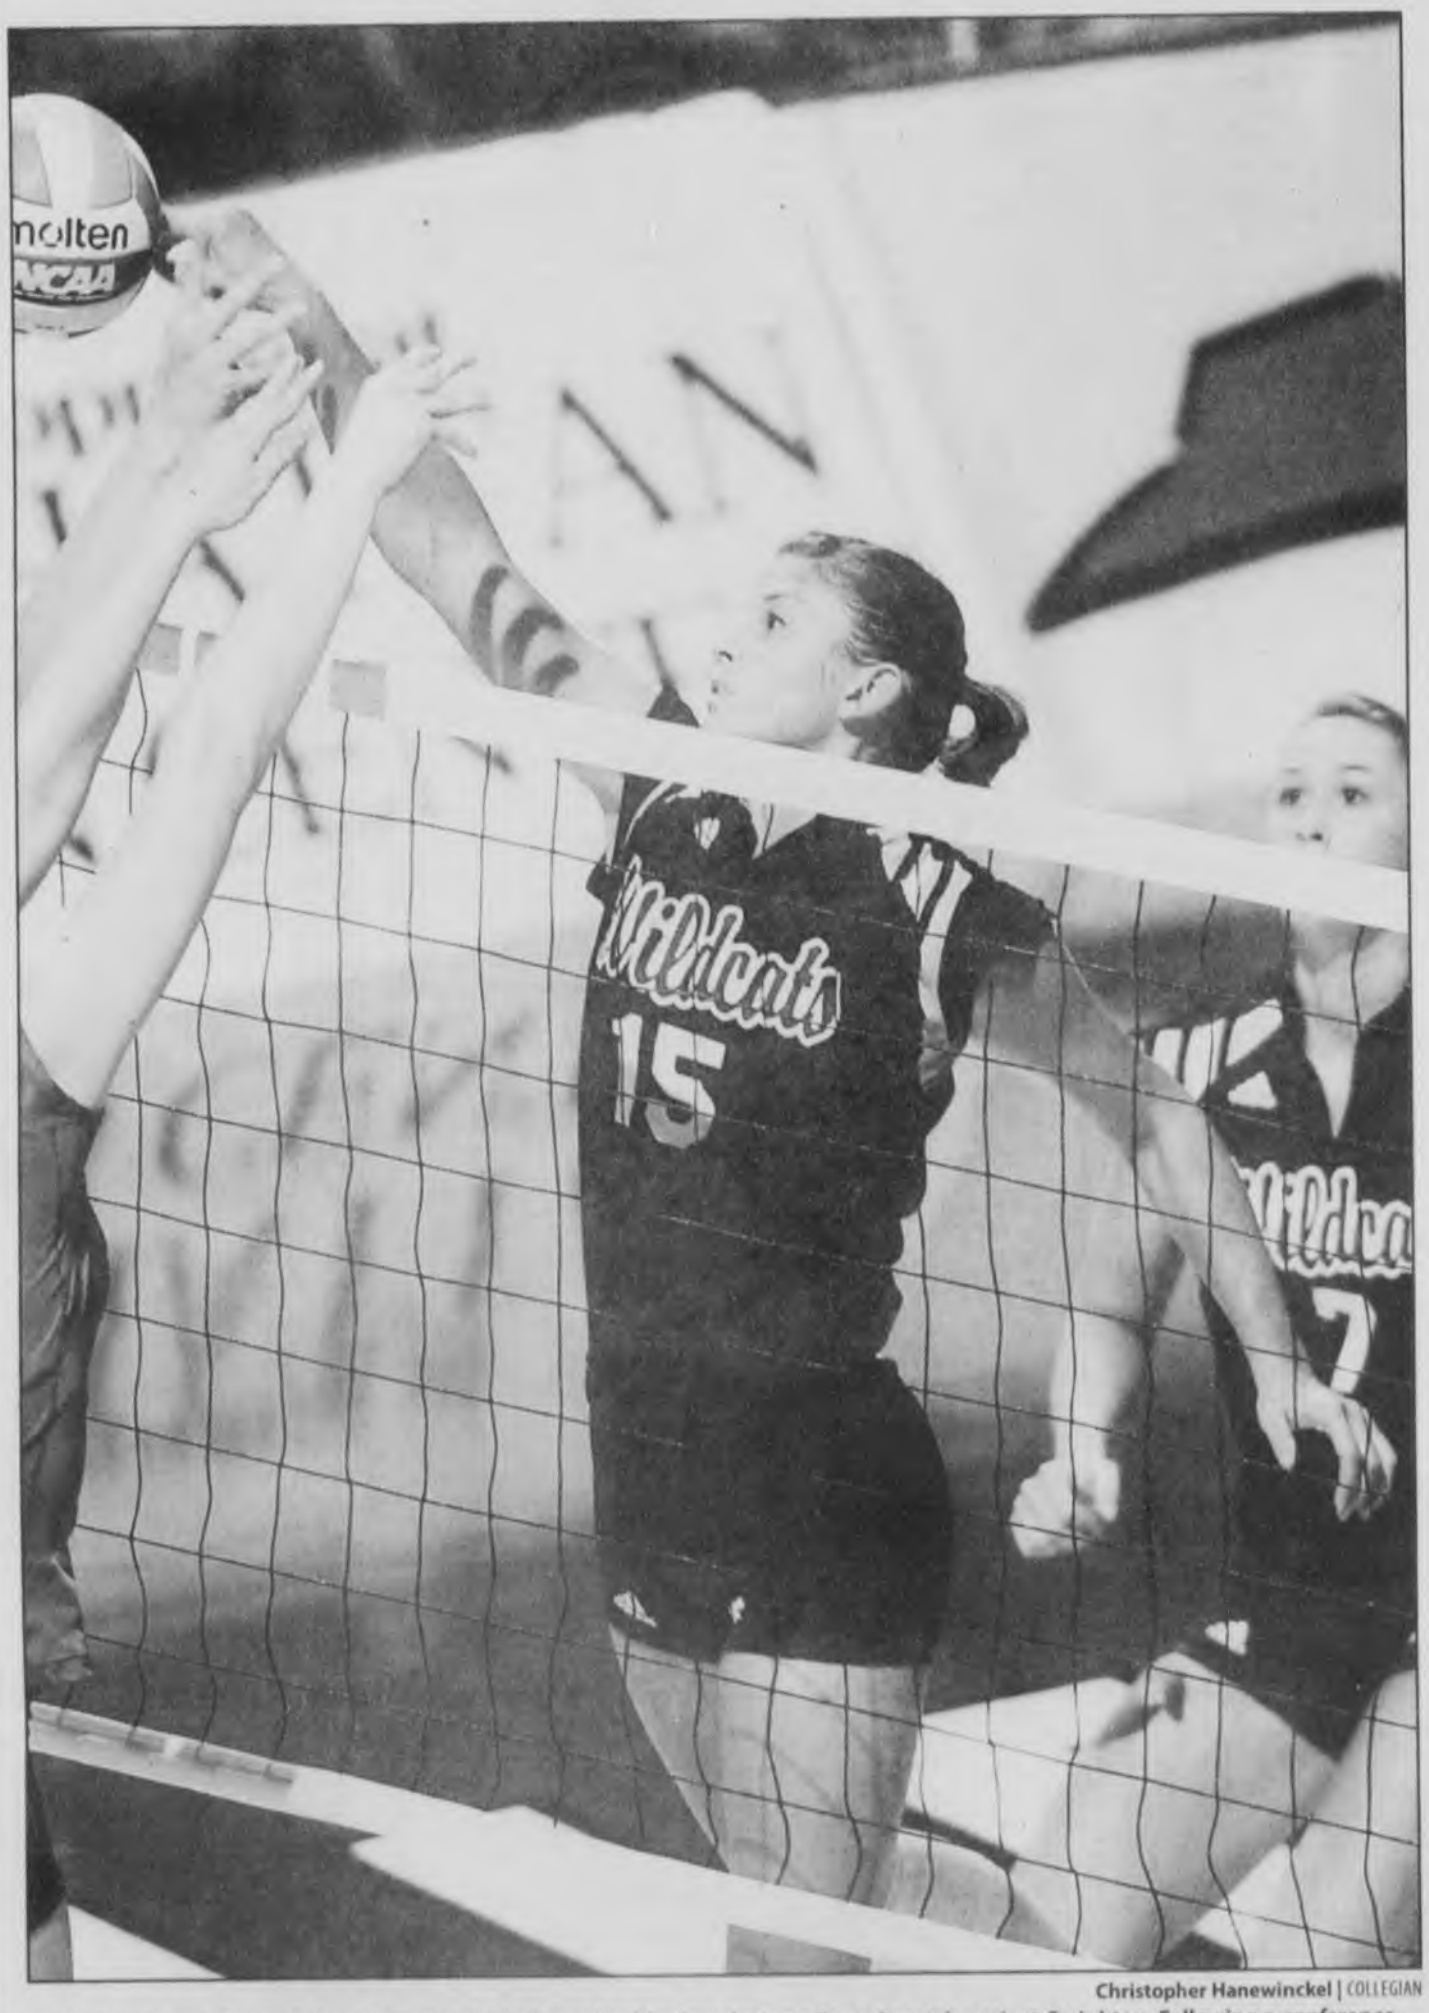
In the Wildcats' 21-19 win at Marshall last Saturday, senior running back Carlos Alsup had a similar lapse.

On K-State's first play from scrimmage, junior quarterback Allen Webb found a wide-open Alsup sprinting up the sideline with not a single defender within 15 yards.

The ball hit Alsup between the "2" and the "1" on his jersey, and fell to the turf.

The only thing that could have prevented Alsup from scoring would have been the Marshall buffalo mascot rushing the field to make the tackle.

After dropping the pass, Alsup laid on the ground with his face in the turf, probably thinking "Just don't move – if I don't move they can't see me."



Now, Alsup's drop wasn't at a critical point in the game or against a highly-ranked team, but every Wildcat fan saw it on TV – including yours truly – or from the stands.

I thought to myself, "Man, Alsup is going to get ripped in the Fourum come Monday," but not a single comment. Not even a drunkenly-incoherent comment, where the only thing you can understand is "Carlos" or "Alsup."

I know K-State fans are just about as crazy as Ohio State fans when it comes to football, but at least we are smart enough to know it's just a game.

Wildcats set to begin home conference

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's volleyball team returns to Ahearn Field House Saturday at 7 p.m. for its Big 12 Conference home opener against Texas Tech.

The No. 22 Wildcats come in at 9-1 overall and 1-0 in the Big 12 after sweeping Oklahoma on the road Wednesday to give coach Suzie Fritz her 100th victory at K-State.

The Red Raiders have a 6-4 record and are 0-1 in the Big 12 after a 3-1 loss at home to Baylor.

After her milestone win on Wednesday, Fritz was back to business as usual in preparation for the Red Raiders.

"I'm proud that we're winning more than we're losing, and I have a great staff and great people," she said. "You certainly don't win matches by yourself, so I'm certainly proud of that. We're far more concerned about the next win."

Last November, an unranked Texas Tech squad came into Ahearn Field House and upset the then 20th-ranked Wildcats 3-2 in a match Fritz said she hopes her players haven't forgotten.

"I hope they do remember that, not to use it as a revenge type of thing, but just that you can't overlook anybody," she said.

"We're playing hard against every team, so we're ready to beat them on Saturday."

Sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg said last year's loss to the Red Raiders will definitely serve as motivation this weekend.

"We lost last year at home to them, and we kind of took it for granted," Spiegelberg said. "We're not taking anyone for granted this year. We're playing hard against every team, so we're ready to beat them on Saturday."

The Red Raiders feature junior transfer Philister Sang. The outside hitter is averaging 4.79 kills per game, which ranks 15th in the country. Setting the ball to Sang will be the duo of freshman Holly Hicks and sophomore Emily Ziegler, who leads the team with 6.07 assists per game. Senior outside hitter Desiree Batista also contributes after leading the team with 3.81 digs per game last season.

Freshman cross country runner Jana Gwinn competes in the K-State/KU Dual at Warner Park Sept. 8. The cross country team will compete Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

K-State to test skills in Lincoln

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After two races this season, K-State cross country coach Michael Smith is ready to turn up the heat.

So far this season, the Wildcats have run at the JK Gold Classic in Wichita and at home against Kansas. On Saturday, the competition gets heavier, as K-State travels to the Woody Greeno Invitational in Lincoln, Neb.

At Pioneer's Park, K-State will face teams from Air Force, Nebraska, South Dakota State, Wichita State, Wyoming, Missouri and Northern Iowa – a marked increase in competition over the Wildcats' first two meets, Smith said.

"By design, we hoped this would be a more competitive meet, and this meet is on our schedule because of that," he said. "For the women, they need to have another meet, because they can run a little more frequently. For the men, it will be a little different, because we'll only have one guy who has run in all three of our meets so far."

This season, K-State has not run with a full team. On the women's side, health issues have limited some of the runners, while training schedules have kept some of the men's athletes out of races.

K-State's No. 1 runner on the women's side, freshman Liliani Mendez, is not healthy, and running in her place has been freshman Jana Gwinn.

Gwinn was the Wildcats' top finisher at Saturday's KSU/KU Dual, finishing with a time of 19 minutes, 36 seconds in the 5K race.

"Physically, she's (Gwinn is) training better and better by the week," Smith said. "She's developing her confidence. With Jana, we're seeing that she's getting better over time as she gets used to being in college and racing against collegiate competition."

Smith said as Mendez recovers, he expects to see improvement from the rest of the women's squad.

"Without Liliani, we're not as competitive as we'd like to be," he said. "but the ones we have are getting

CFB | Reyer Named to Ray Guy Watch List

K-State sophomore punter Tim Reyer was officially named to the 2005 Ray Guy Award watch list Wednesday as the Greater Augusta Sports Council announced its candidates for the top collegiate punter of the year.

In two games this season, Reyer has averaged 40.5 yards per punt, including a 50-yarder at Marshall, and has had 3-of-8 attempts fall inside the opponent's 20-yard line, while forcing fair catches on two others.

The Ray Guy Award watch list will be narrowed to 10 semi-finalists in early November. The national voting body will then vote for the top three finalists, who will be announced at the end of November. On Dec. 8, three finalists will travel to Orlando, Fla., for the Home Depot College Football Awards show, with the winner being announced live on ESPN.

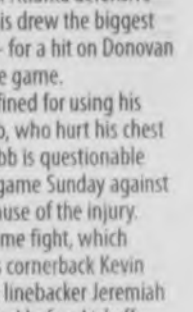
NFL | 10 players fined for Monday extracurriculars

NEW YORK — Nine players were fined for their roles in a fight before Monday night's game between the Eagles and Falcons. Atlanta defensive tackle Chad Lavalais drew the biggest fine — $7,500 — for a hit on Donovan McNabb during the game.



Lavalais was fined for using his helmet on McNabb, who hurt his chest on the play. McNabb is questionable for Philadelphia's game Sunday against San Francisco because of the injury.

For the pregame fight, which resulted in Falcons cornerback Kevin Mathis and Eagles linebacker Jeremiah Trotter being ejected before kickoff, both players received $5,000 fines. Also receiving a $5,000 hit was cornerback DeAngelo Hall for unsportsmanlike conduct for grabbing an opponent's facemask and then throwing the opponent's helmet.

Three Falcons were fined $2,500 for entering a fight area, which made them active participants: safety Keion Carpenter, cornerback-kick returner Allen Rossum and safety Kevin McCadam.

CYC | UCI gave Armstrong documents to L'Equipe

The president of cycling's world governing body supplied L'Equipe with documents the French sports newspaper used to accuse Lance Armstrong of doping at the 1999 Tour de France, World Anti-Doping Agency chief Dick Pound said Thursday.

Armstrong

Pound said he received a letter from Hein Verbruggen, head of the cycling body, known by its initials UCI, saying he had provided L'Equipe's reporter with forms indicating Armstrong had tested positive for EPO during his first Tour victory.

Last month, L'Equipe published evidence allegedly showing six of Armstrong's frozen urine samples from 1999 came back positive for endurance-boosting EPO when they were retested last year.

The seven-time Tour champion denied ever using banned drugs and said he was the victim of a "witch hunt."

MLB | Plans announced for regular season finale

ST. LOUIS — The final regular-season weekend at 40-year-old Busch Stadium will be a trip down memory lane for the St. Louis Cardinals, featuring appearances by Mark McGwire, Stan Musial and Whitey Herzog.

The 20th anniversary of the 1985 National League championship season will be observed on Friday, Sept. 30, the first game of a three-game series against the Cincinnati Reds.

Among those scheduled to attend are Ozzie Smith, Vince Coleman, Jack Clark, Bob Forsch, Rick Horton, John Tudor, Tom Herr and Herzog.

Throughout the game, replays of top-10 moments in stadium history, as chosen by online fan balloting, will be shown and fans will receive a DVD of the highlights.

Shopping for $ales

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everyone wants to look and feel good in the clothes they wear, but sometimes it's difficult to find stylish clothes at a reasonable price. While some may say it is hard to find name-brand, fashionable clothes without spending a fortune, Betzaida Figueroa said it's not.

"I buy clothes at JC Penney, Dillard's and Aeropostale when I'm on a budget," Figueroa, freshman in social work, said.

Many stores in the mall have clothes at reasonable prices. Alisha McKoy, freshman in pre-pharmacy, said it just takes knowing where to look for the right deals.

The same goes for Shana Kaufman, junior in family life and community service, who said she only buys clothes that are good deals.

SHOPPING ON A DIME

For students short on cash, there are plenty of ways to make a fashion budget go the extra distance.

Step 1 – Go straight to the back of the store, where marked-down items are usually displayed.

Step 2 – Shop off-season. They could wait until the end of summer to buy basic summer items that will still be in style next summer. Examples include denim skirts, shorts, basic baby tees and tanks.

Step 3 – Use coupons. Publications, such as Seventeen Magazine, have a lot of coupons for various stores. Local newspapers are also a place to find money-saving opportunities.

Step 4 – Visit consignment shops, where vintage items aren't the only treasures to find. Once students get over the funky smell and are comfortable wearing previously-owned clothes, they can add some dash to their wardrobe.

PUTTING IT INTO PRACTICE

Clothing can be found at Manhattan Town Center for under $10. Aeropostale has had recent summer clearance sales. Stores such as the Gap, Dillard's and Maurices usually have a clearance rack for shoppers to sift through.

Cheap outfits
This outfit was purchased at Aeropostale for 1/2 off the sales price. The jean skirt and monkey screen T-shirt were each $4.99. The total was $10.71.

Reviewer wonders where the Weezer of old has gone

"Make Believe"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Rolling Stone and I are not on speaking terms. We have always had a strong relationship. In 2004, we celebrated the 50th anniversary of rock 'n' roll together with many special issues and features. Then earlier this year, she released an article praising Weezer's newest album, "Make Believe." My interest was piqued by one statement in particular: "A breakthrough for Weezer ... Cuomo's songs are his most plaintive and brilliant since 'Pinkerton.'"

Imagine my excitement, especially considering Weezer's recent weak output; I still haven't recovered from the spotless pop of "Weezer (The Green Album)" and the guitar wankery of "Maladroit." The prospect of Weezer returning to their glory days (i.e. "Weezer (The Blue Album)" and "Pinkerton") elicited pure excitement within this musical fan.

My hopes were pulverized after the first listen of album opener, "Beverly Hills." It was a slap in the face: Rolling Stone was falsely touting this travesty as kin to the ever-brilliant "Pinkerton." What's even worse is that when it was released in 1996, Rolling Stone declared it the worst album of the year. What a two-timing harlot!

Gone were the ironic, tongue-in-cheek lyrics, the raw emotional catharsis, and the crude, yet catchy, histrionic guitar figures. Say hello to the new Weezer. Rivers Cuomo isn't simply "Tired of Sex," he's taken a vow of celibacy to ensure that he never has it again! Cuomo wants to apologize for any times that he might have been too forthright:

"I may not be a perfect soul/But I can learn self-control/So pardon me, pardon me/Pardon me, my friend."

This new Cuomo is cute and cuddly, and all he wants you to do is "Hold Me."

What went wrong? Let's look first at "Beverly Hills." It is an ill-begotten mixture of "I Love Rock 'n' Roll" and "Undone (The Sweater Song)."

Weezer doesn't simply rip the main riff from Joan Jett's single; but they drag it, mount it, and hump it into submission as a sniveling, huddled mass.

The image of countless drunken frat boys swinging their cups and drunkenly shouting along is almost too depressing to think about. And don't even get me started on the Peter Frampton-esque voice box breakdown.

Courtesy art

"Perfect Situation" finds Weezer excavating the corpse of "Pinkerton" highlight "Pink Triangle" and embarrassingly watering it down with studio sheen, trite lyrics and an "oohhhh" chorus that is just lazy.

"This is Such a Pity" is surprisingly interesting as it rides along on a Cars-y synth line, but any good will it gains is torn apart by a guitar solo that is pure cheese. Rivers, you should know better than to ape the "Top Gun" soundtrack.

Then there is the power-pop travesty, "We Are All on Drugs."

It is a crunching power-chord-filled, anti-drug song with lyrics that are beyond infantile.

"And you show up late for school/'Cause you think you're really cool/When you're on drugs."

I have seen anti-drug commercials with more pizzazz; if anything, the song makes me want to cook up a hit just so I can burn its memory from my brain.

And "We Are All on Drugs" is only the halfway point of "Make Believe." Predictably, the album does not get any better. It continues to spiral into submediocre, assembly-line guitar-pop.

It pains me to think that Weezer has abandoned musical-edginess and emotional weight in favor of impersonal and unmemorable music.

"Weezer makes me really sad/'Cause their album is so bad/And I would rather bang my head against the wall/Than listen to it at all."

Hey, I just wrote a Weezer song.

ATO member named top undergrad

A 554-page, 7.5-pound annual report that documented Alpha Tau Omega's activities for the past year won five awards at its National Awards Banquet in Indianapolis, Ind., this year.

The K-State chapter took the Top Chapter Award, the True Merit Award and the Anderson Gold Award, which recognizes excellence in communications; the North-American Interfraternity Award of Distinction, which recognizes excellent chapters and members; and the Thomas Arkle Clark Award, which went to Andy Newton, the top undergraduate in the nation.

All year ATO officers document everything the chapter does, and at the end of the year, 18 officers turn in their documentation to four officers who compile the papers and pictures into an annual report.

"It took four people working for four days straight, approximately nine hours a day, to complete the annual report," Jacob Will, senior in business management and last year's ATO vice president, said.

Several of the activities reported were philanthropies the fraternity is involved in. Its two annual philanthropies are Homeless for Hunger and Wildcat Variety Show. Between these, ATO raised more than $15,000 for charities. Members also participated in 15 other charities throughout the year.

ATO members said they are most proud of their Top Chapter Award. The K-State chapter has been the No. 1 chapter in the nation six out of the last eight years.

Center for Leadership Studies in development

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A financial donation given to the leadership studies program will help with the development of the K-State Center for Leadership Studies.

Warren Staley, chairman and CEO of Cargill, Inc. and his wife Mary Lynn have asked the amount of the gift remain private.

Susan Scott, director of leadership studies and programs, said Mary Lynn came to K-State a few years ago to give a speech and spoke with leadership students.

"She saw how much leadership meant to some of the students and over the next couple of years there were different meetings about it," she said. "Then it became a reality."

A tentative design shows the building will be about 30,000 square feet and will cost about $10.5 million.

Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education, said he hopes to have the building constructed by 2008 or 2009 and have all the money raised by this time next year.

"I think that this is the start of a premier program for this institution," he said.

Scott said she hopes the building will be done in the next couple of years, but more money needs to be raised first.

"We have to raise 60 to 70 percent of the funds in order for the Board of Regents to approve it," she said.

Scott also said the building will mean a lot to future students. It will not only be a place for students in the minor, but the building will be available for other students who are interested in other leadership activities.

Holen said leadership studies and programs has grown rapidly with 1200 or more students enrolled.

With the largest minor on campus, he said the program needs a larger building. The minor allows students from other curriculums to take the sequence, which exposes them to ethics and community.

"It strengthens students' employability and civic perspective," he said. "This program offers a lot of opportunities for students to be involved."

He said the program has about 19 faculty and staff who work out of the two houses K-State rents across from campus on North Manhattan Avenue.

"We need a facility that works with the program," he said.

He said there has been approval of a spot that is directly east of Shellenberger Hall and north of King Hall, an area of what it now a parking lot.

Holen said the area is a natural traffic way and will attract more students to the program. The building will feature high ceilings and windows, much like the Alumni Center, but with more windows.

"This center will stimulate more people to be attracted to this program, and it will grow significantly," he said.

Holen said though the building will be constructed after some current students are gone, they will still remain connected.

"Those students who have moved on will maintain their connection, because this center will reflect the program that is a source of pride for them," he said.

Jessica Fine, freshman in accounting, said it is a great opportunity for meeting other students involved in the minor other than in just a classroom.

"I think it would be fantastic on campus and would allow everyone to be a little more organized with their own space," she said.

Fine, who is minoring in leadership, said it is a minor that people don't hear about often and the building would attract more people and give it a more professional look.

"Having it on campus would give it more publicity and more students would want to know more about the program," she said.

CROSS COUNTRY | Moore expected to contend

close to where we need to be. We're just not as deep as we have been in years past, but that will get better over time."

On the men's side, senior Joe Moore will race for the second time this season, and is expected to contend for a high-placing Saturday.

At the KSU/KU Dual, Moore finished second overall with a time of 15:39.10 to help K-State tie Kansas.

"He's as fit as he's ever been," Smith said.

Overall, Smith said the meet Saturday is all in preparation for the future, as the team's ultimate focus is the Big 12 Championships.

"We obviously want to do as well as we can, but for us, everything is geared toward the conference meet," Smith said.

Loeb said she was honored to be one of the 25.

"It's really exciting being involved with something that's so prestigious on campus," she said.

Intern Zachary Oswald, freshman in international business, said he also was excited about the upcoming year.

"I want the experience here at K-State with Student Governing Association to prepare me to work with other people and focus on policies," he said.

Oswald said the position would teach him about core values of business and leadership.

"It's what my major encompasses," he said. "You talk to businesses and people – you network.

"It's practically the same as the real world, just on a smaller level," he said.

Student Senate also approved funding for the Progressive Coalition, African Student Union and Community Cultural Harmony Week.

Progressive Coalition is currently projecting human rights films on the south side of Hale Library for five weekends this semester. Senate Allocations Chair Dave Hart said the films were in the university's best interest.

"It's really great for people to experience," Hart said. "We are funding two out of five films at $250 each."

A $1,000 allocations request from the African Student Union was approved at the meeting as well. This money will help fund a conference for 16 members to attend this semester.

An allocation to fund Community Cultural Harmony Week was also approved.

Student Senate approved the funding requests with a vote of 56-0-0.

student life, said. "It's been a fun program to put together. I think there's been some really good information we're going to get out, especially the panel discussion. I'd really encourage students to attend that."

The amendment requires all educational institutions that receive federal funding to implement educational programs about the Constitution. These activities are to take place on Sept. 17 of each year, in observance of Sept. 17, 1787, the date the Constitution was signed.

According to the amendment, state and federal agencies not open on weekends are required to celebrate Constitution Day on a weekday, Hopper said.

"I think a lot of people don't really know a lot about the Constitution, except that we maybe have one," Zach Hauser, junior in political science, said. "It's a great way to encourage some candor and interest about how we interpret the Constitution according to modern-day topics.

"I think for this reason, and for so many more, it's really important that we really understand the framework for which we have to think about these subject matters."

The National Constitution Center conducted a survey of 600 students and found most have limited knowledge of the Constitution. The study suggested most students know more about pop culture than about the Constitution.

"I think people care about what directly affects them," Hauser said. "Is the average woman more likely to pick up a Glamour magazine or a book of framer documents? Is a male going to want to exercise at the Rec or pick up the same book of framer documents?

"It's just how people see what affects them and the immediacy of their priorities."

Hearing loss from MP3 players is intensified when the players are used to drown out other noises.

For instance, the noise of a lawn mower is 80-85 decibels, which could be safely sustained for several hours.

If an MP3 player is used to provide music while mowing, the player must be turned to more than 100 decibels just to be heard over the mower. Within five to 10 minutes at those levels, permanent hearing loss will occur, Cheung said.

Relying on medicine to fix damaged hearing from noise-related damage is not an option, Cheung said. Permanent means permanent.

Running back Clayton arrested

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State running back Thomas Clayton who was arrested Friday afternoon on a charge of aggravated battery has been released from the Riley County Jail after posting $1,000 bond.

Clayton
RUNNING BACK

According to a K-State Police report, while a university parking official attempted to put a wheel lock on Clayton's vehicle because of several unpaid parking tickets, Clayton "nearly struck" the parking employee with his automobile.

Clayton left the scene, but was taken into custody at the Vanier Football Complex a short time later.

Clayton is the Big 12 Conference's leading rusher with 164.5 rushing yards per game.

No comment has been issued by the K-State Athletic Department.

Former Westar executives convicted on looting charges

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Westar Energy case has raised questions regarding business ethics in the K-State community.

A federal jury found former Westar Energy Chief Executive David Wittig and former Chief Strategy Officer Douglas Lake guilty of looting charges.

Both men were forced to leave Westar in 2002 after stealing millions of dollars from the state's largest electrical utility company.

Wittig was convicted of 39 counts, including conspiracy, wire fraud, falsifying books and money laundering. Lake was convicted on 30 counts of similar charges.

"These men basically stole money from citizens, so students should be aware of ethics and the corporate world."

Lesley Holmes
SENIOR IN MARKETING

Both men will be sentenced in January. They were ordered to turn over thousands of shares of stocks and stock dividends and sales. K-State students should pay particular attention to the Westar Energy case, said Diane Swanson, associate professor of management and chair of Business Ethics Education Initiative.

"Students should be concerned because we live in a society where organizations are important and we need to know there are good role models in the executive suite that care about society," Swanson said.

Swanson also said consumers may pay for the looted money through their monthly electrical bill.

"The cost of electricity hits the poorer people and elderly the hardest. I'm really concerned about the disadvantaged among us, and that's something we should all care about," she said.

Lesley Holmes, senior in marketing, said students should be aware of corporate scandals.

"We will be the future business world leaders and if we don't take these scandals seriously, we may end up in a situation like this," she said.

Holmes said K-State students should be aware scandals such as Westar take control from society.

"Corporate scandals place more government control on corporations," Holmes said. "These men basically stole money from citizens, so students should be aware of ethics and the corporate world."

Recognizing leaders

Honor society inducts 400 new members

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A round of applause recognized the new National Society of Collegiate Scholars members as they were given membership pins and recited the membership oath.

Parents, grandparents and families filled the K-State Student Union Ballroom Saturday afternoon to watch the induction of 400 new members into the K-State chapter.

Inductees and their families paid admission to the ceremony with a canned good – part of NSCS's first service project of the year, a drive to aid the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The introduction of the chapter officers began the ceremony and then Stephen J. Schulzetenberg, a national-office representative, addressed those present.

"I joined to become a leader and to make a difference," Schulzetenberg said. "Now I am here to help K-State officers and to emphasize and support the standards of the group."

Guest speaker Anita Cortez gave the students advice on how to use their membership in the NSCS to the best of their ability in a growing and globalized world.

K-State Athletics sends donations to Katrina victims

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Athletics Department took their weekend off to send aid to help those in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

The department took the football equipment truck, normally used to carry the team's equipment to away games, and filled it with items needed in the reconstruction effort in Louisiana.

The truck would have been sitting idle as the football team did not play this weekend.

K-State athletics asked for diapers, bottled water and baby wipes as they were the items most in demand by evacuees.

The majority of donations were from individual gifts.

"It's been K-State fans driving up with packages of water and diapers," Melynda Stein, K-State Athletics assistant director of marketing, said.

Stein said football players brought donations and took turns accepting them from fans and signing autographs beside the truck last weekend. She said coach Bill Snyder gave his blessing for the shipment.

Regional merchants, including Varney's, Commerce Bank, Leiszler Oil and Dodge City International, donated money to pay for the fuel to get there and back. The truck's drivers, Jerry Dugan and John Brown, said the trip would be more demanding fuel-wise than normal operation.

During the last day of accepting donations Joni Weinman, K-State sports marketing employee, helps Todd Prater, Manhattan resident, as he drops off diapers, water and other supplies to be donated to help Katrina victims. The donated items and the K-State football truck left at 5 p.m. Sunday and will be dropped off at the UMCOR Sager Brown Depot in Baldwin, La.

Christopher Hanewinckel
COLLEGIAN

"This is quite a bit heavier load than football equipment," Brown said.

He said the truck averaged six-and-a-half miles per gallon on its trip to Huntington, W. Va. for the Marshall game last week, and the truck would be lucky to average six per gallon on this trip.

Dugan said they planned for the trip to take 17 hours each way to Baldwin, La., about 90 miles west of New Orleans. They will have to be certain they have enough fuel as they head south because some places don't have power to pump fuel into trucks.

The truck was open for donations Friday evening, all day Saturday and Sunday afternoon in the parking lot west of KSU Stadium and was expected to leave about 5 p.m. Sunday. However, when that time came, donations were still arriving and departure was postponed.

"We hadn't donated anything yet and had been intending to give," Chuck Henderson, Manhattan resident said, after he and his wife, Linda dropped off two packages apiece of diapers and toilet paper.

Katrina changes Bush agenda

Joe Raedle | GETTY IMAGES

Cleanup crews use absorbent pads to collect crude oil Thursday in a canal in Port Sulphur, La. The port is along the Mississippi River, where the largest of three dozen significant spills are located.

Hurricane Katrina changed President Bush's second-term domestic agenda. His commitment to rebuild New Orleans and the Gulf Coast has become No. 1. Federal relief and reconstruction spending could rise to more than $200 billion. Bush said the federal government would pick up most of the spending for rebuilding highways, bridges, sewer lines and other major structures.

LA LOSES POWER

Large portions of Los Angeles lost power around noon Monday because of cables mistakenly cut by utility workers. The power was restored by 3 p.m. affecting about two million people, trapping some in elevators and jamming intersections. There were few injuries, although two men were briefly hospitalized after inhaling toxic fumes when smoke backed up at an oil refinery after power went out.

BRITNEY SPEARS GIVES BIRTH

Spears

Pop star Britney Spears gave birth to a baby boy Wednesday in Santa Monica, Calif. Spears and husband, Kevin Federline, said in a statement on the singer's Web site. This is the first child for Spears, 23, and the third for Federline, 27, who has two other children with former girlfriend Shar Jackson.

CAGED CHILDREN FOUND IN HOME

Eleven children were removed from an Ohio house where authorities say some of them slept in cages. Their adoptive parents, Michael and Sharen Gravelle, denied in a custody hearing that they abused or neglected the children. The children's ages range from one to 14 years old and they have conditions including autism and fetal alcohol syndrome. The cages were 3 1/2 feet tall and some had alarms that would sound when a cage door was opened.

9/11 DOCUMENTS DESTROYED BEFORE ATTACKS

Congressman Curt Weldon, R-Pa., said a Pentagon employee was ordered to destroy documents that identified a terrorist in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks two years before they took place. The employee is prepared to testify next week and is expected to name the person who told him to destroy the documents.

HURRICANE OPHELIA MOVES AWAY FROM NORTH CAROLINA

Ophelia, now classified as a tropical storm, moved out to sea Friday after drenching North Carolina's coast. The storm was much less severe than anticipated. Coastal residents were hit with wind that damaged businesses and homes. More than 9,600 residents remained without power Friday in the eastern part of the state.

AFGHAN ELECTIONS GO ON DESPITE VIOLENCE

Despite a Taliban boycott and militant attacks, Afghanistan citizens voted for a new parliament Sunday. This is the last formal step in starting a democracy in the country. Officials said polls were a success, although turnout was lower than expected because of security concerns and the inclusion of warlords on the ballot. Preliminary results are not expected until early October.

Play to focus on reproductive rights

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only three locations in Kansas will host performances of "Words of Choice," and K-State is one of them.

An ensemble group from St. Louis, Mo., will bring the play, created by Cindy Cooper and directed by Joan Lipkin, to the K-State Student Union Main Ballroom at 7 tonight.

The play focuses on reproductive rights with three performers in 17 scenes Sarah Shimchick, the play's stage manager, said.

"Essentially, the whole play is about pro-choice and reproductive rights," she said.

The play's message is conveyed through both dramatic and comedic scenes, from a Taco Bell contraceptive burrito to a mother who testifies before U.S. Congress after an abortion showed severe birth defects would have killed her fetus.

One scene features an actor playing Emily Lyons, a nurse who was in an abortion clinic bombed by Eric Rudolph, as she gives a speech to the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

The actors, Thomasina Clarke, Jacqueline Masei and Kimberly Mason, play both female and male parts.

Cooper said she created the play after watching a PBS movie called "The Education of Shelby Knox."

Knox was a student in Lubbock, Texas, where the school district had a policy of teaching abstinence in sexual education classes.

Yet, Lubbock had the highest rates of sexually transmitted diseases and teen pregnancy in the state. Knox protested other aspects of sex education weren't being taught. Later she attempted to create a gay-straight alliance in Lubbock.

Knox's actions and the actions of others swayed Cooper to speak out about issues some might find uncomfortable and to support those who were speaking out on their own.

"Fred Phelps actually inspired me in some ways," Cooper said.

Phelps and his family often protest events they find objectionable, including Knox's creation of a gay-straight alliance in the Lubbock schools.

Shannon Babcock, senior in social work and chairperson of Manhattan National Organization for Women, said the cast wanted to perform in Kansas because of Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline's attempts to access medical records of some women who received abortions at two Kansas clinics. The group was, however, hesitant to perform at K-State because of the university's more conservative reputation.

The "Words of Choice" cast performed in Lawrence on Sept. 16 and will perform in Wichita on Sept. 20 at the First Unitarian Universalist Church.

Masei said there have been a few protesters at previous performances, but they haven't affected the cast or the performances.

Admission is free, but a $5 donation is recommended.

Students arrested for Rec Center theft

Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two K-State students were arrested Thursday for theft.

KSU Police Captain Richard Herrman said Eric Mayes, freshman in open option, and Vernon Chapman, freshman in pre-pharmacy, were arrested after police served a search warrant at 3 p.m. Sept. 15 for their room at 446 Marlatt Hall.

He said the two were later released on $1,000 bond each.

Herrman said the search warrant was issued in relation to 10 recent reports of theft from the Peters Recreation Complex. He said the thefts were misdemeanor charges, and the items stolen were wallets and purses.

Chapman declined to comment on the arrest Friday afternoon.

Former police officer gets 16 months jail time for stealing drug money

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – A former Topeka police officer has been sentenced to 16 months in prison for stealing thousands of dollars intended for undercover drug buys and using the money to fund his gambling habit.

Thomas Pfortmiller, 41, was also ordered Friday to pay restitution, with the amount to be determined later.

The 14-year veteran was placed on leave and later resigned in 2004 after the department asked the Kansas Bureau of Investigation to look into cases he had handled.

Originally charged with 100 felonies and misdemeanors, Pfortmiller pleaded no contest in July to 50 felonies.

The prosecution said he took more than $20,000 from the department, claiming it would be used to buy drugs, and filed police reports claiming drug buys had occurred.

That led to the issuance of false arrest warrants – and helped foster a contempt for the law, the judge who sentenced Pfortmiller said.

"Major cases have been dismissed, and most shocking, citizens of our community have been set up, accused and warrants issued for their arrest for crimes they did not commit," Shawnee County District Judge Eric Rosen said.

The normal sentence for Pfortmiller would have been probation. But Steve Karrer, a Shawnee County assistant district attorney, sought a stiffer sentence based on what he contended was Pfortmiller's breach of duty to the community.

Defense attorney Jerry Berger argued against prison time, noting Pfortmiller is an active member of Gamblers Anonymous and, along with his wife, had started a group to aid spouses of gambling addicts.

Pfortmiller apologized at the sentencing hearing.

"I committed the crimes. I committed them on my own. You will never see me in front of this court again," he said. "I'm so sorry for being here."

PROFILE OF A GARMIN ENGINEER: ADAM

He's on a roll.

Just days into his first job, Adam was assigned to a product team at Garmin that was developing the company's very first GPS car navigator featuring touch screen technology. Adam, a recent computer engineering grad, rolled up his sleeves and immediately began working with other engineers on the team. He even came up with a solution that allowed the device's computer-generated voice commands to work loud and clear. Not bad for the new guy.

In the months following, this tight-knit team of engineers wrote new software, installed prototype systems and even field-tested the product. Now that's hands-on engineering.

Garmin, a world leader in GPS-enabled products and other innovative electronics, is ready to put more engineers in the driver's seat. We are seeking Software, Electrical and Mechanical Engineers.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Forum provides opportunity for discussion

When it comes to abortion, everybody is right. Pro-choice, pro-life, pro-death, pro-other.

At least everybody believes that they are right.

The problem is, when everybody is right that means no one is talking. The ability to have a dialogue is what separates sentient man from the rest of nature.

However, for the issue of abortion there is little dialogue. In it's place, we find group A versus group B, with no room for something in between.

Surrounding ourselves with others who hold the same beliefs and ideas allows us to construct a wall of, that blocks out opposing ideas from entering our well-protected consciousness

While the play "Words of Choice" does promote a decidedly pro-choice message, the forum after the play presents a golden opportunity for proactive dialogue about one of the most divisive issues in our nation.

By communicating with people who have viewpoints counter to our own, we force ourselves to examine the construction upon which our beliefs are built.

At the very least, getting an insight into who the people are that counter your beliefs is a healthy experience.

There are reasonable arguments for both sides, and claiming a monopoly on truth is the hallmark of arrogance.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Preventative measures

Students should get social security numbers removed from IDs now

Boy, my social security number sure is useful. Useful, that is, to me and everyone else who gets a hold of it.

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

The summer before I came to K-State, I received notification of a law that required the removal of my social security number from my driver's license and any other form of identification. All of my IDs were social security-free except for the brand spanking new K-State ID I received during orientation barely a month before the notification.

Seeking to correct this error, I took a venture to the K-State ID Center to see if I could get my social security number removed from my ID card.

Unfortunately, I was told that since I'm a recipient of scholarship aid, my social security number couldn't be removed. I didn't understand the tie between the display of my social security number on my ID and my financial assistance, and I still don't, but now, less than a year later, students finally have the option of removing their social security numbers from their IDs.

This realization, though slow in development, isn't happening just at K-State. Nationwide, colleges are recognizing the danger of displaying students' social security numbers on ID cards and using them as ID pin numbers.

Social security numbers originally served solely to keep track of employees' wages and benefits. Now, it has mutated to function as a key identifier of important personal information. Establishing good credit, employment applications, and associated back-ground checks are only some of the important issues closely tied to a person's name and social security number.

How ironic that a number intended to keep personal information secure has become one of the pieces of personal information most vulnerable to theft.

Ideally, a nine-digit number shouldn't hold such an incredible amount of power over the security or destruction of one's identity. Since that is our reality, however, such a powerful tool should not be so readily accessible to the wrong hands.

As students entering a technologically advanced world, we've been told repeatedly to keep fierce watch over our personal information. When one of the keys to our personal information is boldly printed on our ID cards, protecting personal information can be especially difficult.

In the past, students have had little choice about who had access to their social security numbers. Current K-State IDs laden with social security numbers are necessary not only for financial aid, test identification and student discounts, but they also serve on-campus residents as the access key to food, residential hall supplies and facilities, not to mention all students attending football games with general admission and ICAT tickets. Yet the financial aid office is the only campus agency that should really need students' social security numbers.

A recent article announced K-State intends to switch students to IDs without social security numbers on them by April 2006, free of charge. The new IDs will be valid by May 22 under a different, less-volatile identification number.

The use of social security numbers as an identifier is starting to wane nationally. Now many state laws require that social security numbers be removed from ID cards, badges, customer documents, Internet transactions and unprotected Web sites.

Kudos to K-State for taking action now to reduce the risk of identity theft on campus. Even if a new, social security-free ID is going to cost me a little money to acquire before next year, that investment is worth it when so much more is at stake.

Nebraskan wrong for marriage to 13-year-old

Ask yourself – does government have a right to charge a man with sexual assault for impregnating his wife, who happens to be nine years younger than he is? Love knows no age, claims the old adage.

LUCAS MADDY

What if, at the time of conception, the female was 13 years old? Societal, physical, and psychological barriers should give the courts reason to punish this offense.

The man is 22-year-old Matthew Koso of Falls City, Neb. When the relationship began, Matthew was unaware his current wife was 12, and the bride's mother was kept in the dark for a time about the age difference. Finally, when the girl became pregnant, both Koso's parents and the girl's mother gave consent for them to marry in Hiawatha, Kan.

The marriage occurred in Hiawatha because Kansas currently has no minimum age for marriage given by parental consent. Nebraska requires an age of 17. The union is now honored in Nebraska because it was obtained in a legal manner.

The girl, now 14, has given birth to a child. She lives with Koso, who now has the debatably disconcerting task of raising two children.

Hopefully, we all agree that a 22-year-old man having sex with a 13-year-old girl is morally wrong. The legality is also decidedly criminal, for Koso is now a pedophile. I refer to him as such based on definition of law, not scorn.

If Koso were younger, his charge would be less than the first-degree felony sexual assault pursued by the Nebraska Attorney-General. If he and his Juliet were just two years apart in age, he might have been charged with a misdemeanor case of taking "indecent liberties" with a child, possibly earning probation. Nothing like the 50-year vacation from society Koso faces.

The difference in these sentences implies that with age comes knowledge. As a 22-year-old, Koso faces greater a penalty, for the knowledge he gained with age dictates he should know better. Perhaps no one ever told the girl, "If he loves you, he'll wait... for you to get your first zit." However, at age 13, her mental fortitude to deny Koso is doubtful. Not only did he steal her heart and virginity, but with it he took her innocence and changed the course of her future.

Koso's defenders claim the couple's right to free choice is being violated. Such people are abetting sexual crime. Common sense and decency guide the majority of our population to refrain from exercising such rights.

If anyone reading this article answered "No" to my first two questions, then changing times have changed too much. In high school agriculture class, Mr. Beydler taught me to ask three questions of myself when faced with a difficult decision. Simple questions, answer yes or no.

1. Would this be OK with God? (If you have no god, skip this one. No hard feelings.)
2. Would this be OK with my parents? (Respect the decisions of those burdened with the joy of bringing you into adulthood.)
3. Would this be OK with Mr. Beydler? (Not everyone has Mr. Beydler, but we all have role models. Insert yours. Though created equal, some people invariably rise to a level of admirable character among others.)

Koso should have asked these questions of himself. Even if the answers for all three were "yes," the only action he should have taken would be to disown his parents and discover a new role model.

To the Chi-O's riding in the DD car, sorry I was being such a bitch last night.

So its 11:13 and I'm eating peanut butter and jelly with no bread. Is that weird, or am I drunk?

Oh, Lance, never puke in my room again.

I almost got hit by a car while "noticing" a girl wearing a T-shirt and single-strap backpack across her chest.

My roommate hates her life.

My roommate likes to dance to the TV guide channel music.

To the guy in the "K-State girls rock" shirt, I think you rock.

WANTED: Attractive SWF seeks equally attractive SM for fishing expedition. Must be tall, dark and handsome — at least six feet and two inches.

Xtreme Tanning in Aggieville is horrible to it's customers and staff — don't go there.

My professor just propelled himself across the room via a cart and a fire extinguisher. Is this normal?

To whoever stole my P.O.S. bike, I hope you have fun riding it. Don't crash.

Please tell me most people already know that loud music equals hearing loss. No matter whether it's coming from a live concert, car stereo or an iPod.

If you can't live in a castle you might as well paint it on your garage.

How do I post a comment on the Fourum?

Grant Reichert, well done with the 'blame game' article. Well done.

There are worse things than a bowl of sour cream. Yeah, like rape and murder and AIDS!

Fun fact: if you put a frog in hot water, it will jump out, but, if you put it in cold water and heat the water up, it will just sit there until it boils to death.

All Femme show opens at Strecker-Nelson gallery

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery, 406 1/2 Poyntz Ave., is featuring an All Femme art show that opened on Friday and will be showing until October 28.

Among the pieces are ceramics, oil paintings, quilts and ceramic sculptures.

Barbara Nelson, co-owner of the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery, said the gallery portrays women in art and is very woman-identified.

"We have 21 women in this show, 20 that are from Kansas," she said. "They are absolutely some of the most talented women you will ever meet."

Artist Barbara Waterman-Peters described her figurative painting series as "(her) women" series.

Her paintings feature women in rural settings, and nearly all displayed a grain elevator or similar agricultural building in the background.

"The buildings represent places the women were, and how now they have escaped," she said.

Waterman-Peters said she did not like explaining everything about her paintings. She said she wishes people would interpret her art in their own way.

She also discussed the presence of a crow that was in several of her paintings.

"I like the crow," she said. "I feel like they are guardians, advisers, strong social birds that can adapt. I use it as a metaphor for the adaptability of women."

Waterman-Peters said she considers herself a feminist and said she has great admiration for women.

"Despite what we've been through, we still prove ourselves," she said. She said her previous paintings have been darker, while this series was more light-hearted.

"I'm interested in family relationships of women, and also the roles we're required to play," Waterman-Peters said. "Just women's issues in general, and the question of why have we subjected ourselves in the past."

Artist Linda Ganstrom displayed several sculptures at the gallery. All were of women, but were very different as they showed a wide variety in age and stage of life.

"I'm really inspired by everyday women. I think ordinary women are more interesting," she said.

Her pieces included a fifty-year-old woman, pregnancy, after-pregnancy and more.

"Women's bodies are so interesting," she said. "They transform and express what is going on in their life."

Ganstrom described her work as being straightforward and realistic.

Donna Rozman was another artist at the show, and she created several ceramic pieces. She says her visits to Mexico and Italy influence her art, as well as her education as K-State.

"You see a lot of spiritual and sensual symbols," she said. "I try to show or suggest the connection between sexuality and spirituality."

Larry Peters, Barbara Waterman-Peters' husband, said he has been watching Donna's work for some time.

"Her work is maturing, and I think it's great," he said. "This is really an exciting show."

Artist Jane Booth said she loved the gallery, and was excited to see the rest of the show.

"Any man that misses this show is a fool," she said.

Chinese students celebrate festival with karaoke, riddles

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mooncake and karaoke marked the Mid-Autumn Festival for the Chinese Student and Scholar Association Saturday night.

Mid-Autumn Day is a traditional Chinese festival that celebrates the harvest and provides a time of reunion for Chinese families.

"Let them enjoy each other because today is a special day for the Chinese," said George Wang, assistant professor in human nutrition and CSSA sponsor.

More than 100 people gathered in Union Station in the K-State Student Union for karaoke and riddle contests, conversation and refreshments, including the mooncake, which is only made for Mid-Autumn Day.

Mooncake is a breaded coating with different fillings. Made with flour and red bean sauce, the mooncake took about five hours to fix, Youfeng Wang, graduate student in geography and CSSA president, said.

Several non-Chinese students attended the festival and tried the mooncake.

"This one tastes like a lemon cake," John Frigon, senior in business and finance, said. "It's a little custardy."

Becca Catlin, senior in elementary education, said one variety tasted like fruitcake.

Wei Wu, instructor in Chinese language, said Mid-Autumn Day is also called the Moon Festival. She said the legend behind the celebration began with a woman named Chang'e.

According to the legend, there once were 10 suns in the sky and everyone was dying from the heat, so Chang'e's husband shot down nine of the suns.

As a reward, the heavenly emperor gave him an eternal pill that, once taken, would let him live forever. The couple's neighbor, however, wanted to steal the pill so he killed Chang'e's husband.

But to prevent the neighbor from getting the pill, Chang'e ate it and ascended to the moon. The festival is in her memory.

"Her behavior symbolizes love and loyalty," Wu said.

Whatever the reason for celebration, Fangmao Ye, graduate student in chemistry, said he enjoyed the festival.

"It's the best day of China," he said.

Visitors flee parts of Florida Keys

By Michelle Spitzer
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KEY LARGO, Fla. – Thousands of tourists jammed a highway Sunday after being told to evacuate the lower Florida Keys because Tropical Storm Rita developed over the Bahamas and moved toward the vulnerable, low-lying island chain.

A hurricane watch was posted for the entire Florida Keys, which means winds of at least 74 mph are possible by late Monday.

In Tallahassee, Gov. Jeb Bush declared a state of emergency for Florida, which gives the state authority to oversee evacuations and activate the National Guard, among other powers.

"It does look like that there is the potential for it to become a hurricane, near or just before it reaches the Florida Keys," Daniel Brown, a meteorologist at the National Hurricane Center, said.

Long-term forecasts show the system heading generally toward the west in the Gulf of Mexico toward Texas or Mexico later in the week, but such forecasts are subject to large errors. That means areas ravaged by Hurricane Katrina could potentially be in the storm's path.

"Once it reaches the Gulf, really everybody should pay attention at that point," Brown said.

As the storm strengthened hundreds of miles away, the lone highway in the Keys was packed with sport utility vehicles, RVs and motorcycles heading north to the mainland. The exodus caused a miles-long traffic jam in the two-lane section of U.S. 1 connecting Key Largo to Florida City.

Erik Juzman, 36, was among the evacuees when he stopped at a convenience store Sunday to take a break from the road.

"I take every storm seriously, so I always pack up and go," Juzman said. "Hurricane Andrew taught me this ... I'm not taking any chances."

Rita is the 17th named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season. That makes this season the fourth-busiest since record keeping began in 1851. Twenty-one tropical storms formed in 1933, 19 developed in 1995 and 1887 and 18 formed in 1969, according to the hurricane center.

At 8 p.m. EDT, Rita had top sustained winds of about 50 mph. It was centered about 330 miles east-southeast of Nassau, Bahamas and about 580 miles east-southeast of Key West. It was moving to the northwest near 9 mph.

Moore, Gwinn help Wildcats to 14th place

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Joe Moore and freshman Jana Gwinn paced the K-State cross country teams Saturday at the Woody Greeno/Nebraska Invitational in Lincoln, Neb.

For the K-State men, Moore finished 10th with a time of 25 minutes, 37 seconds on the 10K Pioneer's Park course.

Coach Michael Smith said Moore's performance could be a sign of greater things to come.

"Joe had an outstanding race," Smith said in a release. "If he keeps running at the pace he is and training as hard as he is, I expect him to place very well at the Big 12 Championships."

Once again, Smith decided not to field a full men's team, yet the Wildcats still finished 14th out of 29 schools.

Cross country results

■ Men's results

Joe Moore (10)	25:37
Matt Swedlund (59)	26:57
Casey Johnson (70)	27:08
Ben Delay (117)	27:43
Hiral Bhakta (169)	28:26
Will Lawrence (240)	29:54

■ Women's results

Jana Gwinn (19)	22:52

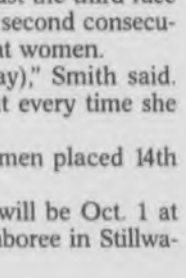
Christina Lara (72)	24:08
Eleanor Burton (120)	25:08
Breana Yost (141)	25:23
Morgan Bonds (157)	25:41



In the women's 8K race, Gwinn clocked in at 22:52 to finish 19th. Running in just the third race of her collegiate career, it was the second consecutive race Gwinn paced the Wildcat women.

"Jana ran really well (Saturday)," Smith said. "She shows signs of improvement every time she races."

Like the men, the K-State women placed 14th as a team out of 31 squads.

Next action for the Wildcats will be Oct. 1 at the Oklahoma State Cowboy Jamboree in Stillwater, Okla.

High school football displays game's purity

MICHAEL ASHFORD

For most college students, taking time out of party-filled Friday nights to go to a high school football game is not going to happen.

But if you're a football fan, not just college or pro football, maybe you should step away and go back to high school for three hours some Friday night.

If you truly love the game of football, it can be a moving experience.

Take, for instance, Friday night's game featuring Junction City against Topeka West. Neither team is expected to contend for the state title, but that doesn't mean those kids will stop playing or try any less.

Yes, in high school, there are cheesy fight songs, hilarious-looking mascots and generally slow, bland football, but there is something to be said for all of it.

It's about as pure as it gets.

There's no national media coverage. There's hardly any media coverage at all outside of the local newspaper and the occasional nightly TV news crew.

There are no ESPN highlights following the game, no scholarships and no bowl games to look forward to.

But there are rabid students, adoring parents, over-zealous booster clubs and, most importantly, all-out football.

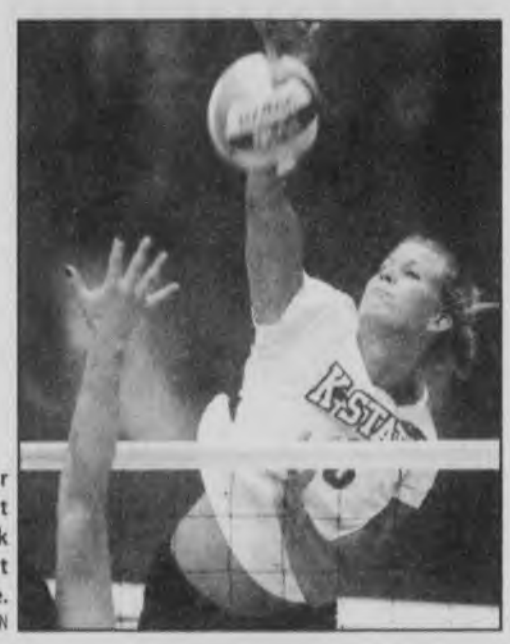
While it may not be the best football, the game may be in it's purest form at the high school level.

College football comes close to being pure, and you'd be a fool to watch a high school game over a college game, but when it comes down to it, high school football is all about the game.

Friday night, Topeka West defeated Junction City 35-21 in a relatively tame matchup. That's what happens when just 24 combined passes are thrown all game.

But neither team cared about how it was done. Both teams just wanted to win, even if it took 57 rushes for 381 yards from Topeka West.

And that's what it should be about.



Football shouldn't be about Heisman Trophies, the Bowl Championship Series or five-star recruits.

It should be about the game and doing whatever it take to win, plain and simple.

The games may not be the most exciting, but when it comes down to it, high school football has what the others don't: purity.

Hamlin leads K-State past Tech

"I am extremely proud of this program, but you don't get 100 wins by yourself. We've had tremendous players in here and a wonderful coaching staff."
Suzie Fritz
VOLLEYBALL COACH

Entering the season, coach Suzie Fritz knew her volleyball team was young and somewhat inexperienced.

But after sweeping Texas Tech 30-17, 30-18, 30-27 in their Big 12 Conference home opener Saturday, the No. 22 Cats (10-1, 2-0) are off to their best start since 1996.

The Red Raiders (6-5, 0-2) had no answer for K-State's offensive attack in the first two games, as the Wildcats posted a .638 hitting percentage on 41 kills – just one kill less than K-State totaled in three games in its win against Oklahoma Wednesday.

In game one, K-State jumped out to an early 8-2 advantage, forcing Texas Tech to take a time out. The Cats coasted to victory behind the right arm of junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin, who was a perfect 7-for-7 on kills.

Texas Tech battled K-State to an 8-8 tie in game two, but Hamlin again found an opening in the Red Raiders' defense. Through two games, the Douglass, Kan., native was 13-for-14 on kills for a .929 hitting percentage.

Fritz said Hamlin played excellent in the first two games, presenting a mismatch that favored K-State.

"They were trying to defend her with one blocker, and she did a nice job of moving the ball around," Fritz said.

When asked if she could remember ever playing better for two consecutive games, Hamlin said she couldn't.

K-State started well again in game three, garnering its first four points on kills. Texas Tech fought back and kept the game close until the final point, but K-State won 30-27 to complete the sweep.

Hamlin said K-State might have lost focus in game three.

"I know the first two games, we played really good volleyball," Hamlin said. "We took care of the details and were strong. The third game, I feel like we let down a little bit. I think our serving let up a little there at the end, and if you let up on serving, their passing gets a little better, and their offense gets a little stronger."

Sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg, who started the match one set shy of 500 for her career, said she was pleased her team held off Texas Tech in game three.

"We were still working as hard as we could," Spiegelberg said. "We just wanted to make sure they didn't get that third game. We just had a sense of urgency, I

MLB | Red-hot Indians sweep Kansas City 11-0

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Indians headed into their key three-game series at Chicago playing their best baseball of the year.

Jhonny Peralta, Travis Hafner and Ben Broussard homered, and C.C. Sabathia allowed just five singles over eight innings as the Indians routed the Kansas City Royals 11-0 Sunday to complete a three-game sweep.

The Indians have won five straight and 12 of 13, and have the best record at in the major leagues since July 31 at 33-11.

NFL | Tomlinson runs for TD in record 14th straight game

DENVER — LaDainian Tomlinson of the Chargers ran for a 16-yard touchdown against Denver on Sunday to set an NFL record with TDs rushing in 14 straight games.

Tomlinson

Tomlinson took a pitch from Drew Brees and ran around right end untouched into the end zone to give San Diego a 7-3 lead early in the second quarter.

With the score, he broke the record he shared with John Riggins (1982-83) and George Rogers (1985-86), both of whom set it with the Redskins.

The last team to deny Tomlinson a touchdown rushing was the Broncos, who held him scoreless last Sept. 26 in their 23-13 win at Invesco Field.

More than 100 attend 19th annual band competition

Lead singer for Pineapple Truck, Brandon Cummings, junior in pre-pharmacy, sings the last song of the set during the 19th annual OPUS band competition Friday afternoon in the Bosco Plaza. Pineapple Truck was one of seven bands who performed for students and music fans Friday night.

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A light breeze, students and sunlight streamed into the Bosco Student Plaza Friday evening for the 19th annual Opus Band Competition.

As the competition began to provide a night of local music, about 50 people listened as Kippers Cradle opened. The group of five young men played first in a lineup of seven local, unsigned bands. As Kippers Cradle started to play, more people appeared in the plaza. Students said 70-degree weather seemed to provide a perfect setting.

"We asked for good weather," Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union, said, "And we got it."

Sunlight shimmered on the instruments of Kippers Cradle, Pineapple Truck and Sleepy Head before the sun finally set.

"It's a great time to have it," Lana Costello, freshman in finance, said. "It's nice. It seems to have attracted more people since it started."

Costello said she was attending because she wanted to support her favorite band, Kippers Cradle, who she said had a lot of variety in their music that people might not see in other bands.

"I know some people in the band, and I've heard them before," Costello said. "They all went to school with me."

By the time the last band, Emma's Mine, took the stage, more than 100 people were scattered across Bosco Student Plaza.

"Emma's Mine is a good band," Dane Schmidt, junior in music, said. "I saw them once and they were pretty good, and I have a pretty narrow scope of music that I listen to."

The competition ended at 10 p.m. when the competition came to a close and four local judges conferred on which band was to take home first prize.

The judges deliberated for about 10 minutes before the winners were announced.

First place went to Epiphany, second to Emma's Mine and third was awarded to Calico.

The Union Program Council organized the event, which offered $400 to the winner, $250 to second place and $150 for third.

The judges scored the bands on a scale of 100 points in categories such as stage presence, music quality, creativity, crowd response, musical precision and total package.

The bands were recruited by flyers UPC sent out and by a Web search looking for local bands that might be interested in competing.

Bailey said some bands sought them out and a few played in the competition last year.

At the UPC booth, Mike Katz, senior in psychology, said past turnout for the Opus contests was usually pretty good. The UPC booth was covered with magnets, handouts and light-up yo-yos to entice students.

"It's UPC awareness week," Katz said. "They correspond with the theme 'UPC lights up campus.'"

"The yo-yos and bands created an entertaining evening for many students and the Opus competition offered a good time to all."

Opus Band Competition

- Opus means "a musical composition or set of compositions usually numbered in the order of its issue."
- The judges scored the bands on a scale of 100 points in six various categories: stage presence, music quality, creativity, crowd response, musical precision and total package.
- Participating bands (in order) were Kippers Cradle, Pineapple Truck, Sleepy Head, Epiphany, Calico, Delirium Trigger and Emma's Mine.

Celebrities have short courtships, even shorter marriages

AMY BOLTON

If you didn't read the newspaper or watch any entertainment shows over the weekend, you may have missed the announcement that Renee Zellweger and Kenny Chesney have had their marriage annulled.

You also may have never even known they were a couple.

Zellweger and Chesney were married May 9. They met for the first time on Jan. 15 at the Concert of Hope benefit for tsunami victims, according to People Magazine Online.

The couple confirmed they were having their marriage annulled in a statement Friday, claiming that "the miscommunication of the objective of their marriage at the start" is the reason they're annulling their four-month-old marriage.

In the spirit of short celebrity marriages and even shorter courtships, today we'll take a look at the celebrity marriages most likely to fail.

1. Britney Spears and Kevin Federline

Britney and Kevin met in April 2004 and got engaged in June 2004, just six months after Spears' quickly annulled marriage to childhood friend Jason Alexander, People reported.

While they celebrated their engagement, Federline's ex-girlfriend, actress Star Jackson, gave birth to a son in July 2004 and Spears and Federline were wed on Sept. 18, 2004.

Spears announced her pregnancy this past spring and gave birth to her first child on Sept. 14.

Gee, a quickie annulment, a short courtship, a pregnant ex-fiancée, a fast marriage and a baby in less than a year and a half? Sounds like a recipe for joint custody to me.

2. Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes

According to MSNBC's "The Scoop" gossip column, Cruise told actor Jamie Foxx, "I don't like not being in a relationship." The 43-year-old twice-divorced actor began dating 27-year-old Katie Holmes in April.

Cruise proposed to Holmes at the Eiffel Tower in June, and just hours later they were sharing their happy news with members of the international press.

After beginning a relationship with Cruise, Holmes fired both her manager and agent, according to www.foxnews.com. The Catholic school girl is taking Scientology classes and has a new best friend/manager/spiritual adviser who accompanies her to all interviews and public appearances: Church of Scientology representative Jessica Rodriguez.

Hopefully Holmes will see that just because she dreamed of marrying the movie star Tom Cruise as a little girl doesn't mean she should marry him in real life.

3. Jennifer Lopez and Mark Anthony

Like Cruise, Lopez just has to be in a relationship. Her first marriage, to Ojani Noa, lasted 13 months. Next, she dated Sean Combs (formally "P. Diddy", he is now known as just "Diddy", but at the time he was still "Puff Daddy.") They broke up in February 2001 and by September, Lopez was married, this time to back-up dancer Cris Judd. Lopez split from Judd the following summer and began dating her "Gigli" co-star Ben Affleck. The couple got engaged and almost got married but "Bennifer" broke up for good in January 2004.

Lopez and Anthony were married on June 5, 2004, five months after she split from Affleck and five days after his divorce from Dayanara Torres was finalized (weddings.about.com.)

Actually, maybe this couple will last. Lopez obviously can't stand to be alone, and she's already made it longer with Anthony than any of her previous marriages.

Football shouldn't be about Heisman Trophies, the Bowl Championship Series or five-star recruits.

It should be about the game and doing whatever it take to win, plain and simple.

The games may not be the most exciting, but when it comes down to it, high school football has what the others don't: purity.

Hamlin leads K-State past Tech

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Entering the season, coach Suzie Fritz knew her volleyball team was young and somewhat inexperienced.

But after sweeping Texas Tech 30-17, 30-18, 30-27 in their Big 12 Conference home opener Saturday, the No. 22 Cats (10-1, 2-0) are off to their best start since 1996.

The Red Raiders (6-5, 0-2) had no answer for K-State's offensive attack in the first two games, as the Wildcats posted a .638 hitting percentage on 41 kills – just one kill less than K-State totaled in three games in its win against Oklahoma Wednesday.

In game one, K-State jumped out to an early 8-2 advantage, forcing Texas Tech to take a time out. The Cats coasted to victory behind the right arm of junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin, who was a perfect 7-for-7 on kills.

"I am extremely proud of this program, but you don't get 100 wins by yourself. We've had tremendous players in here and a wonderful coaching staff."
Suzie Fritz
VOLLEYBALL COACH

Texas Tech battled K-State to an 8-8 tie in game two, but Hamlin again found an opening in the Red Raiders' defense. Through two games, the Douglass, Kan., native was 13-for-14 on kills for a .929 hitting percentage.

Fritz said Hamlin played excellent in the first two games, presenting a mismatch that favored K-State.

"They were trying to defend her with one blocker, and she did a nice job of moving the ball around," Fritz said.

When asked if she could remember ever playing better for two consecutive games, Hamlin said she couldn't.

K-State started well again in game three, garnering its first four points on kills. Texas Tech fought back and kept the game close until the final point, but K-State won 30-27 to complete the sweep.

Hamlin said K-State might have lost focus in game three.

"I know the first two games, we played really good volleyball," Hamlin said. "We took care of the details and were strong. The third game, I feel like we let down a little bit. I think our serving let up a little there at the end, and if you let up on serving, their passing gets a little better, and their offense gets a little stronger."

Sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg, who started the match one set shy of 500 for her career, said she was pleased her team held off Texas Tech in game three.

"We were still working as hard as we could," Spiegelberg said. "We just wanted to make sure they didn't get that third game. We just had a sense of urgency, I

MLB | Red-hot Indians sweep Kansas City 11-0

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Indians headed into their key three-game series at Chicago playing their best baseball of the year.

Jhonny Peralta, Travis Hafner and Ben Broussard homered, and C.C. Sabathia allowed just five singles over eight innings as the Indians routed the Kansas City Royals 11-0 Sunday to complete a three-game sweep.

The Indians have won five straight and 12 of 13, and have the best record at in the major leagues since July 31 at 33-11.

NFL | Tomlinson runs for TD in record 14th straight game

DENVER — LaDainian Tomlinson of the Chargers ran for a 16-yard touchdown against Denver on Sunday to set an NFL record with TDs rushing in 14 straight games.

Tomlinson

Tomlinson took a pitch from Drew Brees and ran around right end untouched into the end zone to give San Diego a 7-3 lead early in the second quarter.

With the score, he broke the record he shared with John Riggins (1982-83) and George Rogers (1985-86), both of whom set it with the Redskins.

The last team to deny Tomlinson a touchdown rushing was the Broncos, who held him scoreless last Sept. 26 in their 23-13 win at Invesco Field.

CAR | Newman outduels Stewart for first Chase win

LOUDON, N.H. — Ryan Newman picked a good time to grab his first win of the season.

Newman

Newman, who barely squeezed into the Chase for the championship, got off to a fast start in NASCAR's 10-race playoff Sunday by outdueling points leader Tony Stewart down the stretch.

Stewart, who started from the pole, dominated through much of the race, leading 173 of the 300 laps in the Sylvania 300 at New Hampshire International Speedway. But Newman won a late battle with Stewart, passing him on lap 199 and holding the top spot by two car-lengths.

More than 100 attend 19th annual band competition

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lead singer for Pineapple Truck, Brandon Cummings, junior in pre-pharmacy, sings the last song of the set during the 19th annual OPUS band competition Friday afternoon in the Bosco Plaza. Pineapple Truck was one of seven bands who performed for students and music fans Friday night.

A light breeze, students and sunlight streamed into the Bosco Student Plaza Friday evening for the 19th annual Opus Band Competition.

As the competition began to provide a night of local music, about 50 people listened as Kippers Cradle opened. The group of five young men played first in a lineup of seven local, unsigned bands. As Kippers Cradle started to play, more people appeared in the plaza. Students said 70-degree weather seemed to provide a perfect setting.

"We asked for good weather," Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union, said, "And we got it."

Sunlight shimmered on the instruments of Kippers Cradle, Pineapple Truck and Sleepy Head before the sun finally set.

"It's a great time to have it," Lana Costello, freshman in finance, said. "It's nice. It seems to have attracted more people since it started."

Costello said she was attending because she wanted to support her favorite band, Kippers Cradle, who she said had a lot of variety in their music that people might not see in other bands.

"I know some people in the band, and I've heard them before," Costello said. "They all went to school with me."

By the time the last band, Emma's Mine, took the stage, more than 100 people were scattered across Bosco Student Plaza.

"Emma's Mine is a good band," Dane Schmidt, junior in music, said. "I saw them once and they were pretty good, and I have a pretty narrow scope of music that I listen to."

The competition ended at 10 p.m. when the competition came to a close and four local judges conferred on which band was to take home first prize.

The judges deliberated for about 10 minutes before the winners were announced.

First place went to Epiphany, second to Emma's Mine and third was awarded to Calico.

The Union Program Council organized the event, which offered $400 to the winner, $250 to second place and $150 for third.

The judges scored the bands on a scale of 100 points in categories such as stage presence, music quality, creativity, crowd response, musical precision and total package.

The bands were recruited by flyers UPC sent out and by a Web search looking for local bands that might be interested in competing.

Bailey said some bands sought them out and a few played in the competition last year.

At the UPC booth, Mike Katz, senior in psychology, said past turnout for the Opus contests was usually pretty good. The UPC booth was covered with magnets, handouts and light-up yo-yos to entice students.

"It's UPC awareness week," Katz said. "They correspond with the theme 'UPC lights up campus.'"

"The yo-yos and bands created an entertaining evening for many students and the Opus competition offered a good time to all."

Opus Band Competition

- Opus means "a musical composition or set of compositions usually numbered in the order of its issue."
- The judges scored the bands on a scale of 100 points in six various categories: stage presence, music quality, creativity, crowd response, musical precision and total package.
- Participating bands (in order) were Kippers Cradle, Pineapple Truck, Sleepy Head, Epiphany, Calico, Delirium Trigger and Emma's Mine.

Celebrities have short courtships, even shorter marriages

If you didn't read the newspaper or watch any entertainment shows over the weekend, you may have missed the announcement that Renee Zellweger and Kenny Chesney have had their marriage annulled.

AMY BOLTON

You also may have never even known they were a couple.

Zellweger and Chesney were married May 9. They met for the first time on Jan. 15 at the Concert of Hope benefit for tsunami victims, according to People Magazine Online.

The couple confirmed they were having their marriage annulled in a statement Friday, claiming that "the miscommunication of the objective of their marriage at the start" is the reason they're annulling their four-month-old marriage.

In the spirit of short celebrity marriages and even shorter courtships, today we'll take a look at the celebrity marriages most likely to fail.

1. Britney Spears and Kevin Federline

Britney and Kevin met in April 2004 and got engaged in June 2004, just six months after Spears' quickly annulled marriage to childhood friend Jason Alexander, People reported.

While they celebrated their engagement, Federline's ex-girlfriend, actress Star Jackson, gave birth to a son in July 2004 and Spears and Federline were wed on Sept. 18, 2004.

Spears announced her pregnancy this past spring and gave birth to her first child on Sept. 14.

Gee, a quickie annulment, a short courtship, a pregnant ex-fiancée, a fast marriage and a baby in less than a year and a half? Sounds like a recipe for joint custody to me.

2. Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes

According to MSNBC's "The Scoop" gossip column, Cruise told actor Jamie Foxx, "I don't like not being in a relationship." The 43-year-old twice-divorced actor began dating 27-year-old Katie Holmes in April.

Cruise proposed to Holmes at the Eiffel Tower in June, and just hours later they were sharing their happy news with members of the international press.

After beginning a relationship with Cruise, Holmes fired both her manager and agent, according to www.foxnews.com. The Catholic school girl is taking Scientology classes and has a new best friend/manager/spiritual adviser who accompanies her to all interviews and public appearances: Church of Scientology representative Jessica Rodriguez.

Hopefully Holmes will see that just because she dreamed of marrying the movie star Tom Cruise as a little girl doesn't mean she should marry him in real life.

3. Jennifer Lopez and Mark Anthony

Like Cruise, Lopez just has to be in a relationship. Her first marriage, to Ojani Noa, lasted 13 months. Next, she dated Sean Combs (formally "P. Diddy", he is now known as just "Diddy", but at the time he was still "Puff Daddy.") They broke up in February 2001 and by September, Lopez was married, this time to back-up dancer Cris Judd. Lopez split from Judd the following summer and began dating her "Gigli" co-star Ben Affleck. The couple got engaged and almost got married but "Bennifer" broke up for good in January 2004.

Lopez and Anthony were married on June 5, 2004, five months after she split from Affleck and five days after his divorce from Dayanara Torres was finalized (weddings.about.com.)

Actually, maybe this couple will last. Lopez obviously can't stand to be alone, and she's already made it longer with Anthony than any of her previous marriages.

Governmental mail helps legislators

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

According to a recent Congressional Management Foundation report, Congress has received four times more communications from citizens in 2004 than in 1995 and the primary increase is due to Internet-based communications.

In 2004, the House of Representatives received more than 10 million communications by post and 99 million via the Internet. The Senate received nearly 8 million post-marked communications and 83 million Internet communications.

All forms of communication combined, Congress received about 200 million communications in 2004.

"My office has seen a significant increase in the amount of communication from constituents," U.S. Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., said. "Between 2002 and 2003, mail increased by 22 percent. Between 2003 and 2004, mail increased by 43 percent. For 2005, we have already received more mail than in all of 2003."

The number of citizen communications has also increased on a local level.

"I have seen the change," Kansas Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said. "I'm getting 200 communications every two or three days, and that's even during the summer, when we're not in session."

"I'm getting 200 communications every two or three days, and that's even during the summer."

Sydney Carlin
STATE REPRESENTATIVE

However, City Manager Ron Fehr said on the city government level, the amount of communications has remained consistent, though it is more difficult to determine.

"It's a little different because our elected officials with the city are part-time," Fehr said. "My instinct would tell me that at the local level, there's always been a lot of calls and communication because we're pretty handy, as opposed to officials in Washington D.C."

A CMF study surveyed a large majority of congressional staff and found 79 percent believe the Internet has made it easier to become involved in public policy, 55 percent believe it has increased public understanding of Washington, D.C., happenings and 48 percent believe it has made congressmen more responsive to his or her constituents.

"The Internet has been tremendously useful in making information on what Congress is working on available to Kansans," Moran said. "The revolution of the Internet and e-mail has made communicating easier, and it helps to hold public officials more accountable – all of which are beneficial to the process."

Congressional offices are devoting more resources to managing the increasing volume of constituent communications.

CMF found that 73 percent of managers surveyed say their offices spend more time on constituent communications than two years ago.

"My office devotes a significant amount of time to corresponding with Kansans, and it's something I make sure to do well," Moran said.

Even with so many messages being received, there are ways to make one's message attention worthy, and even influential.

"I think the first thing you need to do, is put your most important thoughts right at the start, keep them short and make it brief," Carlin said.

CMF also found only 3 percent of staff surveyed said identical form postal mail would have "a lot" of influence on their member if he/she had not yet reached a decision on a particular issue.

In contrast, 44 percent reported individualized postal letters would have a substantial influence.

"While I receive many personal letters from Kansans, there are many more that are form-type letters," Moran said. "I treat all mail with the same level of importance, but it is easier to understand a person's concern when they relate it to their personal experiences."

As so many more citizens are communicating with their officials, it can be assumed that this may represent a trend of growing political involvement.

"The Internet has certainly made news and information about causes and legislation more widely accessible to the public," Moran said. "As more people have access to this information, it is natural to assume that more people will become involved, which is great. A better-informed, more active American public can only help with the political progress in our country."

Police mistake state flower for marijuana

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEL AIRE, Kan. – The police thought they'd found marijuana plants growing in a former mayor's back yard, where his wife sometimes entertains members of the senior citizens' group she leads.

Officers took pictures. They showed them to an assistant district attorney, who took a search warrant application to a judge, who signed it. When police in this Wichita suburb went back to Harold and Carolyn Smith's house for a closer look, they found sunflowers.

The couple had grown the plants from seeds given to them by their son, a wildlife biologist.

Kansas is, of course, the Sunflower State, which made the error even more baffling, the Smiths' attorney said.

"That plant on our state flag is not a marijuana plant, but a sunflower," said the attorney, Dan Monnat, of Wichita.

Bel Aire Mayor Brian Withrow, an associate professor of criminal justice at Wichita State University, has hired as consultant a university colleague, Michael Birzer to look into the Sept. 6 search and the events that led up to it.

On Birzer's list of questions to answer, Withrow said, is the obvious: "How did we make this mistake?"

The Smiths have hired him to do the same thing, Monnat said.

"These are very community-oriented people who have been active in their community affairs for years," he said. "I think it's probably fair to say they care much less about the idea of a lawsuit than they do about assuring the citizens of Bel Aire that they have competent police officers who will protect the rights of everyone."

During the search, Monnat said, at least 10 officers went through the Smiths' house, checking drawers and closets and videotaping everything.

The tape has not been returned, Monnat said.

Withrow said the plants weren't blooming at the time, but Monnat said some were and noted that police would have had to drive past many other sunflower plants on their way to the home to search it.

Harold Smith served as mayor from 1991 to 1998, leaving office before serving all of his fourth and final term.

University cutting back on subscriptions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – As state money for higher education gets harder to come by, the University of Kansas is saving money wherever it can.

That includes cutting back on its subscriptions to scholarly journals, some of which carry annual price tags in the thousands.

But some faculty members say the strategy hurts their ability to do research.

"No one can do without them," economics professor Mohamed El-Hodiri said. "They're forcing us to pick and choose. How do I know that the one I choose is the one I'm going to need tomorrow?"

And if professors can't keep up on the latest research, El-Hodiri said, their students' education will suffer.

"If you don't know what's happening in the research, you cannot teach, or you're going to teach stale stuff," he said.

But university officials said the cost of subscriptions, which range from a few hundred dollars to $20,000 or so a year, makes some cuts necessary.

The university, which recently started a three-year review of its periodicals subscriptions, would need $1.1 million beyond its current budget to maintain its current level. The school has come up with $600,000 of that total, but must cut out $500,000 in subscriptions.

"That's essentially been the trend: Spend more, get less," said Bill Myers, director of library development at the university

But with many institutions publishing research on the Internet, paper subscriptions might become unnecessary.

"Who cares about the price of scholarly journals if the material is available?" Provost David Shulenburger said.

Interlibrary loan programs with other universities also help, Myers said.

"I think institutions like ours have gotten more versatile in trying to cope with the increasing costs of serials," he said. "The objective is to try to advance knowledge as quickly as possible."

NSCS | Honor society offers scholarships, internships

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Mark Miller, sophomore in mechanical engineering, shakes hands with National Society of Collegiate Scholars chapter president Ashley Marie Oehm, junior in modern languages, after the Induction Convocation Saturday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

"This group gives you the opportunity to be involved and to be an impact on the world," Cortez said.

NSCS is a college honor society which honors and inspires academic excellence.

To be inducted into NSCS, students must have a GPA of 3.4 or above, be in the top 20 percent of their class and have sophomore standing.

Members of the group perform service projects and facilitate social activities.

"It's a great way to network," said Erin Bodlak, junior in elementary education and NSCS secretary. "And it's a good way to meet with students who have high standards."

NSCS offers scholarship programs, internship resources and other opportunities to broaden education.

K-State is listed as a silver star chapter, meaning it upholds the standards of the national organization.

"It's great to be part of a national society," LaToyia R. Johnson, sophomore in pre-nursing and newly inducted member said.

guess, out on the court."

The Wildcats, who averaged 16 kills per game for a .258 hitting percentage heading into Saturday, finished the match with 56 kills in three games for a .470 hitting percentage.

Hamlin led the team with 15 kills and five block assists. Junior outside hitter Sandy Werner added 12 kills while Spiegelberg totaled 48 assists, breaking her career high for a three-game match.

FRITZ HONORED FOR 100TH WIN

Before the game, director of athletics Tim Weiser presented Fritz with a commemorative volleyball for her 100th career win, which came against Oklahoma Wednesday.

Fritz, in her fifth season, became the fastest K-State volleyball coach to reach the milestone.

"I didn't know it was going to happen, so I was a little surprised by it," Fritz said. "I am extremely proud of this program, but you don't get 100 wins by yourself. We've had tremendous players in here and a wonderful coaching staff."

ROTC prepares students to serve

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Will LaChance grew up with a strong military family. His father had been an active member of the military. For him, military training had always been a way of life.

Following the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, he realized it might be his turn to do his part.

After high school graduation, the senior in secondary education wanted to do something for his country.

Upon his enrollment at K-State, LaChance chose to participate in the military by taking part of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps program.

Reflecting on his experiences in ROTC, LaChance said what he gained has proved to be extremely valuable.

"What is gained are incredible leadership skills and the opportunity to perform as leaders that is useful in all areas of life," he said. "The program is a lot more than just wearing a uniform and running and crawling in the mud."

LaChance said the K-State program taught him excellent discipline among other quality traits.

"The ROTC prepares us for our chosen professional career by requiring us to do things normal students would not, like having to run at 5:30 in the morning," he said.

The Army ROTC program on the K-State campus has been training cadets since the Kansas State opened and prepares officers for all types of military work.

"The ROTC program here at K-State is such a strong program," cadet Bret Stuber, junior in mechanical engineering, said.

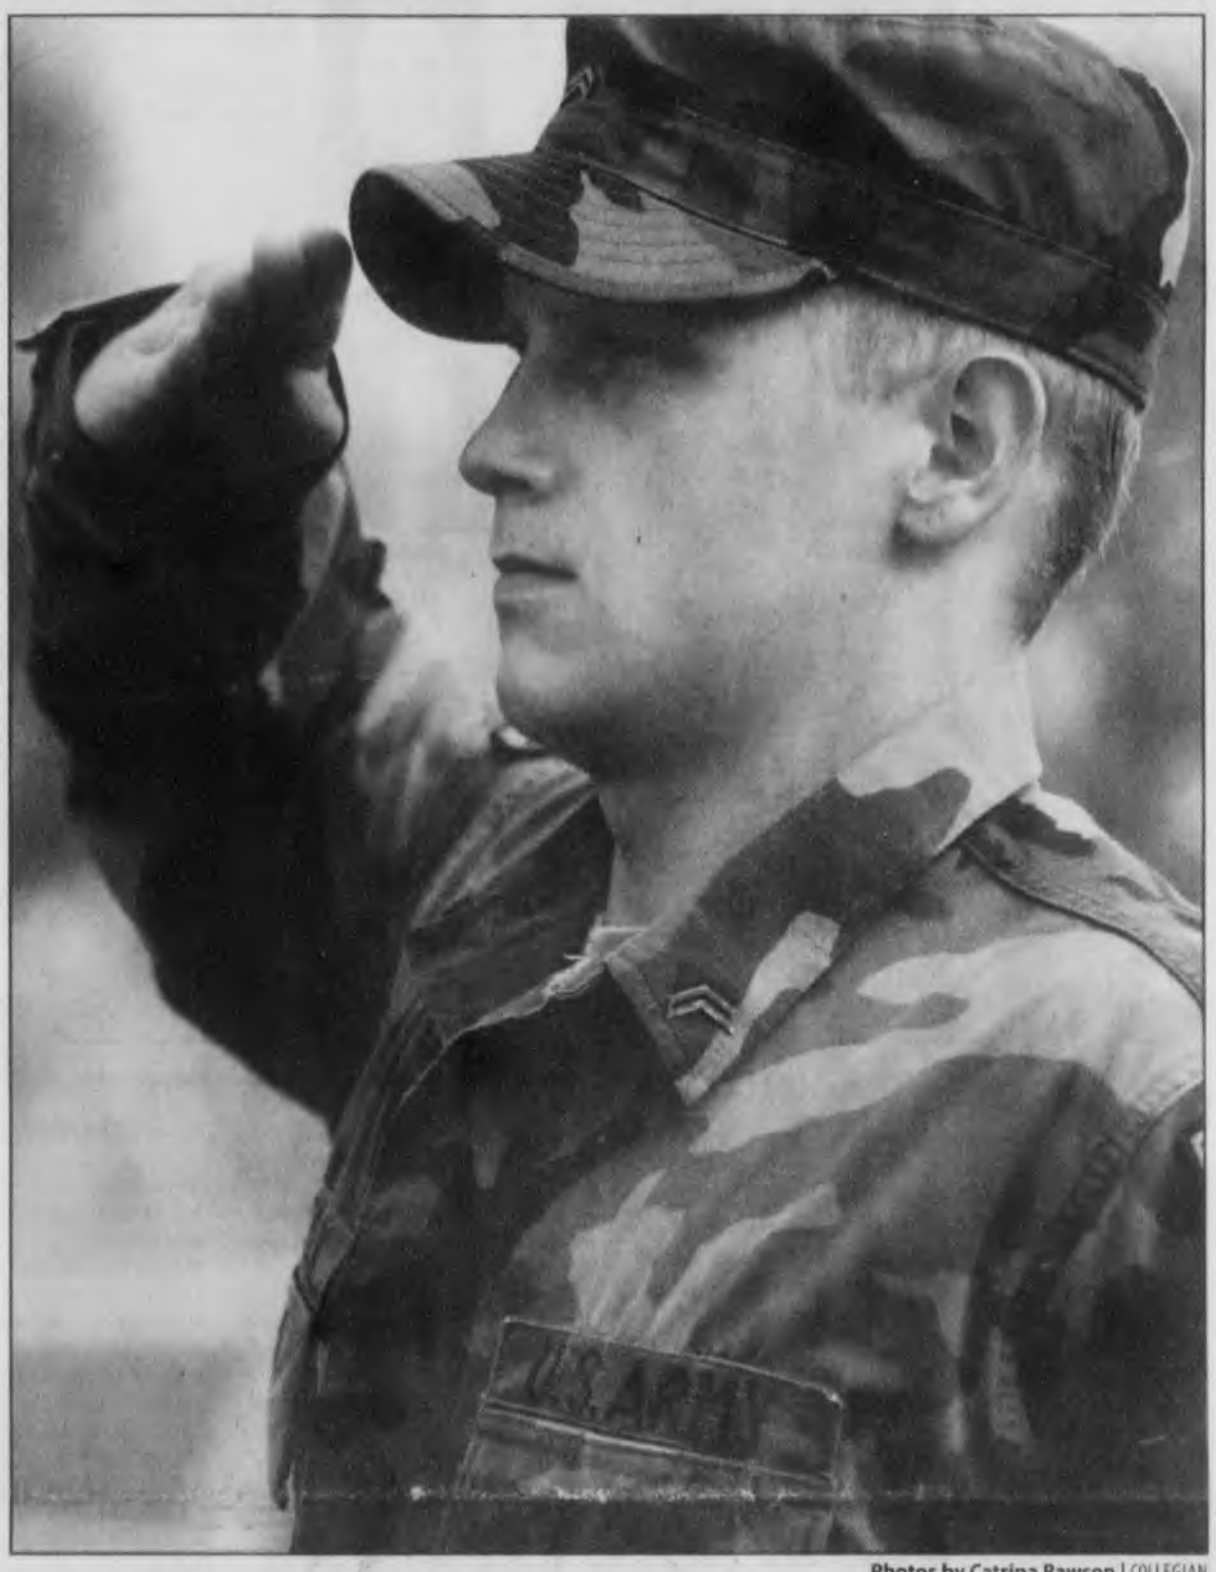
"Learning how to delegate orders to members of a group is a needed skill for anyone."

Stuber said the feeling of camaraderie among the cadets is amazing and by living army values, they learn important life lessons.

"The ROTC has some extremely intelligent people involved, we have many people that want to be engineers," he said.

"But not only that, most of the guys and girls have extremely big hearts as well."

Lt. Col. Arthur DeGroat, professor of military science, said ROTC programs were originally designed as an alternative to West Point Academy.



"ROTC brings in people from all walks of society to state colleges and enables them to experience the college lifestyle while preparing them as cadets," he said. "We deliver a world-class program while minimizing the time devoted by the student so they can engage as students."

DeGroat said much of the coaching and mentoring is done by the upper-class cadets through a chain of command.

"There is a strong, active support structure in place making sure each cadet is progressively advancing toward their degree," he said.

Cadet Paul Borgmeyer, senior in construction science management, said ROTC is a class on a student's schedule and involvement requires much time management.

"The structure of the program is such that academics do come first," he said. "The program works around a student's education by finding the time to meet the requirements and designated tasks."

David Bulcock, sophomore in political science, stands at attention during a training lab for Army ROTC, Sept. 13. Platoon leaders helped each platoon practice training exercises from 2:30 to 6 p.m.

Bret Stuber, junior in mechanical engineering, looks on as other Army ROTC students correct their spacing between each other. The Army ROTC program has been around since K-State first opened.

Student arrested for fight at party

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student was arrested early Sunday morning for fighting at a party, said Lt. Mike Quintanar with the Riley County Police Department.

At 1:35 a.m., Andrew Barnard, 204 Brookmont Drive, was arrested on three counts of aggravated assault, four counts of battery, one count of criminal restraint and one count of witness or victim intimidation according to the police report.

Quintanar said Barnard was drinking at a party at his home where he started arguing with his girlfriend. Friends saw the dispute and tried to restrain Barnard when threatened them with a kitchen knife, Quintanar said. No one was injured.

Barnard was released on a $10,000 bond.

Riley County approves Teen Court

By Humberto Gonzalez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

First-time, non-violent youth offenders between 10 and 18 years old throughout Riley County will continue to face a Teen Court, consisting of high school juniors and seniors within Riley County.

According to www.youthcourt.net, the Riley County Teen Court program is part of the National Youth Court Center, which serves as a central point of contact for youth court programs across the nation.

Shelly Williams, juvenile services supervisor, said the court is solely community driven, not by the state or federal government.

The new court system closely resembles what K-State has in the form of Student Governing Association Judicial Board, where peers govern peers.

Kathy Carpenter, Riley County attorney's office legal assistant, said typically most offenses are shoplifting and minors in possession of alcohol.

The sanctions handed out by the Teen Court usually consist of letters of apology, community service ranging from 25 to 50 hours, an $80 Teen Court fee and, in some cases, a verbal apology to the teen's parents, Carpenter said.

The Teen Court Program, begun in 1998, is primarily funded through grants to reach the yearly expenditure of nearly $42,000, with Riley County providing the difference in funding. Throughout this year, funding the court has been a county problem. Carpenter said this year the program has been $10,000 short for expenses.

Regardless of minor financial struggles, Riley County Commissioners voted unanimously on Sept. 12 to make Teen Court a permanent county program.

Bob Newsome, Riley County commissioner, said the benefits of Teen Court outweigh the costs. He said Teen Court is proven to effectively reduce repeated offenses, rather than those handled in Business relocates to Aggieville, satisfied with changes

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ArTech Promotions, Inc. has found a new home.

The business moved to 1126 Moro St. in Aggieville over the summer from its old location on Third Street. It opened its doors in early July in the building formerly known as the Futon Store.

ArTech makes promotional products and personalized awards and engravings.

The store's front space displays examples of promotional items on the east side and personalized awards on the west.

The building is twice as large as the original, where the business had been operating for about 12 years, David R. Mack, president of ArTech Promotions, said. He said he liked not having to deal with stairs anymore, as the old location was split between two floors.

The business has faced obstacles with

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

New Orleans closed

Under pressure from President Bush and other top federal officials, the mayor suspended the reopening of large portions of the city Monday and instead ordered nearly everyone out because of the risk of a new round of flooding from a tropical storm on the way.

Fair attendance good

Even with high gas prices keeping some people away early in the Kansas State Fair's run, officials were happy with this year's attendance figures. The biggest draw was a grandstand performance of Garrison Keillor's "A Prairie Home Companion," which packed in about 9,000 spectators.

Explosion kills 2

An oil rig explosion that killed two workers and injured a third might not have been an accident, authorities said Monday. The Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the Kansas State Fire Marshal's office and the Montgomery County Sheriff's Department are offering a $10,000 reward for information leading to an arrest in the case.

DON'T FORGET

The All-University Career Fair will be from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. today and Wednesday in Bramlage Coliseum.

A proclamation of Community Cultural Harmony Week will be at 7 tonight at City Hall, 1101 Poyntz Ave. by Mayor Ed Klimek.

The 13th Step Blues Rock Band with Greg Monty will be at 7 tonight in Union Station as part of "Tuesday night Buzz" by Union Program Council.

Old cell phones can have afterlife benefiting others

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Those old cell phones sitting in the bottom of a desk drawer might be worth some cash.

Or at least they can be donated to a good cause.

A CNNMoney statistic stated the average person usually buys one phone per year, and taking that number times the 153 million cell phone users in the United States leads to several unused cell phones.

Today, organizations exist that will pay consumers for any unused phones.

For instance, Web site www.cellforcash.com offers money based on the model and year of a consumer's cell phone.

Other organizations distribute donated cell phones to women's shelters and domestic violence victims.

Todd Gaines, assistant sales manager for Cellular One, 1115 Westloop Plaza, said the company often refers customers to the battered women's shelters to drop off old phones.

The donation, he explained, would benefit victims protecting themselves from violence.

"They usually prefer phones that are two years or less old," he said.

Mitch Myers, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said he has three to four old phones sitting in the bottom of his desk.

"I'd donate them if I knew where to go," he said.

However, he also admitted he would be more interested in actually selling them.

"Yeah, I'd probably take the money," he said.

Frank Beer, owner of Radio Shack, 614 Fort Riley Blvd., said it is a common practice to recycle used phones.

He said he usually refers three to four people a month to donate their phones to local family shelters.

"They accept any phone that works with a battery and that has a charger," he said.

Beer said these donations ensure families' safety because emergency phone calls are free of charge.

Verizon Wireless HopeLine is a branch of Verizon Wireless that supports survivors of domestic violence.

"We take in old phones and either recycle them or refurbish and sell them," Verizon spokesperson Debra Lewis said.

"We use the proceeds to support domestic violence and awareness across the country. We will also use our proceeds to purchase new phones for those who have survived domestic violence and are beginning their new life."

She also commented on the pollution old cell phones create when thrown away.

"Our organization also helps for the environment," she said.

"The bottom line is, we turn old phones into money that supports a cause which influences people all over the country."

Verizon Wireless HopeLine has been donating phones since 2001, and Lewis said more than 250,000 phones were collected in 2004.

"You can just drop your used phones off at any of our locations," she said. "We really appreciate those who donate."

TO THE POINT

Teenagers aren't trained to handle court

The Teen Court system worked well in the TV show "Saved By the Bell," where students decided their peers' fates and in the end, everybody hugged and smiled.

Too bad the real world isn't like that.

The Riley County Commission is planning to retain the Teen Court system, funded by Riley County and promising to save tax payers money while making juveniles walk the straight-and-narrow.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Only this path toward righteousness is as crooked as Roy Williams and the Kansas basketball program.

The current proposal for the system, which will cost more than $42,000 each year, calls for it to be paid by grants and, if all else fails, Riley County citizens.

That means you.

Funding isn't the most glaring concern, though.

The students delivering punishment are typically juniors and seniors in high school, not people who have the legal training necessary to make proper decisions.

Their ability to hand out punishment is curtailed by the very design of the system, and the types of cases they can decide is so limited that the adult court system is hardly alleviated of any burden.

Real-world decisions need to be met with real-world consequences. Leave the Teen Court to cable reruns.

Taking the pain

Columnist recalls rape in hopes of helping others overcome fears

Illustrations by Jordan Mizell
COLLEGIAN

My sophomore year at K-State, I was raped.

I just now am able to look people in the eye again. Not flinch away from being touched.

I never reported it.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

I just went back to the dorm and turned on the water as hot as it would go. Trying to burn his touch off of me – out of me.

I didn't leave my room for nearly two weeks.

When I finally did go to Lafene Health Center, I was such a wreck I could barely talk.

I think the worst thing was he kept calling and crying, asking why I wouldn't see him anymore.

I shut the ringer off so I wouldn't hear the phone when he called.

When someone throws you down, when he slaps you so hard your ears ring, when you scream and he puts his hand over your mouth and tells you to be quiet or you could get him in trouble, isn't that rape?

He didn't seem to think so. He sent me roses.

He was a fairly large guy. More than six-feet-tall. I had to stand on my toes to kiss him.

I did go to his room, I did kiss him. He had made it obvious he wanted more, but I didn't yet.

If I had gone to the Women's Center, they could have told me it was rape. That it happens to other people too. It happens here in Manhattan, at K-State.

If I had told Lafene what had happened, the counseling I received might have helped. I might not have ended up at a mental hospital being treated for depression. They could have tested me for STDs and I wouldn't have worried about what I might have caught from him. I wouldn't have worried about possibly being pregnant.

If I had contacted the police, I might have prevented him from doing it to someone else. That's the thing about rape. You think you're the only one, and you're probably not. I doubt if I was the first one he did that to, and I probably wasn't the last. But I'll never know, because I didn't tell anyone.

And it has affected my whole life.

I had at least three more breakdowns after I left K-State for the mental hospital.

They had a preacher or priest, or whatever the hell he was who talked to the patients. I suppose he thought he was helping me when he told me God loved me and with his help I wouldn't want to die anymore.

So where was he while I was being raped? When blood from my split lip was running onto the sheets?

Watching?

I dropped out of school, came back, dropped out again, came back, beginning a cycle that would last for years.

I still bear the scars on my ankle where I tore at myself. The first tattoo I got acted as a visible scar.

I wish now I had told someone at Lafene, at the Women's Center or even the police, before I went through years of hell at my own hand.

Because I caused more damage to myself than he ever did.

Money no reason for couples to tie the knot

Kansas officials and representatives sure love marriage.

JACI BOYDSTON

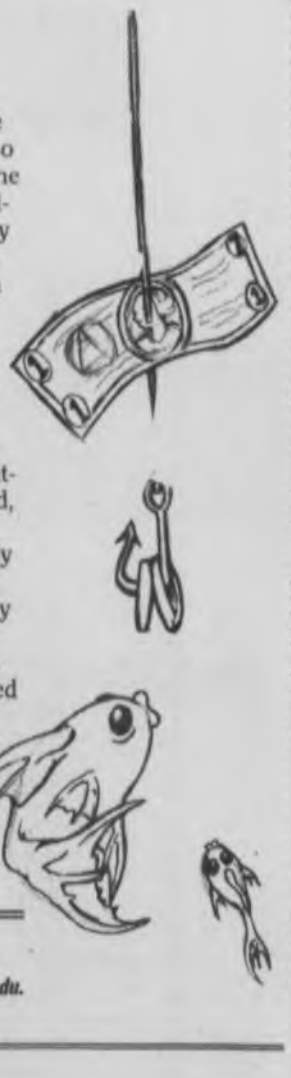
They loved it so much in 1867 that they wanted to make sure only morally upstanding people could enter into it, passing state laws defining marriage as a "civil contract between two parties who are of opposite sex." They also announced same-sex marriages performed in other states would not be valid here in God's country.

Last spring, although no one was formally challenging these 138-year-old laws, state officials wanted to make sure no one they deemed unacceptable, tried to surreptitiously obtain a marriage license. They proposed a state constitutional amendment banning gay marriage, authoring it in a way that made the possibility of same-sex partners obtaining insurance and health care-related benefits unlikely. The amendment passed overwhelmingly.

Now, another Kansan loves marriage so much he's trying to spread the love elsewhere.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., has proposed the federal government bribe low-income couples in Washington, D.C., to get married, a measure that purports to be in the best interest of the children in our nation's capital.

According to a Sept. 14 report by The Associated Press, more than half of Washington, D.C., children are raised by single parents. Brownback, who told the AP that "stable, intact families" are the best environments in which to raise children, apparently thinks dangling a monetary carrot in front of low-income, unmarried couples with children will somehow magically transform them into stable, intact families.



Under Brownback's proposal, the federal government would provide qualified Washington, D.C., couples who "choose" to get married with up to $9,000 to buy a house, start a business or finance a college education. The system would be one of matching contributions – for example, for every dollar the couple saves, the government would add three.

Apparently, bribing heterosexual couples to get married when they have no interest in marriage and possibly no interest in each other is a better way to create "stable, intact families" than allowing committed, loving homosexual couples who have been together for years to get married.

I guess it's not important that children be raised in safe, peaceful homes with one or two parents who love them. What really matters is children have one mommy and one daddy, regardless of how much they fight, scream or bring violence into the home.

Brownback's heart is certainly in the right place here, but his method is ridiculous. If couples wanted to become "stable, intact families," they would do so without government interference. No one in Washington, D.C., is saying to his girlfriend, "Gee, baby, I'd sure love to marry you and create a loving family in which to raise our children, but I'm waiting on $9,000 in matching contributions from the federal government." This proposal would serve only to force together incompatible people who have no business being married and who will never live up to Brownback's ideal of a "stable family." How are children benefited by being raised in a home where cold, hard cash and government hand-outs are more important than love and family values? If implemented, this proposal will cause everyone to lose: the unhappy couples forced together by monetary incentives, the children forced to live in unhappy homes and the taxpayers forced to foot the bill for this idea.

Children do not belong in homes of momentary convenience. They belong in homes where someone, whether gay, straight, married or single loves them.

Portraits to be taken until mid-October

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can smile for the Royal Purple yearbook camera until Oct. 14.

Yearbook portraits will be taken at greek houses, the K-State Student Union and the College of Veterinary Medicine Monday through Friday until mid-October.

Three Thornton Studio photographers will be in Manhattan for seven weeks to take student portraits. It is the studio's sixth year working at K-State.

The photographers see 70 to 170 people at two greek houses per day, Jack Wilding, Thornton Studio photographer, said.

Jessica Oliver, freshman in psychology and member of Alpha Delta Pi, had her portrait taken at her sorority house Monday.

"I took it to be remembered as something I'm a part of in my college career, for K-State to have a record that I was here," she said.

The Union portraits are geared toward off-campus students and those wanting senior portraits in a cap and gown, which the studio provides.

All portraits are taken on film and shipped to the studio's New York office for developing. Proofs are then sent to students or their families. Different packages are available for purchase.

There is no charge to be photographed and no obligation to purchase portraits. For a complete schedule of portrait dates and locations, see www.royalpurple.ksu.edu.

"We hope we do such fabulous work that people will say, 'I just have to have a picture,'" Wilding said.

Thornton Studio photographs students at 50 to 60 universities from Maine to New Mexico, Wilding said.

"It's pretty much a class act," he said. "They really deliver a finished product, a quality product."

Intersection, the 2006 yearbook, has sold 700 to 800 copies so far, Lindsay Porter, Royal Purple editor in chief, said.

"Right now our numbers are down a little, but we'll get a rush," she said.

Porter said the staff expects to sell around 3,000 copies of the 496-page book.

Yearbooks can be ordered for $36.95 online, in Kedzie 101 or when portraits are taken. Students can put the cost on their spring tuition bills until Dec. 1.

Interns share experiences

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Journalism students worked across the state and even out of the country this summer.

The students who worked in summer internships will show portfolios and talk with students interested in doing internships.

Instead of making presentations to complete their internship credits, this year students will be at 2:30-4:20 p.m. on Sept. 21 in the Kedzie Library for others to drop in for information, said Marlene Franke, A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications administrative officer.

Fifteen students will be available on Sept. 21. Two fairs will be in October, where more students will tell about their experiences.

Michael Blanco, senior in electronic media, did an internship with Union Broadcasting in Leawood, Kan., for two hours of credit. He said the company manages three radio stations – a talk radio station, a sports radio station and one called "The Planet."

Internships are recommended for most journalism and mass communications students. Many find their own internships, but the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communication also posts and distributes information on potential employers.

Snyder downplays leading rusher's arrest

Clayton
RUNNING BACK

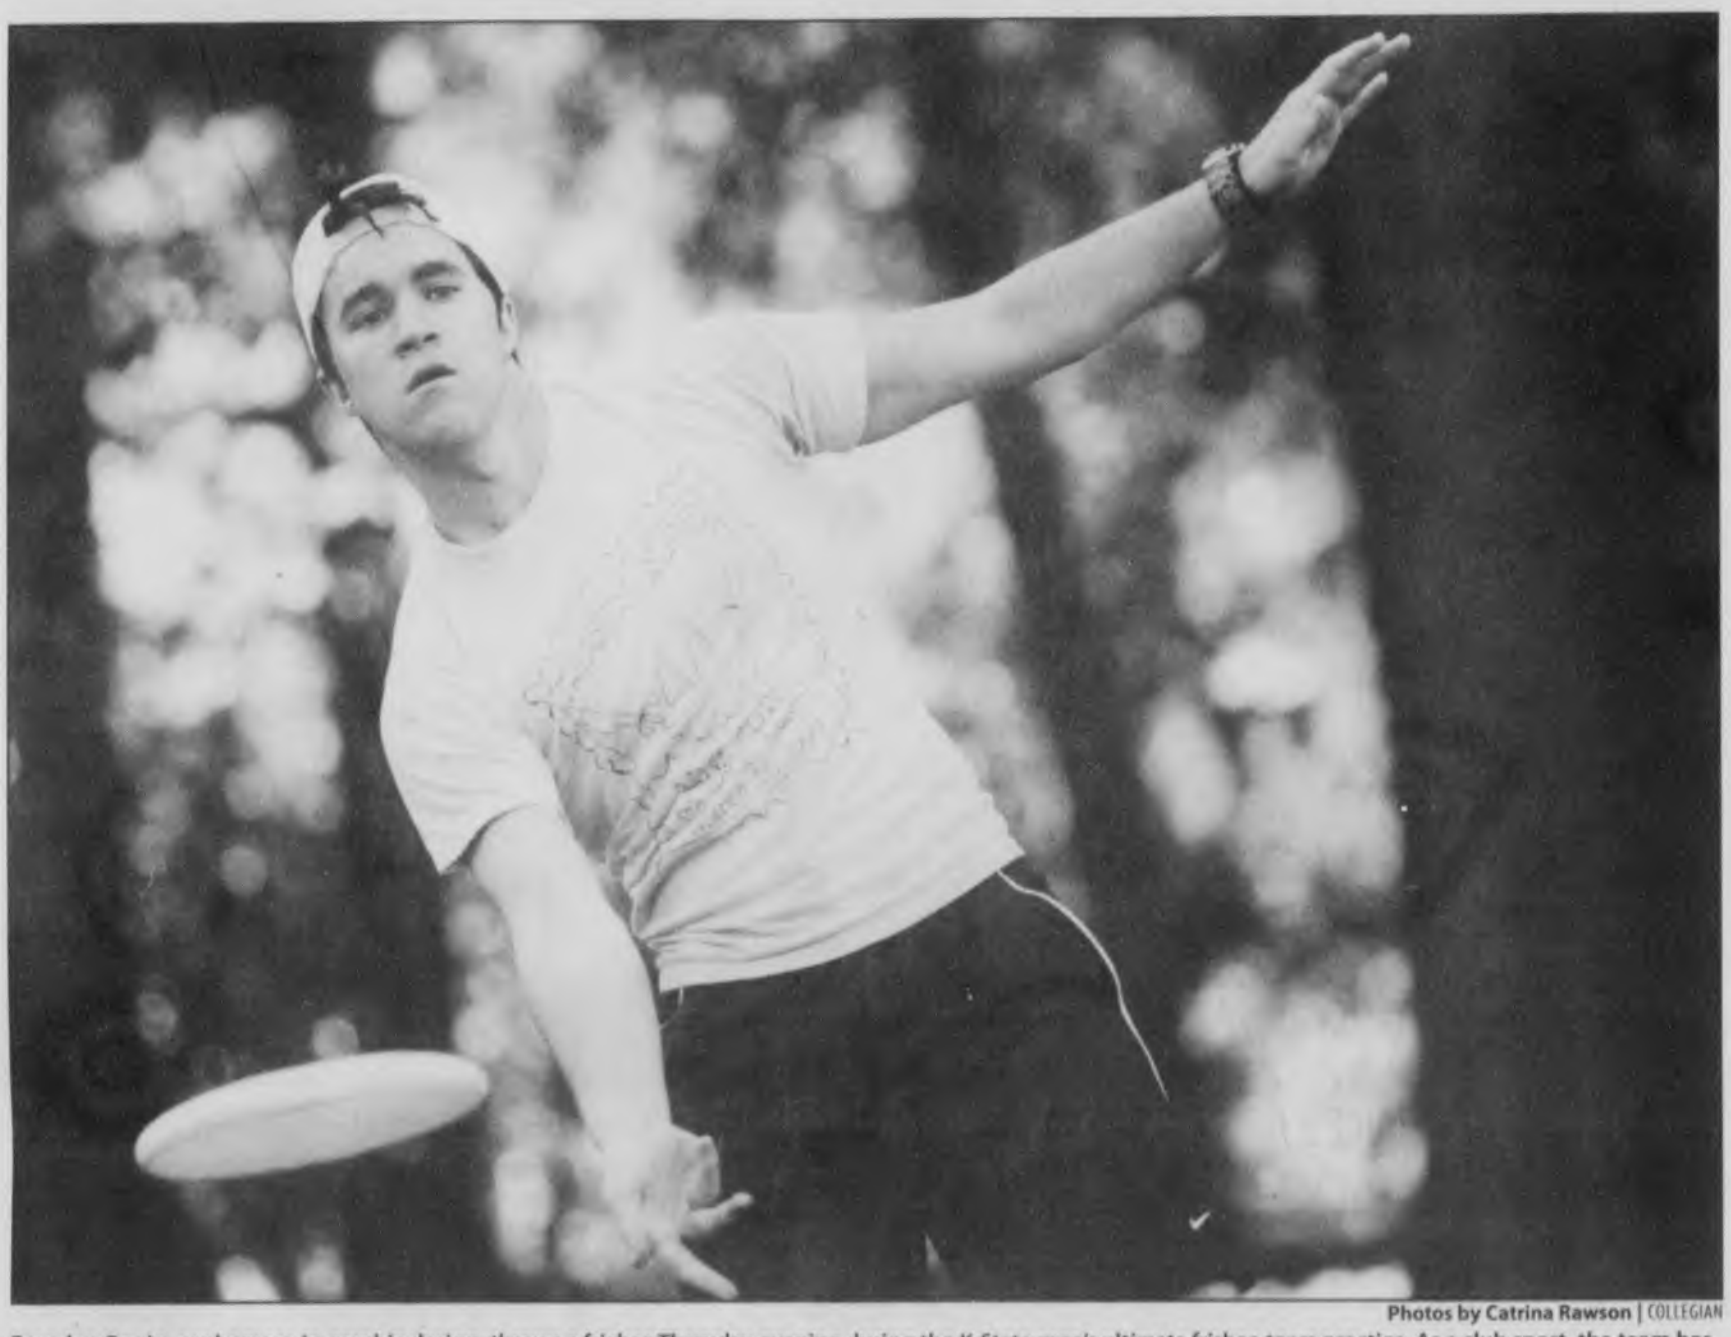
By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The situation involving the arrest of K-State running back Thomas Clayton may not be everything it appears to be, coach Bill Snyder said in his weekly teleconference Monday.

Clayton was arrested Friday afternoon on a charge of aggravated battery against a Parking Services official at K-State.

A K-State Police report said Clayton nearly struck the parking employee with his vehicle as he drove away. At the time, the employee was attempting to put a wheel lock on Clayton's vehicle because of unpaid parking tickets.

Clayton was arrested at the Vanier Football Complex soon after, and was released from the Riley County Jail on $1,000 bail.



"I think we have to kind of let this thing settle down a little bit," Snyder said. "I'm not in a position to elaborate on that, but I don't think it's quite the issue that it was made out to be initially."

However, Snyder did say Clayton made a mistake, and would face punishment for his actions.

"Thomas did make an error in judgment, and he will suffer from very severe consequences because of it," Snyder said. "He didn't purposely do anything other than make a tremendous error in judgment. I think all of that will come front and center here before long."

Clayton, the No. 3 rusher in the nation and the Big 12 Conference's leader in rushing yards, has totaled 329 yards rushing in K-State's two games this season. The Wildcats return to action Saturday against North Texas after a week off.

The 'ultimate' sport

K-State ultimate frisbee club finds ways to be competitive

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's ultimate frisbee team is used to staying out of the spotlight.

As one of the lesser-known club teams at the university, the lack of attention has never really bothered it.

Even so, with its recent taste of success, club members think a little respect is due.

"I am very excited about where our team is headed," Brendan Orwig, sophomore in graphic design, said. "I think we definitely have a bright future."

The team has had its share of frustrations.

With no coach, insufficient funding and a lack of recognition, it is difficult to find enough players willing to take the time to consistently participate, Brett Parker, sophomore in open option, said.

As with any club team, the ultimate frisbee team is almost entirely self-supported financially. This forces the players to find creative ways to raise enough money to compete in tournaments.

Parker said the lack of financial support can be a hindrance to the progression of the team.

"It can get frustrating at times," Parker said. "Fortunately, we find ways to raise enough money to compete in a good amount of tournaments. We are forced to camp out when we go on the road, but that just makes the trips more fun."

Although ultimate frisbee can often be seen as a laid-back sport, the players say it is anything but.

"Ultimate can be a very intense sport when played competitively," Orwig said.

Equestrian team opens season at Truman State Combined Show

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a week of practice under it's saddle, the K-State equestrian team is ready for its first show.

After a week of running, lifting weights and spending as much time at the barn as possible, the K-State western riders will travel to Kirksville, Mo., Saturday and Sunday for the Truman State Combined Show.

Teams from Iowa State, Missouri State, Northwest Missouri State, Truman State and Black Hawk College are expected to join the Wildcats at the show, with a potential surprise competitor from K-State's neighbor to the east.

"The rumor has it that KU has a team, so they could be there," said coach Teresa Slough.

Of all the teams competing at the show, senior Lindsey Hicks said she expects Black Hawk to be the Wildcats' toughest competition.

Hicks said since Black Hawk and K-State have been in the same region, Black Hawk has been K-State's stiffest competition.

"They are purely a horse college, they definitely have a lot of very strong riders," Hicks said.

Because the show is sponsored by International Sports Horse Show, riders from every skill level will be allowed to compete. The K-State team will be taking 23 riders, most of them with previous collegiate riding experience.

"Most of our new riders aren't quite ready to go yet, so we're going to take riders who went last year," Slough said.

Lindsey Salsbury, a returning rider who will be at the show, said she anticipates K-State will succeed in

Chief's band leader a role model

MARK POTTER

It's time for a little Kansas City Chiefs trivia. To whom does All-Pro kick returner Dante Hall give his footballs to after scoring a touchdown at Arrowhead Stadium?

If you are drawing a blank, hopefully Dante will provide plenty of chances to jog your memory this season.

Ever heard of Tony DiPardo?

When I began my internship at AGAPE Marketing Solutions in Overland Park, Kan., this past summer, I hadn't either.

But during the course of the summer, I was honored to get to know this remarkable man.

As I discovered, DiPardo is a big-band era trumpeter whom Chiefs owner Lamar Hunt asked to direct his team's pep band in 1963.

Now 93 years old, "Mr. Music" still braves the weather during home games to lead the TD Pack Band at Chiefs' home games.

With decades of generous giving and loyal commitment, DiPardo is well respected by Chiefs fans and dearly loved by those involved with the Chiefs organization, which the late Hank Stram proved when he made sure DiPardo received a Super Bowl ring.

I met DiPardo as a result of his latest act of generosity: The launch of the Tony DiPardo Instrumental Music Foundation and Scholarship Fund, which awards Kansas City-area musicians with college scholarships to pursue their music educations.

Staff Reports

CFB | Fox Sports Net to air K-State at Oklahoma

Fox Sports Net and the Big 12 Conference announced Monday that the network has selected K-State's league opener at Oklahoma on Oct. 1 to be aired nationally on the cable outlet.

The game will kick off at 6 p.m. and will be the Wildcats' second national television appearance of the season after K-State's victory at Marshall on Sept. 10 was televised nationally on ESPN2.

Fox Sports Net's telecast of the game will mark the sixth straight meeting between K-State and Oklahoma to appear on television.

The Oklahoma game will mark K-State's 30th appearance on Fox Sports Net since the formation of the Big 12 in 1996 and the Wildcats' 16th national broadcast on the network.

CFB | Sooners switching Thompson from QB to WR

Paul Thompson started the season throwing Oklahoma's passes. Now, the junior will be catching the passes.

Thompson

Sooners coach Bob Stoops said Monday that Thompson will be switched to wide receiver.

Thompson, a 6-foot-4 right-hander, bided his time behind Nate Hybl and White to earn the spot as Oklahoma's top quarterback before the season began, but he was replaced by Bomar after the Sooners were upset in their opener by TCU.

NFL | Texans fire offensive coordinator Palmer

HOUSTON — The Houston Texans fired offensive coordinator Chris Palmer on Monday following the team's second straight embarrassing loss.

Palmer

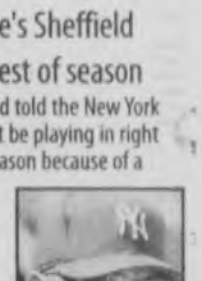
Palmer will be replaced by offensive line coach Joe Pendry, according to a source who asked not to be identified because the team had not yet made the announcement. Coach Dom Capers had his regularly scheduled news conference set for later in the day.

The Texans lost to Pittsburgh 27-7 on Sunday after losing to Buffalo 22-7 in the opener. Houston has averaged the fewest yards (170.5), fewest passing yards (66.5) and points (7) in the NFL through its first two games.

MLB | Yankee's Sheffield likely to DH rest of season

Gary Sheffield told the New York Post that he won't be playing in right field again this season because of a strained left thigh.

Sheffield



"I am done doing that," Sheffield told the newspaper. "I don't see it getting any better."

Although the injury isn't keeping Sheffield on the bench, the slugger is disappointed he isn't able to play in the field.

"I like to make a difference in both places," Sheffield told the Post. "We are a stronger team if I am on the field. I would like to let the guys who are used to being the DH, be the DH."

CYC | Cycling body denies leaking Armstrong papers

AIGLE, Switzerland — Cycling's governing body Monday denied that its president supplied a French sports newspaper with documents used to accuse Lance Armstrong of doping at the 1999 Tour de France.

Armstrong

The International Cycling Union also said World Anti-Doping Agency chief Dick Pound was blocking its investigation by withholding information.

Pound said last week he received a letter from UCI president Hein Verbruggen saying he had provided L'Equipe with forms indicating Armstrong had tested positive for EPO during the first of his seven Tour victories.

DVD RELEASES

"Desperate Housewives: The Complete First Season"

For those viewers who like their television moms slutty, their landscapers eternally shirtless and their evening soap operas made up of equal parts goofy humor, tongue-in-cheek bad taste and midday lingerie, your prayers have been answered. With preposterously revved-up libidos and egos on display in pretty much every scene, the antics on Wisteria Lane make the bed-hopping, back-stabbing freakishness on, say, "Melrose Place" feel like "Upstairs, Downstairs." And we mean that in a good way.

"The Longest Yard" (2005)

Adam Sandler, Chris Rock, Nelly and a cast of big, sweaty, muscle-bound monster men update the 1974 Burt Reynolds prison-football classic for a new generation — meaning, for the most part, that the jokes are more explicit, the racial makeup of the cast is more believable and the bone-crushing hits on the football field sound like bombs going off. Sandler plays pro footballer and felon Paul "Wrecking" Crewe (the role that Reynolds filled in the original), while Burt himself has a minor role as an older con who coaches the prisoners in an epic game against a team consisting of predictably sadistic guards.

"Mallrats: 10th Anniversary Edition" (1995)

Few films were as eagerly anticipated and then critically and commercially reviled as "Mallrats," Kevin Smith's big-budget follow-up to the indie smash "Clerks." Many felt Smith had lost his earlier focus on crassly charming characters, replacing them with goofy, over-the-top pratfalls and shtick. Leave it to the DVD market, however, to give a film a second chance, as it's here that many of Smith's diehard fans first saw and fell in love with the film. Smith's movies tend to work best on the small screen, allowing viewers to both appreciate the intimacy that his writing invokes, and to replay the scenes they missed because they were laughing too hard. Here, Brody (Jason Lee) and T.S. (Jeremy London) head to the mall to hang out and get over recent breakups. That's it. Of course, "hanging out" is never really just "hanging out" in Smith's films, as the two try to win back their girls, sabotage the filming of a game show and meet comic icon Stan Lee.

'New Man' revolution both intriguing, overwhelming

HOLLY KRAMER

When it comes to understanding men these days, I don't know whether to read Esquire magazine, talk to the boys next door or log on to www.askmen.com. It seems like men might be morphing into sophisticated XBOX players, well-dressed binge drinkers and skillful lovers who can listen well and still master the art of a good poop joke.

Something's happening to men. Gone are the good old days of the beer-guzzling, unscrupulous Al Bundy and his woman-hating ways. Welcome to the new era of queer-guy fashionistas and the straight men who seek their help, skin care lines formulated especially for men and the "metrosexual" revolution.

While looking through a magazine recently, I found myself engrossed in a myriad of articles about looking good and feeling great, which foods could fight belly fat and how to determine if I had a successful relationship. However, they weren't in Cosmo, or Glamour Shape. I found them in Men's Health. Suddenly, I found signs of the revolution everywhere I looked.

Thousands of dollars are being spent to market a "New Man." A man who's a polished, stylish gentlemen who knows how to woo women and command men's respect. This new focus on men's products and physical characteristics is refreshing and overwhelming. Could the fabled war between the sexes just be a misunderstanding along the path to a similar destination? Could the guy doing sit-ups next to me at the Peters Recreation Complex really be as concerned about his beer belly as I am about mine? Can women really hope for a man who knows how to dress and style his hair and still embodies the idea of a rugged man in the bedroom? The plot thickens.

I know this is slightly dangerous territory to tread through. Lots of men don't know pomade from volumizing spritz or the best shirt to wear with shoes, or even where they left the remote. Don't worry, women still find that charming.

The idea that it takes men five minutes to fix their hair is attractive, plus it gives us time for the obligatory 10-minute face/body/hair check before a date.

As far as the sex advice men are seeking, the resources couldn't be more alluring or promising. With articles ranging from "Increase Your Bedroom Stamina" to "Set the Scene for Incredible Sex," men and women alike are benefiting from their friends at Esquire, Men's Health, and www.askmen.com. I found myself intrigued by an article about "What Women Really Want" and learned things even I hadn't realized I wanted. I almost started writing down notes. With women's satisfaction as a top-priority, men have never seemed so caring and adventurous and thorough. These guys are good.

Overall, as a woman, I think this "New Man" is fascinating, scrubbed and still one of the guys. Though it might be difficult at first, I believe the man of the future can balance looking good and satisfying their women while holding onto time-honored male traditions.

However, I can say with confidence (and a slight sense of relief) that there will still be games of beer pong played and forgotten, afternoons consisting of more XBOX games than imaginable and an abundance of crass, inappropriate and downright offensive one-liners for men to enjoy. Now if you'll excuse me, I have to go exfoliate my boyfriend's face.

Balanced meals available in Union

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For years Americans have been told they're getting fatter.

According to a recent study conducted by the Harvard School of Public Health, the rising obesity rate is partly because fast food restaurants are within walking distance of schools.

Is students' easy access to fast food restaurants in the K-State Student Union also to blame?

The food pyramid dictates people should eat two to three servings of milk, yogurt, cheese, meats, beans and eggs; three to five servings of vegetables; two to four servings of fruits; and six to 11 servings of breads and pasta per day.

Tina Griffin, food service director for the K-State Student Union, said it is possible to eat balanced meals in the Union.

"There is a very good menu mix," she said. "There is not a lot of fried foods. For example, Market Carvery offers steamed vegetables. A majority of every offering is low in fat."

The Union Governing Board and the Union staff have meetings to discuss which restaurants to bring to the Food Court, based on feedback from surveys given to students each semester.

"Students make those decisions," said Bernard Pitts, Union executive director.

The Union now houses Sandwich Central, Garden Emporium, Chik-fil-A, Market Carvery, Panda Express, Subway, Taco Bell and a Campbell's soup station.

"The choices are there," said Deborah Canter, head of the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics. "It is in (students') own hands as to amounts and choices to make."

Many students agree it is the responsibility of the student to eat a healthy diet.

"It's a choice," Emily Mickelson, junior in advertising said. "It's all mental. Students can choose not to eat it."

A few years ago, Taco Bell left the Union, but later re-opened when a student survey said they wanted it back.

"People are going to eat what they want to eat," Canter said.

Though fast food restaurants are increasingly offering healthier options, students have not always taken advantage of these when offered in the Union, said Ray Myers, Union food service worker for the last 15 years.

"In the past they offered more vegetarian items and healthier food, but it was a waste," Myers said. "No one ate them."

Some students said others may not make healthy decisions because of a lack of knowledge about correct eating habits.

"I don't think a lot of people are educated about what they should eat," Kacie Rognlie, senior in public health and nutrition, said.

The Union provides information about healthier eating options through brochures located to the left of Market Carvery. The brochures address weight control, food pyramids and ways to combat anorexia and bulimia. Lafene Health Center offers individualized nutrition counseling, medical consultants and counseling services to help students.

"Our company's new focus is 'Eat, Learn, Live,'" Griffin said. "We provide educational material on how to guide students on what is healthy for them."

The Union uses many resources to help students stay healthy, including specialty chefs and health labels.

"We have an executive chef with a culinary background who designs the menus of the foods offered and keeps in mind the health issues," Pitts said.

Some foods offered in the Union carry a round green "Smart Choice" label in the lower right-hand corner to indicate healthier foods.

Lafene officials suggest keeping a food diary of foods and amounts eaten. Students can then note where dietary changes can be made.

"There's healthier choices out there," Rognlie said. "It's a matter of whether you choose them or not."

Panda Express redeems more than 500 coupons

By Leann Sulzen

Students trying to read Collegian newspapers left underneath desks in classes Monday may have noticed a section torn out of the front page.

That's because a Panda Express coupon for a free small take-out box of orange chicken was on page 2.

Outgoing Panda Express manager Maria Xie said she received about 500 coupons on days the advertisement ran in the paper. The Collegian's circulation is about 11,500 per day.

The coupons have been in the paper every Monday for three weeks and Collegian advertising manager Brad Simmons said there will be "at least one more" next week because the company purchased a four-week advertisement.

Brett Parker, sophomore in open option, used his coupon Monday to eat Panda Express orange chicken for the first time.

"A friend told me I should grab a Collegian and try it," he said. "I like it a lot, and it's good."

Xie said the advertising campaign will run until October, and continuing the campaign would be up to the incoming manager, Adam Setter.

"It depends on what our budget is, and, since I'm just coming in, I don't know what the numbers are so far," Setter said.

Even if the coupons don't last, Setter and Xie said there will be other promotions, including a special for buying one item and getting one at half price after 3 p.m.

"That promotion will begin as soon as we receive the marketing stuff," Xie said.

With the popularity of the free orange chicken coupon, Panda Express is paying a price, Setter said. He said there was no information available on how much the promotion is costing the restaurant.

"We don't look at it as losing money," Setter said. "It's good brand advertising."

Bradley Matlack, junior in mechanical engineering, said he tried Panda Express with the coupon for the first time Monday, and liked it so much he stocked up.

"I grabbed a bunch of papers for the coupons," he said.

Unlike other places in the Union Food Court, Panda Express is open until 8 p.m. Monday-Friday and 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Setter said business during the evening and weekend has been a little slow, but hopes to improve that with more promotions.

"We are going to start gearing our advertising toward evening business," he said.

With a dream job...*
*Even before you have your degree.

ISAAC OWEN DIDN'T RECEIVE his MBA until May 2005, but he already had a desk — and a future — waiting for him at a health care information technology company in Kansas City when he graduated. He came to TU, from Topeka, Kansas, for its size and for a scholarship, and now he'll be leaving with a set of skills and graduate business degree that will see him through a career.

Of course TU can't promise everyone a job before they have their degree, but with the skills and thought processes you'll get from our world-class faculty, you'll have the tools to go wherever you picture yourself successful.

What's your dream job?

in its first competition.

"That would be very nice, for us to have a great show," said Salsbury.

Hicks added she expects the team to dominate the competition.

"We will be high point team both shows," Hicks said. "We've been able to indoctrinate the new girls and show them the ropes. I don't see us having a problem sweeping the entire show."

With high expectations for their first competition, the first week of practice was devoted to getting back into riding shape, said Slough.

"We've only had one week of practice, so they're still a little bit rusty," Slough said. "This week is just about getting back in the swing of things. Getting back in the saddle and getting focused."

During my first encounter with DiPardo, the man defined the word humble.

Before exiting our office, he gave me a "big Italian hug" and asked for my autograph.

I was stunned. I had never been asked for my autograph before, I haven't since, and I probably won't ever be asked again.

DiPardo is not only a nice, old man, but a living music legend with remarkable health. I pray I can be as active as him when – more like, "if" – I turn 93.

Case in point: Kansas Speedway had a press conference for DiPardo on June 17, but it was no ordinary press conference.

The man, who can't be more than five feet tall, entered Victory Lane to field questions after a few laps around the racetrack at 165 miles per hour.

A 93-year-old man speeding around a racetrack? Now that's courage.

"Oh boy," DiPardo said as he was helped out of his stock car. "Let's go again."

I attended DiPardo's birthday gala Aug. 28 at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center in Kansas City, Mo.

The evening was truly memorable.

Numerous area celebrities came to show their support, including Dante Hall, Chiefs General Manager, Carl Peterson, and Hall of Fame Chiefs quarterback Len Dawson.

During the gala's live auction to raise funds for DiPardo's foundation, Kansas City Mayor Kay Barnes won a Dante Hall autographed book and football for $1,100.

Hall promptly responded by walking across the room to give the mayor a hug.

More than 500 people came to celebrate DiPardo's life that night, and I realized our world needs more Tony DiPardos – humble, generous, courageous individuals thankful for the God-given opportunity to live.

ULTIMATE | Game's image changing

"It requires great conditioning and athleticism just like any other sport."

Brett Wobker, Manhattan resident and three-year team member, said the image of the game is changing.

"I think it used to be a very lazy sport on all levels," Wobker said. "But now, especially on the college level, the game is becoming a lot more competitive and intense."

This fast-paced sport is growing in popularity on college campuses across the nation. More than 300 universities throughout the United States now have ultimate frisbee club teams.

As the game becomes more competitive, the players at K-State know they must work hard to keep up.

For this reason, they have started practicing four times every week.

The team members said they want all the participants they can get.

"If you're an athlete, you can learn to play ultimate quickly," Parker said. "We always have fun with it, so beginners are more than welcome."

The team began its 2005-2006 season this past weekend when it attended a 12-team tournament at Grinnell College in Iowa. Overall, the tournament was a success for the club, placing third with a 4-2 record.

"We were very pleased with our effort and progress over the weekend," Orwig said. "We were excited about our victory over Truman State University, because we had not beaten them in three previous matches."

"It's amazing to see teens interact as they explain their violation to other teens," Carpenter said.

Not only does this system deter youth from becoming repeated offenders, but it is also inexpensive in comparison to the adult court system. Through Teen Court, it costs $600 per youth compared to the $2800 for adults, Newsome said.

"Teen Court allows kids an opportunity to take responsibility for their actions while avoiding a criminal record," Newsome said.

changing its site, but things are coming back together.

"We've lost some of our customers, but we've gained some," Mack said.

He said there were other reasons for the move.

"It's closer to a big part of our client base," he said.

Mack said ArTech sells a large number of personalized awards to the different departments at K-State.

Also, relocating at this point means the business will not be troubled with the upcoming redevelopment of downtown Manhattan.

Plans for this redevelopment – put up for public discussion last month – showed the building in question would likely be bulldozed to make room for new buildings and parking lots along with most of the things in the area.

ArTech's newest products are made with the company's new 30-Watt laser, which allows them to etch or cut designs into glass, marble, wood, leather and other materials.

People choose veggies for different reasons

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People become vegetarians for different reasons.

Some make the decision for religious reasons and some make it for personal reasons.

The People's Grocery and Deli, 517 S. 17th St., has products that cater to meat-eaters and vegetarians.

The store's appeal to vegetarians is its specialization in organic and ethnically produced foods, general manager Wayne Martin said.

"We have a lot of meat substitutes, including tofu and soy products," Martin said. "I think a lot of people become vegetarians because they don't want to eat meat from commercially-produced markets."

Paying attention to cleanliness and production of the food they sell, the store can cater to vegetarians and meat-eaters alike, he said. Martin said about 20 percent of the store's customers are vegetarians.

He said staff members occasionally get questions from vegetarians and try to answer them to the best of their ability. He said they also sell the magazine "Vegetarian Times."

People who venture into vegetarianism generally eat more healthily because they tend to pay attention to what they eat, said Mary Meck Higgins, associate professor with K-State research and extension's department of human nutrition.

"Some just don't eat animal products," Higgins said. "But lots of times they become more aware of what they're eating. They make sure they're not eating a lot of added sugar. They're paying more attention."

A vegetarian diet is not always healthy, though. She said if people cut out meat and milk, as some vegans tend to do, people lose valuable nutrients.

"If you give up milk, you will lose calcium," Higgins said. "Since most people get it from dairy foods, you would have to take supplements or something rich in calcium, like orange juice with added calcium."

Other nutrients vegetarians need to be aware of are Vitamin B12 and iron, she said. Vitamin B12 is only found in animal foods, and iron is most plentiful in meat, Higgins said.

She said another misconception is that cutting meat from a diet is healthy, but people can still have extra fat and sugars in their diet.

"People might still eat junk food and not eat animal products," she said. "They think cutting it out of their diets is healthy, but you're still eating junk food."

Being flexible can be an important attribute to some vegetarians, Higgins said.

"It can be difficult finding places that may contribute to vegetarians who have cut out animal products entirely," she said. "So going out to eat with friends can be a hassle. So being flexible and having an animal product in some situations, like an egg or some milk, might be beneficial."

Several yoga class options open to students

People who are seeking ways to relax can find refuge in 301 Ahearn, during noontime yoga.

With positions varying from the modified prayer twist to the butterfly, between 10 and 20 people attend classes taught by one of four instructors weekdays from noon to 1.

Diana Knox, one of the instructors of noontime yoga, and also an instructor at Pro Fitness, 1125 Laramie St., has been teaching the noontime yoga class for nearly four years.

Many people from the community attend the free classes, as well as employees and students of the university. The classes continue all year long.

"When it gets colder, we get a lot more people," Knox said.

Asha Muthukrishnan, library assistant at Fiedler Engineering Library, has attended the noontime yoga class for more than two years, and it has helped her immensely, she said.

"I had knee pain before I came here, and it really helped me," Muthukrishnan said.

Other locations offer yoga classes in Manhattan, for a fee, but its not a competition, Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center in Holton Hall, said.

"We don't want to compete with other yoga people in town," Allen said.

Pro Fitness offers yoga classes for $5 a visit, Knox said. It is not necessary to be a member of the club.

Prevention key when avoiding insect bites

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BZZZZZZ! SMACK! Students know these sounds of summer all too well: the buzzing of mosquitoes in search of their next meal can ruin anyone's day.

There are many insects and arachnids people must be wary of when spending an extended period of time outdoors. These creatures, and their bites, can have dire effects that range from being a mere nuisance to death, if not treated properly.

The best protection against insects is prevention. There are many simple tips people can follow for safety.

According to the American Red Cross, a person should wear a light-colored long-sleeved shirt, long pants and a hat. The cuffs of the pants should be tucked into the socks to prevent ticks and other insects from venturing up the pant legs. It is also best to avoid tall grass and underbrush when hiking or walking, as this is where most harmful insects tend to dwell.

The best advice for typical days outside is to wear light-colored clothing and insect repellent, the American Red Cross reported.

According to their Web site, light colors are less likely to attract insects. The Red Cross also advises to follow the directions when applying repellant.

The best way to avoid insect stings and bites is to simply leave insects and their nests alone Brady Peterson, sophomore in open-option, said.

Fire ants are known for fiercely protective behavior near their nests. Peterson said one day he and his friends were outside near a nest of fire ants. He ventured too close and they became very aggravated, he said.

"One of them made it up to my neck and bit me," Peterson said. "I found out that I was allergic to fire ants when the bite swelled up over the next couple of days."

Peterson's allergy was not severe. In severe cases, patients suffer from a state called anaphylaxis. Symptoms include itchy hives, difficulty breathing, and nausea/stomach cramps, according to the National Institutes of Health and the American Academy of Allergy, Asthma, and Immunology. It is important to seek medical attention right away if a severe allergic reaction is suspected.

Insects are also very apt to travel indoors. S'Ambrosia Curtis, junior in secondary education, was made aware of this a couple years ago. She had woken up to find multiple spider bites on her hip. There were three bites that formed a trail across the top of her leg, Curtis said. Luckily, the bites did not amount to anything more than an itchy annoyance.

"To this day, I still think it was a vampire who did it," Curtis said.

Fast facts

Insects that bite and sting

■ Ticks: a small, wingless arachnid that lives by hematophagy, or sucking blood from birds and mammals.
Treatment: Using fine tipped tweezers, grasp the tick firmly and pull it directly off or out of the skin. Don't twist the body. Place the tick in alcohol to kill it. Wash the area where the tick was.

■ Insect stings: Wasps, Bees, Hornets etc.:
Treatment: Remove self from the area where stung. Remove the stinger by scraping horizontally against the skin with a credit card or fingernail. Wash area where stung and apply ice to prevent swelling. Get medical attention if swelling does not go down, or other symptoms occur.

■ Spiders: wingless arachnids with eight legs that often build webs to catch prey.
Treatment: Wash area of the bite with soap and cold water, then apply ice for swelling. Get medical attention if swelling persists or other symptoms occur. If bitten by a black widow or brown recluse, get immediate medical care.
Symptoms include: general feeling of sickness, loss of appetite, fever, muscle spasms, and a deep purple or blue area around the bite with a whitish outer ring and a larger red ring surrounding that.

■ Mosquitoes: small, winged insects that suck blood through an elongated, needle-like proboscis (females only)
Treatment: Apply bite area with ice to alleviate swelling. Apply cortisone or other anti-itch cream and avoid scratching the bite if possible. If bite or swelling persists, seek medical attention.

Common woes students battle

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cold weather is just around the corner, and with it comes an array of sniffles and coughs. Some students will nurse a cold on their own, while others will run to the doctor demanding an antibiotic.

Lafene Health Center has a few recommendations for students battling seasonal maladies.

Acute upper respiratory infection, cough and acute pharyngitis are closely related, and are common ailments in the cold season.

"As a general rule, antibiotics for those conditions would probably be discouraged, unless caused by a bacteria, such as strep," Cathie Barry, associate clinical director at Lafene Health Center, said.

Most often, a virus causes those illnesses. Antibiotics are used to treat bacterial infections.

"When I have a cold, I just drink lots of vitamin C and water, try to eat better and rest," Brian Sutton, sophomore in anthropology, said. "I'm usually over it in a day or two."

This common-sense approach is in line with Barry's recommendations. She also suggests taking preventative measures, such as frequent hand washing, not sharing cell phones, and coughing into the elbow, rather than the hand.

Barry said smoking and second-hand smoke exposure, as well as alcohol consumption can strain the immune system.

With freezing temperatures comes ice – and ankle injuries. Students may be tempted to ignore a sore ankle, but that sprain may actually be a small fracture. Barry suggests medical attention for a swollen ankle to prevent further damage.

"Urinary tract infections are a more common complaint among female students," Barry said. Drink lots of fluids, but avoid caffeine for this problem. Most of the time an antibiotic is prescribed, and medication can be given to numb the bladder.

Influenza can last two to three weeks. While many people associate the flu with vomiting, it can be much more severe. Influenza is a respiratory infection, accompanied with high fever, muscle aches and nausea can also be a factor.

An anti-viral medication can be prescribed to reduce flu symptoms and the length of the illness, but it should be administered within the first two or three days.

Who to call if illness arises

By Iris Kalkofen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You're feeling kind of down, runny nose and running a temperature. What do you do?

"Students who aren't feeling well and want to see a medical provider should call Lafene's appointment line," Carol Kennedy, director of Health Promotions/Nutrition Counseling, said. "Students who feel like they need to be seen right away can walk in and they see a triage nurse. The triage nurse will then schedule them with a doctor."

Students who get sick should first determine if they're too sick to go to class.

"Then they should rest, maintain hydration and if they aren't getting better and they feel like they're getting worse, then they probably should go see a doctor, especially if they don't know what it is," Kennedy said.

Kennedy also said students who feel as if their condition is bad enough also have the option of calling Mercy Regional Health Center.

"They could also call and talk to the emergency room to determine if they need to come in immediately or not," Kennedy said. "If you are getting sick then stay away from others so you don't get them sick."

Students urged to have protected sex

By Iris Kalkofen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some college students choose to be sexually active. It's a fact that Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators have come to terms with.

"We realize that college students are going to have sex so we encourage them to use condoms and to get tested for sexually transmitted diseases," said Alison Filla, junior in public health nutrition and SHAPE member.

"Most STDs don't have symptoms," said Wendy Blank, director of the women's clinic at Lafene Health Center. "Chlamydia and gonorrhea don't have symptoms 75 percent of the time, but students should be tested any way because of potential complications like pelvic inflammatory disease."

"A bump on the genitals should be looked at – especially if it doesn't go away," Blank said.

Such symptoms could mean the patient might have human papillomavirus, more commonly known as genital warts. Other symptoms to look for include "blisters or sores on the genitals, which could mean a possible herpes infection, which can be very painful," Blank said.

Anyone suffering from any of these symptoms or who has any other concerns should contact a doctor immediately.

"Another big thing about testing is that with AIDS, there is a six month waiting period," Filla said. "It's important that concerned individuals get checked and then rechecked six months later."

AIDS is changing its demographics.

"There is a movement from drug using population to a younger population," said Marlin Wilson, Disease Intervention Specialist with the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. "The median age has dropped. AIDS is also moving out of the gay community and into bisexuals and the number of cases is still going up at the same rate it has been. One advantage is that individuals are living a lot longer and living a better life. Another advantage is that doctors are becoming more aware of what to look for. They're becoming more knowledgeable."

It is important that students have correct information about sex and sexually transmitted diseases.

"There are some misconceptions about sexually transmitted diseases. One is you can go to a health care provider and you can have one test done that checks for every STD," Blank said. "No such test exists. There's not one test that checks for all STDs. We don't even have screening tests for all STDs.

"Condom use is very important in preventing STDs – but people need to realize they don't protect 100 percent. I think that's another common misconception people have," Blank said.

Hormonal birth control won't protect against STDs but it will protect against pregnancy and has some other added benefits.

"[Hormonal birth control], especially pills, decrease risk of ovarian cancer, decreased risk of endometrial cancer, decreased risk of ovarian cysts," Blank said. "They can help with acne, can help with menstrual cramps and make menstrual flow lighter. For some women those are the reasons they take birth control. Birth control pills and other types have a lot of other uses in gynecology besides birth control. Most people don't realize that."

The most common forms of birth control for college students are pills, the ring the patch or the shot.

Students who have sex should be practicing safe sex, Filla said.

"There's sexual behaviors and then there's risky sexual behaviors," Filla said.

Clean hands

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Don't be surprised if students start singing in the bathroom.

It takes about 20 seconds of washing your hands to kill germs, which is about how long it takes to sing the "Happy Birthday" song twice, Carol Kennedy, director of Health Education and Promotion at Lafene Health Center, said.

The soap doesn't have to be anti-bacterial and the water doesn't need to be blazing hot. Just the friction of washing hands with soap and warm water is good enough to clean them.

"We come in contact with germs all the time," Kennedy said. "Most of the germs don't do anything to us."

People get sick at school because they are exposed to more people than at home.

Kennedy recommends washing your hands before eating or preparing food and after using the bathroom or blowing your nose or coughing.

Vanessa Myers, senior in architecture, said the places people pick up the most germs are where there are a lot of people moving around and touching things, such as bars, restaurants and the K-State Student Union Food Court.

"I make sure I wash my hands more often," Myers said.

Starla Balthazor, senior in elementary education, said bars are the worst place for germs.

"I think there's a lot of dirty things at bars, and I don't think it's sanitary," Balthazor said.

Balthazor said she uses liquid hand sanitizers in her car and at home but knows they're not as good as soap and water.

Kennedy said there is no need to try to avoid all contact with germs. They can't live forever. Without them you can't build up your immune system.

"There is merit that the more exposure we have, the more immunity we build up," Kennedy said. "Avoiding germs all together might not be the best thing."

Direct link between alcohol consumption, grades

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bill Arck has an interesting list of the top three drugs K-State students like to abuse.

"Alcohol, alcohol and alcohol," he said.

Arck, the director of K-State's Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, said abuse of anything else pales in comparison to booze, and what it does to students.

Arck said more than 80 percent of students responded "yes" on a question in a survey this spring that simply asked whether they drink or not. He said while the college atmosphere encourages drinking, it is not the real reason students drink so much.

This starts back in high school and even earlier, he said, when students learn to drink from their parents and peers.

The drinking during college is just a further development of what is socially acceptable in modern society.

Arck said the love of inebriation at K-State is not anything unique, but something found at all the public universities in Kansas.

K-State and KU students drink just as much as students at Fort Hays State University.

He said there is a direct link between alcohol and grades, citing a CORE survey that found "A" students average 3.1 drinks per week.

"Whether drinking causes bad grades or bad grades causes drinking, I can't tell you that," he said.

It's not just grades that can be broken by the drink, but the law takes a hit as well.

Captain Richard Herrman of the K-State Police Department spoke from personal experience when he said alcohol entices students into doing regrettable things.

"You find somebody that is breaking off a street sign and you talk to them, and you can smell the alcohol on their breath," he said.

Herrman said his officers often have to deal with drunk people who do less-than-proper things in their jurisdiction.

He said they often have to arrest people for public urination or defecation, property damage and disorderly conduct when they've had a few too many.

There is a silver lining in the prevalence of drinking at K-State.

Arck said occurrences of drunken driving are becoming less frequent.

He said each school year in the mid-1980s would see one to four fatal accidents caused by it.

Arck said modern students are much more responsible when it comes to keeping themselves safe while drinking.

Choosing designated drivers, drinking less in one day – or night – and doing something other than drinking have become more common.

Students build lifelong habits with exercise

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Exercise is an activity that people should work into their daily or weekly schedules. College students should try to work in physical activity into their week in order to keep physically fit.

Amber Long, assistant director and coordinator of the fitness and wellness center for recreational services, said exercise is extremely important for college students.

"College students are developing lifelong skills that they will keep up throughout their lives," she said.

"It is better for them to get into the habit of exercising, especially with obesity ranking as one of the top killers in this country."

The wellness center offers fitness and nutritional consulting. The fitness consultants do fitness testing, such as measuring body fat and determining where a student is physically.

The nutritional consultants offer suggestions or specific feedback, such as a general overview of the student's nutrition habits, or will go so far as to laying out a menu.

Long said the center will be transitioning into offering personal trainers to students in the spring. She said the trainers will be students who are nationally certified and will be more hands-on with training and go out onto the floor.

"The training will be half the price of any other training service in Manhattan," she said.

"Prices are still being determined, but they will offer all the same benefits, such as making sure students are working out correctly and helping them fit it in to their day."

Long said all students have to do is try to incorporate exercise into their life. For example, choosing to walk or bike to class instead of driving. Students should try to physically do the little things in their lives.

"Try walking a little bit further than usual," she said.

"Students can work it in three to five days a week, even if it is just a half hour to an hour, exercising is just a matter of making it a priority."

She said about 80 percent of students utilize Peters Recreation Complex. Even just joining intramurals is a way to get exercise worked into the schedule.

"It is a great way to exercise and is fun at the same time," she said. Long said students should visit the rec services Web site at www.recservices.ksu.edu, or stop by to get schedules or to ask any questions.

Luke Henry, physical therapist for HealthSouth, said exercising is a good way to release stress from class or feelings about being away from home.

He said getting a good exercise schedule in college is easier because students have more free time and flexibility than they will later in life when they are at work.

HealthSouth, 3244 Kimball Ave., is a full service fitness center with a physical therapy center. Henry said the center is slanted more toward adults, although there is a pretty good mix of students and adults.

"About 40 percent of members are under the age of 22 or 23," he said. "The fee is $25 a month, which is for the fitness center and pool."

Henry said the fitness guidelines for students are five or six days a week, although three or four times a week will sustain the fitness level.

Scott Johnson, physical therapist for Maximum Performance, said exercise is good for everyone. It decreases health risks, such as heart disease and diabetes, and having good physical fitness is a plus, he said.

"There is no downside to exercise," he said.

Maximum Performance, 426 McCall Road, is also a full service fitness center and includes aerobics classes, jazzercize, kickboxing, yoga, pilates and will have an indoor cycling class in October. The student rate is $112 for four months.

Johnson said it is important for people to work exercise into their lifestyle because it will be harder to get into exercise later in life than it is to maintain it.

"If it is a part of the lifestyle then it will always be beneficial," he said.

"I think a lot of the time students don't think about how much it will help them, there are young people with osteoporosis and other diseases. It must be incorporated into the lifestyle in order to make lifestyle changes."

Physical, psychological problems can arise with stress

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stress is a fact of life for many college students, as inevitable as tests, lectures and searching for a parking spot.

"I worry a lot, about everything," Lindsay Krier, junior in elementary education, said. "I worry about the future too much, and being happy with my major."

Sarah Siemer, junior in secondary education and English, said the source of her stress varies from week to week.

"Sometimes it's classes, sometimes you have a fall-out with a friend," Siemer said. "I tend to dwell on things and imagine the worst possible thing that could happen."

The strain of balancing courses, assignments, work, tests and personal relationships often takes a serious toll on students' health.

According to the University Counseling Services Web site, nearly 85 percent of doctor visits are for stress-related problems.

Physical conditions such as migraine headaches, muscle tension, increased heart rate and high blood pressure can all be influenced by stress, as well as psychological conditions including insomnia, anxiety and depression.

The counseling services Web site explains that the average human's body reacts to stress about 100 times a day. Tension begins to build in one or more of the body's biological systems, and eventually negative signs of wear and tear begin to surface in the way that system functions.

Most students do not know how to ease the tension that builds as their days progress.

"I am really organized, but no matter how organized you are, it seems like there are things that don't get done," Siemer said.

According to the Web site, students should use the natural breaks that occur in their daily schedules to relax and combat the effects of stress. Practicing simple breathing exercises or muscle stretches several times a day gives the body time to slow down and return to its normal state.

It is also important for students to differentiate between work and relaxation in their lives.

"Sometimes I think I lose touch with my friends," Krier said. "Not on purpose, but a couple of weeks will pass, and I realize I haven't talked to so-and-so in a while."

Scheduling a regular time to call a friend, exercise or enjoy a favorite hobby breaks the frantic cycle of work and deadlines. And while managing one's time is critical to avoiding stress, the Web site recommends leaving unscheduled time available everyday.

Stress and college may go hand in hand, but small breaks and regular relaxation can help students avoid adverse effects on their health.

Tobacco, alcohol, lack of sleep can be harmful to immune system

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Living with hundreds of other people in a small space like the residence halls makes sharing germs inevitable, but there are ways students can protect themselves to avoid getting sick.

One way for people to keep their immune systems healthy is to avoid tobacco use and avoid being around others who are smoking.

"Even though they may not smoke, they essentially are smoking when they go out to a bar for four hours, and it's very smoky," Carol Kennedy, director of Health Education and Promotion at Lafene Health Center, said.

She said smoke is an irritant to the lungs, and it can weaken the immune system.

Another way to avoid getting sick involves something Kennedy said most students aren't likely to do.

"Don't drink," Kennedy said, "but if students aren't going to listen to that, at least limit their consumption. Alcohol definitely suppresses the immune system."

A guide to how much alcohol is safe to consume is about two drinks for a man and one for a woman, Kennedy said.

Going out to the bars is another activity to avoid because of the combination of smoke, alcohol and getting less sleep as a result of staying out late, she said.

"Those three things take more than a day to recover from and certainly your immune system is going to be compromised," Kennedy said.

She also recommends eating a well-balanced diet and getting plenty of exercise. She said taking vitamins doesn't have negative effects, but they aren't needed on top of a balanced diet.

"If somebody is eating a well-balanced diet, more than likely they do not need supplements such as vitamins," Kennedy said.

The residence hall dining centers have dieticians on staff, and Kennedy said they offer balanced diets and healthy eating choices among their selections.

Raena Rudzik, junior in greenhouse management, lives off campus with three other people and said she takes vitamins and tries to keep her immune system strong and avoid getting sick.

"I get lots of sleep and drink a lot of water," Rudzik said.

Rudzik and her roommates also work out.

"All of us walk every day to get exercise," she said.

Jorge Espinoza, junior in secondary education, said it's important to get a lot of sleep.

"The less sleep you get, the better chances are of getting sick," Espinoza said. "Good exercise keeps you healthy too."

Despite working hard to ward off illnesses, people are still going to get sick.

To keep germs from spreading, Kennedy said to avoid contact with sick people and to stay away from others if you are sick.

"Stay away from people who are ill and if you are ill don't go to class or other activities and expose others to your illness," Kennedy said. "If you have to cough or sneeze, use a tissue and then wash your hands as soon as you can."

It's also important for students to their wash hands often and clean communal use items, such as telephones and doorknobs if someone they live with is sick.

"If someone is ill in your living area, it's a good idea to clean common use items with some kind of disinfectant," Kennedy said.

Silver Key members raise $2,700

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Under the glow of the Bosco Clock Tower, more than 20 Silver Key Sophomore Honorary members camped out in the Bosco Student Plaza last night to raise awareness of the homeless in Manhattan.

"It's a wonderful way to raise awareness, but you and I both know that these people don't have the luxuries that you'll even have tonight," Mandy Chapman Semple, Manhattan Emergency Shelter executive director, said.

Silver Key is an honorary service group consisting of 40 students who are required to participate in one volunteer activity every month. The group is exclusively for sophomores and a grade point average of 3.0 is required for admittance.

"This is our kick-off event to get us fired up for the year," Michelle LeCluyse, sophomore in biology, said.

The members worked through the summer to raise donations in their hometowns. Once the school year began, the group continued to collect donations from the Manhattan community.

Silver Key set a goal to raise $2,500 but surpassed that by collecting $2,700 for the shelter. The group has also acquired large amounts of food products and toiletries to donate.

The sleep-out in the plaza is to celebrate the group's success, as well as to further educate members, Lauren Luhrs, sophomore in mass communications, said.

The sleep-out began with a series of get-to-know each other activities, followed by a guest lecture. Chapman Semple and Emily Wagner, client service director for the shelter, led a discussion about local homelessness and shelter services.

The Manhattan Emergency Center takes in more than 500 people every year, and the majority of the people the shelter serves are white males aged 20 to 40, Chapman Semple said.

"When Hurricane Katrina hit and we thought all those people were coming here, we were scrambling," Wagner said. "We

Xanga.com allows students to post online journals, communicate with friends

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The blog is an online journal people use to publish things about themselves that other people can see.

Even with the Xanga phenomenon, there is a cost. Some people, especially more public student body figures, are cautious about Web site material they post.

AJ Hoffman, former Moore Hall resident assistant, said since his job was high-profile, he avoided putting certain things online.

"You just have to be careful about what you expose to your residents," he said. "Sometimes it can cost you the job, or better yet, hurt your reputation."

Derek Jackson, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining, said an RA would not get fired for posting something on Xanga.

Jackson said the behavior of residence life staff is something they watch closely.

However, Jackson did say that if someone admitted to doing something illegal in an online journal, he would consider looking into that person's personal behavior.

"We have not had anyone terminated just for that," he said. "The RAs know what they can and can't do. The act of posting would not give us the reason to terminate them."

But for other students, the use of blogs are a lot more casual and fun.

Zack Hamm, senior in music education, said his blog is a way of telling people about his day without talking to them directly.

He also uses Xanga as an extra way of remembering things about his life and what moods or silly thoughts cross his mind.

Hamm said he found out about the Web site by word of mouth.

"I heard people say things like 'Oh, I wrote it all down on my Xanga,' or 'You should check out the comments I left you on Xanga," he said. "After a while I decided to check it out for myself and I really like it."

He said people put all kinds of things on the blogs he's seen.

"I feel like most of the time people censor their really dark stuff because they know that other people with see it," he said.

"Then again some people put everything dark and dirty about themselves to draw a crowd. I never really write anything too personal on mine just because I know who is going to see it."

He said it can get addictive when he can type up his day and get comments from his friends.

"It makes you want to do it again and again and see what kind of comments you might get," he said.

Hamm said he will stay on Xanga until after he graduates because it would be another way to stay in contact with people after he leaves.

"Xanga is for everyone," Hamm said. "You can even create your own group. It would be great if everyone joined Xanga, even though I have a hard enough time keeping tabs on people that I know already."

Schools narrow achievement gaps

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A national report issued last month by Standard & Poor's Evaluation Services recognized 22 Kansas School Districts for narrowing achievement gaps between black, Hispanic or economically disadvantaged students.

Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 did not make the list.

Michele Jones, USD 383 communications coordinator, said this is the first time she's been aware of this type of study.

"I'm not sure why we weren't included," she said

School districts recognized in the report also simultaneously raised the average proficiency rates of the student groups being compared.

This study was conducted in 13 states and 203 school districts were recognized nationwide.

"Closing the achievement gap is one of the most persistent challenges in American education today," said William Cox, executive managing director of Standard & Poor's School Evaluation Services. "Given the complex nature and extreme difficulty in closing these gaps, Standard & Poor's believes it is important to pay tribute to those school districts that have made progress in this area."

Credit cards target students; credit must be used responsibly

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Building good credit might be important in today's world, but for students it can be difficult to achieve.

A good credit score can influence things such as student loans and getting new credit cards. However, Linda King-Lake, Commerce Bank branch manager, said things other than someone's actual credit rating are just as important.

"With all the identity theft and scamming going on, you need to keep up with this and make sure other people are not using your credit," she said.

King-Lake also said it is a good idea for students to check their credit report once a year through Web sites like www.experian.com, www.transunion.com and www.equifax.com.

Another important consideration is choosing a card wisely and responsibly.

"If you use a credit card or get loans, do it for a reason," King-Lake said. "Don't sign up for a credit card because they offer a free football or shirt."

Dustin Bloom, sophomore in construction science and management, said he got a credit card in order to begin building his credit.

"I had some problems getting loans because I didn't have any," he said, adding that he uses the card responsibly and for emergencies only.

King-Lake also said making credit card payments on time is important. While paying an overdue bill a week later might not seem like much, the consequences are long-term.

"Actually, that all gets recorded," she said. "You need to be responsible. Students don't want to be making huge purchases where all they can do is make the minimum payment every month. That just sets you up for debt."

Since college students are the target of credit-card companies, King-Lake encourages students to be careful.

"Don't take every credit card offered to you, but borrow only what you need," she said.

Headlines from the nation's universities

UF offers free ice cream, movie for students' 21st birthday

GAINESVILLE, Fla. – University of Florida junior Sean Liston had been counting down the days until he could stumble down the sidewalk on University Avenue, proudly flashing his license at every bartender who had ever stood between him and beer.

But a week before his 21st birthday, an orange-and-blue e-mail popped up in Liston's university e-mail account suggesting he substitute drinking with a free movie and ice cream on the night of his birthday.

The e-mail is part of the university's campaign against binge drinking and is programmed to be sent to students' GatorLink e-mail accounts before their 21st birthdays.

The dean of students office and the Student Health Care Center cooperated to develop this program in January 2004, said Vinnie Taranto, technology specialist at the dean of students office.

There were some computer problems preventing students from getting the messages in the summer, Taranto said. The program now sends an average of 25 e-mails per day.

Dean of Students, Gene Zdziarski, said each e-mail offers a free movie ticket donated by Gator Cinemas and a free ice cream donated by Cold Stone Creamery between the hours of 9 p.m. and 1 a.m. on each student's 21st birthday – the time when most students go to bars.

The e-mail urges students to avoid drinking games and sleeping when intoxicated and warns that large amounts of alcohol consumption may result in death.

FORMER U. VIRGINIA STUDENT CHOOSES PROFESSIONAL POKER OVER SCHOOL

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. – Not many people can lose $10,000 in one day and just move on. But then again, most people don't win $360,000 in one day, either.

Former University of Virginia student Eric Froehlich recently became the youngest player to win a bracelet in the World Series of Poker and has grown accustomed to the world of high-stakes poker.

But less than a year ago, Froehlich was still a student at the University. Before he left to play poker professionally, he was only a few credits away from a degree in psychology.

"My parents always supported everything I've done," Froehlich said. "I did well at U.Va., but I never was that motivated. I enjoyed the classes, but I didn't feel like I was getting enough out of college."

Froehlich took his fourth semester off, playing poker all the while, and when he returned he ended up declaring his major late and then couldn't get into the classes he needed. Froehlich realized he wasn't taking school seriously enough and decided it wasn't worth it to continue on after fall 2004 – which ended up being his last semester at the university.

Some people have commented that Froehlich's success in poker might encourage other young poker players to drop out of college and follow the same path. Yet Froehlich would not advise others to do as he did.

"I think it'd be a mistake for 99.9 percent of the people out there," he said. "I've certainly encouraged people to go the school route. You really have to give it a chance at first, but sometimes it's not for you."

Froehlich has been playing poker for just a couple of years and has only been playing competitively for about a year. Though he is only 21 and was one of the least experienced players at the WSOP, it didn't interfere with him winning the coveted gold bracelet in the early hours of the morning June 7, 2005 in Las Vegas.

The tournament Froehlich won was the $1,500 Buy-in Limit Texas Hold'Em event, in which his winnings totaled $361,910.

"It was a weird feeling when it was finally over – just surreal," Froehlich said. "They give you all this money, all the photographers, you have to do an interview with Norman Chad of ESPN, and you don't really know what to say."

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

New product may eliminate embarrassing toilet odor

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Plop. Flush. Stink.

When answering the call of nature, sometimes the leftovers leave an embarrassing, overwhelming smell.

For those who have had problems with eye-watering bathroom odors, the solution to their problem might be in a few drops.

Toilex released a new produced called "The DROPS," which the company brands as the panacea to toilet smells.

William Edwards, owner of Toilex, said adding the product to a toilet bowl before use will ensure that there will be no odor.

The DROPS Web site, www.thedrops.com, claims the product was scientifically created to find and eliminate odor rather than mask it. To use the product, consumers put three drops of the product in the toilet before use.

The formula is patent-pending and reacts with the water itself to form an odor-trapping barrier that keeps unpleasant odors from entering the air.

Toilex claims any bathroom odor for is eliminated.

"That sounds very interesting," Theresa Stepan, sophomore in open option, said. "I don't know if I'd pay money for that, but I would definitely be interested in trying it for free."

Edwards said the product's discreet .41 fluid ounces bottle is appealing for average public bathroom use.

One bottle of The DROPS costs $6.99 and has more than 100 usages.

The Web site said the product is marketed toward a variety of users, including those with stomach disorders, and can take away the fear of using a public toilet for more than just "number one."

For more information

The DROPS sell for $6.99 on their Web site, www.thedrops.com. "No more air fresheners that only cover up the smell; no more foul odor, no more embarrassment," the site promises.

Unpleasant odors can become a thing of the past with the DROPS, and for the uncertain, a 30-day money-back guarantee is available.

"I probably wouldn't spend money on that," Monique Jimenez, sophomore in business management, said. "I'm pretty tight with money right now and don't spend it on unnecessary things."

A frequently asked question regarding the DROPS is about product safety. The company assures that it is safe.

However, the company encourages people to use common sense.

For instance, keep away from children, heat, eyes and follow the product directions.

The DROPS are not available in stores, but only through the Toilex Web site. Consumers can also access more information about the product or even contact the company through the site as well.

Morgan Potter, sophomore in social work, said he was intrigued by the product.

"It could actually be really good for parties," she said. "What if you get the beer runs? It could be handy."

TO THE POINT

Americans need to stay prepared for next hurricane

Hurricane Rita reached Category 2 status Tuesday, threatening the Gulf Coast once again and forcing the evacuation of many coastal cities in Texas.

Refugees from Hurricane Katrina continue playing hopscotch, as those housed in Houston's Astrodome are planning to seek safety in Arkansas and points north.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Criticized for the federal government's slow response to Hurricane Katrina, President Bush quickly signed an emergency declaration for Florida, and local officials in Texas and Louisiana are already preparing for the storm's landfall later this week.

Hopefully they aren't the only people who learned a lesson from Katrina.

Levees in New Orleans are not fully operational, and the weather forecast predicts heavy rain.

Emergency responders are already spread thinly across the region, and the National Weather Service reports Hurricane Rita may become a Category 4 storm as it rumbles across the Gulf of Mexico.

While people continue to rebuild in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, America needs to prepare for the possibility of another catastrophic storm up ahead.

The lessons learned over the past three weeks will undoubtedly be put to the test.

Skin and bones

Underweight models, actresses shouldn't be the measure of sex appeal

KELSEY CHILDRESS

There is a movement called Pro-Ana, which, according to Wikipedia (www.wikipedia.org) is "a largely Internet-based movement which views the eating disorder Anorexia nervosa as a lifestyle choice" rather than a medical condition. Pro-Anas view Anorexia as a guide that helps them curb their eating patterns and provides "thinspiration" for fasting and purging.

Web hosting companies are joining together to ban this type of Web site from their servers, but a quick search on Google reveals there are many pages still operating and encouraging women to starve themselves to obtain this idealized type of body.

According to the National Center for Eating Disorders, the average American woman is 5 feet 4 inches, 140 pounds. The average super model is 5 feet 11 inches, 117 pounds.

When did it become OK for young women, who are supposed to have full breasts and curvaceous hips, to be so underweight that they look like walking zombies? Is this supposed to be attractive? Is anorexia in style now? People say beauty is in the eye of the beholder, but if this is true, then why is there still an overwhelming pressure to be skin and bones?

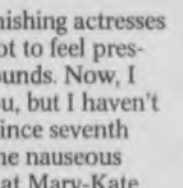
With all those vanishing actresses out there, it's hard not to feel pressure to weigh 105 pounds. Now, I don't know about you, but I haven't weighed that much since seventh grade. So, it makes me nauseous when it's reported that Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen, who are two days younger than me, weigh 90 pounds each.

Occasionally, there will be a celebrity or two who will "speak out" against losing weight for stardom, saying that she is "comfortable with who she is" and won't change for anyone. There are a few articles here and there, commending her for that choice, but these actresses aren't the ones winning Emmys and landing multi-million dollar movie roles.

Illustrations by Elvis Achelpohl COLLEGIAN

Despite this, many women still want to be the stunning woman on the front of Cosmopolitan or Vogue, and even though touch-up artists airbrush these portraits like crazy, some girls are going to great lengths to look just like their favorite magazine covers.

And it's not just anorexia anymore. Many girls and guys have a regular diet but spend several hours a day sweating off everything they've eaten. Some think this is a healthier alternative to fasting, but it can be just as harmful. According to bodytrends.com, compulsive exercise can lead to "headaches, reoccurring illness, depression, stress, loss of coordination and a faster morning heart rate."



Healthyplace.com claims women who greatly "reduce their food intake" and "combine it with intense physical activity will stop menstruating and ovulating and will become increasingly susceptible to stress fractures and osteoporosis." Because excessive exercise reduces appetite, people can become anorexic, thus beginning a vicious cycle where they use exercise to keep themselves from wanting to eat.

We must realize that, in this celebrity obsessed society, it's easy to get lost in the pressure of looking like our favorite movie stars.

Remember that their career depends on their body; they get paid to work out. Most of us are just poor college students trying to work and go to school full-time, not battling it out for the next blockbuster.

Separating myth from fact about alcohol

GRANT REICHERT

Having reached the 87th trimester last month (that's 21 years, for you anti-choice fanatics), the government deemed my chances of contracting Fetal Alcohol Syndrome minimal and lifted the prohibition on fun. Still, being a slimy invertebrate Republican, I don't drink. I absorb liquids directly through my semi-permeable skin.

But that doesn't mean you shouldn't drink.

Sure, alcohol gets a bad rap, with newspapers weekly bearing hysterical headlines like "Binge Drinking Kills Family of Five, Still on the Loose," but you shouldn't let this media sensationalism harsh your buzz.

First, we need to separate myth from fact. It's a myth that alcohol kills brain cells. Really, if alcohol killed brain cells, then why are sorority girls so smart? This is just a lie put out by Big Water, to entice you over to their side.

In fact, according to the New England Journal of Authoritative Studies, when you drink, your brain cells lose their regular, staid inhibitions, and sometimes you wake up next to some stranger, accidentally creating little neurons in the process.

Many also say drunk people drive badly, but I refuse to believe such invidious stereotypes. There was once a time when bigots said the same thing about women. Before long, they're going to say that drunk people aren't strong enough to join the military or smart enough to vote. Have we really sunk that low?

Drunk drivers just need to take caution. Drinking lowers your reflexes, so if you drive, be sure to take some speed or something to balance it out. Oh, and your organ donor card? Fill that baby out, too. I've always been a huge fan of your kidneys, not to mention your skull cap – I like the gentle curvature, is all.

Of course, having said this, I should inform you drinking can be dangerous in some capacities as well. We should never glorify alcohol use.

It incites idiotic stunts, loosens lips and throws inhibitions to the wind.

But it's also got some negative effects.

For example, some drink to escape from life, which can lead to depression.

Drinking just to escape is bad; escape is better attained through petty vandalism, participation in underground fight clubs or liberal political activism.

You need to know your limits. If you're out drinking and you notice your blood alcohol level has risen from ".3" (may lose consciousness) to ".4" (may be elected senator of Massachusetts), it's time to stop.

Basically, just listen to your body signals.

For example, vomiting is your stomach's way of telling you, "Hey, dude, keep it coming, I found some more room over here."

Alternatively, passing out is your bodies way of saying, "Good sir. The party has been quite salubrious, but I think I shall retire 'til the morrow.

"If anyone should call, I shall be on the floor, 'twixt lamp and chair, soiling myself. G'day."

So don't be scared away from drinking by media horror stories about alcoholics who drank their lives away.

If there weren't such drink-sodden transients, who would stain my deck for a case of Natural Light, or, for that matter, instruct our English classes?

And, if there weren't so many drunkards, who would I look to when I need a good Christian laugh at the less fortunate?

Go ahead. Have a beer.

Society may very well depend on it.

There's a boy in my loft.

To the drunk guy who drank my anti-constipation medicine, you owe me a new bottle and it sucks to be you today.

You know, if life begins at conception, technically I can legally drink at 20 years and three months of age. That's all I'm trying to say.

Embellishing clothes popular among college students

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anyone tuned into the latest trends should notice one thing: faded is fabulous and dirty is delightful.

But with clothing prices soaring, who wants to spend more than $100 on a pair of destroyed jeans? Certainly not most college students, which is the reason behind another emerging trend in fashion: students making or modifying their own clothes.

There are some crafty students who go as far as making their own clothes from scratch, but this takes expertise, time, and energy.

Kristi Schottler, sophomore in apparel design, has been doing so for many years.

"I just find sewing is really relaxing, and sometimes when I can't find clothes I like in the store, I just know what I want in my head, so I go ahead and try to make it," Schottler said.

For those not so inclined to take up sewing, adding personal touches to clothing is easy and can give a look that can't always be found in a retail store.

There are many different degrees of touching up clothes, from gluing on patches of jewels to creating your own holes.

Megan Coghlin, senior in hotel and restaurant management, and her friends make their own customized skirts, adding bleach and lace.

"It's fun to take clothes that are plain and personalizing them and making them your own," Coghlin said. "And when you wear it out, it's nice to get compliments because when they ask where you got it you can say 'I made it!'"

The options are endless, and more and more students are starting to join the personalization trend.

"I think a lot of people are personalizing their own clothes now," Schottler said. "It's so much less expensive, and since Jo-Ann Fabrics moved to Manhattan there's a lot better fabric selection and Wal-Mart has a nice selection too. Its fun, just be creative and don't be scared."

For ladies, the latest look is skirts or jeans with jewels or sequins on them. These items can be found at retailers for more than $50, but can easily be made by hand for much less.

Simply buy a skirt (or use one you already own). Plain jean skirts can be found for reasonable prices just about everywhere.

Buy any jewels or sequins and a fabric or clothing glue. These items can be found at Wal-Mart or Hobby Lobby.

Next, glue them on in areas or patterns desired. Popular areas are around the pockets on the front and back.

Another option is to add lace to the bottom of a skirt. Find a desirable lace print (again Wal-Mart and Hobby Lobby have nice selections) and glue it on the underside of the skirt. Let it dry for a few days before washing.

With cooler weather coming in, there are many different accents to add to jeans, making it possible to look good and stay warm. One option is to create a destroyed look by fading the jeans and adding holes. These holes can be made by using a cheese grater and rubbing it against the denim, or by using sand paper and a rock. Try this around the pocket areas, the legs or the seat of the pants.

Another technique that is popular right now is creating different colors of jeans. Put jeans in the washing machine with a bleach solution to take the darkness out and then use any fabric dye to add a tint. Some good colors to try are green, red or gray.

Other options for jeans include using puff paint to draw pictures or designs on them or using a Clorox Bleach Pen to write words in them. For shirts, use an iron-on adhesive or cut out designs and glue.

Bleaching for a faded look is also fast and trendy. Just create a half-bleach, half-water solution and then splatter or paint it on the article of clothing. Wait about five minutes then wash as usual. The entire process only takes about an hour to complete and costs much less than buying a pre-made piece.

Men can partake in such customizations as well. Rubbing the bills of hats on the concrete or against a hard, rough surface will create that distressed look that everyone seems to love.

Coldplay miss chance to make statement on 3rd album

"X&Y"
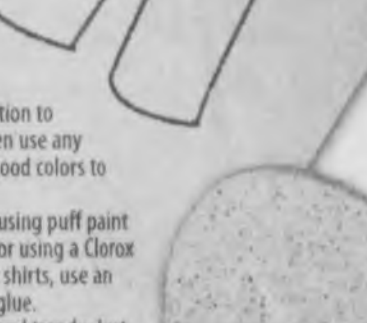
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Dear Chris Martin:



It has become transparently clear to me of my duty to rally behind you and help carry the flag proclaiming Coldplay the biggest band in the world. But I have a problem labeling Coldplay "The Biggest and Bestest Band in the World." I realize that this letter comes a few months after the release of third album, "X&Y," but I wanted to sound my opinion on the status of your band in the world: like the album's release, better late than never, eh, Chris?

After Radiohead threw down the Britpop gauntlet to pursue other directions, there were countless bands scrambling to hoist themselves to the forefront of hype and attention. Travis, the Doves, Muse and Stellastarr* were just a few of the top contenders for number one British band; but then you came along, Mr. Martin.

"[You] wrote a song/ [You] wrote a song for [me]" and called it "Yellow." With sad, puppy-dog eyes, restrained British charm, and warbling Thom Yorke-aping vocals, you swooned audiences and critics alike.

The buzz surrounding "Parachutes" never really died and people were tripping over themselves to show you the steps to your pedestal. Then you (and the three other faceless band members) released "A Rush of Blood to the Head." Even I had to tone down my cynical naysaying.

The release of your third album was an event that caused the world to wait with baited breath. You even had me wringing my hands in anticipation, Mr. Martin. This was the album to pull out all the stops and embrace the destiny everyone wants you fulfill.

Courtesy Art

Some, especially the British music press, were quick to lay their palms for the arrival of "X&Y." But, for me, this album just confirmed my long-standing fears about Coldplay. Rather than making a grand statement, you decided to make the same statement you have made for the past two albums.

I suppose that you felt the world needed more bland, emotionally-manipulative ballads and mid-tempo rockers. Also, I just can't shake the sense that I would be better off listening to the original artists that you so perfectly mimic. Even the lead single, "Speed of Sound," exhumes the corpse of the superior song, "Clocks."

Through your musical gift, Mr. Martin, you have given the world more banal, inoffensive songs that are the perfect background tracks to ignore while drinking coffee at the local café. "X&Y" is the ideal album to snuggle up next to grandma and grandpa and play a nice game of 'Spot the Lyrical Clichés.'

I realize now why Coldplay is perceived as the essential band: give the people what they want. Keep the sound predictable, but change it just enough that you don't become 'stale.' Enter the abnormal drum patterns during "Square One" and the sample of Kraftwerk's "Computer Love" in "Talk," then smooth it all down to a pretty sheen in post-production. I know you wouldn't want to roughen your edges too much; that might hurt sales.

In closing, Mr. Martin, I would just like to thank you for recording, what is essentially, the same album since your debut. I also want to thank you for ensuring that I never suffer insomnia – all I have to do is insert "X&Y" into my compact disc player. I anticipate that your formula will allow you to churn out innocuous, unmemorable pop to the masses for years to come; I just hope they don't realize that they've been fooled too soon.

Sincerely: Cold about Coldplay in Kansas

Senior on the sidelines

No matter what your feelings are of former starting safety Jesse Tetuan, you have to feel sorry for him.

After starting 26 consecutive games before this season, now a senior, Tetuan does not even fit into the K-State defensive picture. There were problems on defense last year attributed to Tetuan being in the wrong spot, but there were so many breakdowns on the defensive side of the ball that you can't blame all the problems on Tetuan.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

For now, he stands on the sidelines, only getting a chance to cross the painted white lines on special teams, similar to how most walk-ons and freshmen are treated.

Though he was the second leading tackler on last year's team, the only proof of Tetuan's existence on this year's team is in the liner notes of the K-State weekly media release.

Tetuan's highlight according to the document: "Veteran safety with 29 career starts under his belt ... Avid guitar player ... Brother, John, was a standout pitcher at Wichita State a ninth-round selection in the 2002 MLB Draft by Colorado."

Besides the mention of his past starts, not much is said about what Tetuan has done and what he is doing for the team this year.

Sophomore Marcus Watts has taken over at safety for Tetuan, but unlike other players who would have sulked and found themselves towards the corner of the sidelines, Tetuan has maintained a mature and strong presence for a young and inexperienced secondary.

"Even though I haven't seen Jesse play a lot these last two games, Jesse has been a big part of helping Watts get prepared, helping our safeties get prepared like Kyle Williams and Maurice Porter," junior linebacker and former safety Maurice Mack said. "He's kind of like the big brother out there. He played for three seasons, and he's been through it all, seen it all, and he's helping those guys out."

Coach Bill Snyder, who was one of Tetuan's biggest supporters last season, made the safety spot an open competition this spring between Tetuan and Watts, and the sophomore came out on top over the senior. It was fair and square, and Watts brought the what the defense needed to change its identity – speed.

Through the head-to-head battle, Tetuan was there to give advice, and he still does on the sidelines when he sees Watts in the wrong spot on the field or just to give Watts a pat on the back for a job done well.

The fans may not notice or care to be aware of him – you may even be happy Tetuan is no longer on the field – but you should respect how he has handled the situation in his final season of eligibility for the Wildcats.

Wildcats face Jackrabbits for 1st time

Things have been going well for coach Suzie Fritz's volleyball team.

Despite preseason doubts, the No. 17 Wildcats are 10-1 overall and 2-0 in the Big 12 – not to mention Fritz garnered her 101st career win on Sept. 18.

Still, as K-State prepares for its home match against the South Dakota State Jackrabbits at 6 tonight, Fritz said the team's concentration is on development.

"We've been focused on our own improvement," Fritz said. "We probably spent about five seconds talking about South Dakota State."

Because this is the first time the Wildcats and Jackrabbits (6-8) have faced off, her team will approach tonight's game the same as any other, Fritz said.

"I don't know a lot about them," Fritz said. "But generally, the focus is to serve and pass well and limit unforced errors."

What they do know about South Dakota State is it enters Ahearn Field House this evening having won four of its last six matches.

However, the Jackrabbits' recent winning streak doesn't seem to be an issue for the Wildcats, who have made individual and team advancement their priority.

"The attitude of the coaching staff is that we're not good enough, that there's room to grow," Fritz said. "I'd imagine that's the same for the team."

K-State, North Texas have ties

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State faces North Texas on Saturday, it will be the meeting of two programs with strong ties to each other.

Not only did coach Bill Snyder's first win as K-State's head coach come against North Texas (then North Texas State) in 1989, Mean Green coach Darrell Dickey was the K-State quarterback in 1982 when the Wildcats went to their first-ever bowl game.

Add in the fact Snyder was an assistant coach at North Texas from 1976-78, and the binds connecting the two programs become even stronger.

"I really enjoy what (Dickey's) done, because I have an affection for North Texas as well," Snyder said.

Dickey became the head coach at North Texas in 1998, and in the last three seasons, has guided the Mean Green to records of 8-5, 9-4 and 7-5 to go along with four consecutive Sun Belt Conference Championships.

Snyder said Dickey's success has possibly been downplayed because of the number of competing universities in the state of Texas and the perception of smaller universities.

"I think Darrell has been fantastic in what he's done there," Snyder said. "I think what Darrell has done so well is he's recognized what the perception is and he's recognized the difficult task as a Division I-A school, but he's been able to convince people."

In 1989, the Wildcats defeated North Texas 20-17 at home on the last play of the game to give Snyder his first victory as a head coach and snap a 30-game winless st ak.

When l if the win over North Te s as a special moment an portant to the program, yder said he understood i importance of the win, but h does not judge the entire season by one game.

"I think so, and I can't tell you exactly why," Snyder said. "I think it's well-documented what I assessed the year on was a steady improvem t made throughout the c rse of the year."

Offensive lineman Je omey Clary said some of the players on the team are aware of the ties and is something they will have in their minds come Saturday.

"That all hits home with a bunch of us," Clary said. "I don't think a lot of them are aware of it, but I think enough of us are, and the main incentive is we want to come away with a win."

CFB | Sugar Bowl will be in Baton Rouge or Atlanta

The Sugar Bowl will be played in either Baton Rouge, La., or Atlanta after being forced out of the Superdome in New Orleans by Hurricane Katrina.

Sugar Bowl officials said Tuesday they will know in about three weeks whether Louisiana has recovered sufficiently to keep the game in the state where it has been played every year since it was established in 1935.

Tiger Stadium on the LSU campus can hold almost 92,000 and would make an adequate game site, but the city of Baton Rouge has insufficient hotel rooms and infrastructure to host an event that would attract thousands on Jan. 2.

That means New Orleans would need to be ready to house most of the fans, participants and media going to the game.

NHL | Hejduk out 4-5 weeks after knee surgery

The Colorado Avalanche will start the new season without one of their best players.

Hejduk

Right winger Milan Hejduk underwent arthroscopic knee surgery Tuesday and he will be out four to five weeks, the team announced.

Hejduk left Friday's Burgundy and White intrasquad game complaining of a sore knee and had not skated since.

During the NHL lockout, Hejduk underwent athroscopic surgery on his right knee after injuring it while playing for Pardubice of the Czech League, where he scored 25 goals in 48 games.

NFL | Ravens QB Boller likely out another month

OWINGS MILLS, Md. — Baltimore Ravens quarterback Kyle Boller is likely to be out until the end of October with his injured right toe.

Boller

Team officials said Tuesday that Boller will not require surgery on the toe, but will need at least another three weeks to heal. The earliest he could return is Oct. 16 against the Cleveland Browns. But it's more likely he would be back Oct. 23 against the Chicago Bears or Oct. 31 against the Pittsburgh Steelers.

The Ravens' 2003 first-round draft pick was injured in the 24-7 season opening loss to the Indianapolis Colts on a sack by defensive tackle Larry Triplett.

NFL | Martin expected to play after MRI negative

The MRI exam on Curtis Martin's strained right knee was negative and although the team isn't saying so officially, the Jets running back is expected to play Sunday against the Jaguars, ESPN.com's John Clayton reported.

Martin

The team was encouraged with the test result, which was revealed Tuesday. Coach Herman Edwards will address the injury Wednesday.

Martin was injured in a 17-7 win over the Miami Dolphins on Sunday. Though he played in the entire game, Martin woke up feeling sore Monday and went in for the MRI. The 32-year-old Martin, who won the NFL rushing title last season, hasn't missed a game since 1998 and has played through various injuries in his 11-year career.

CAR | Helmet Gordon threw to benefit Katrina fund

HUNTERSVILLE, N.C. — Robby Gordon is auctioning off the helmet he threw at Michael Waltrip, with all proceeds going to a relief fund for victims of Hurricane Katrina.

Gordon started a one-week auction for the helmet Tuesday on eBay. The winning bid will go to the Harrah's Employee Relief Fund.

"People started asking me almost immediately after the race if they could have my helmet, and rather than just giving it away, we'll use it to raise more money," Gordon said.

Gordon was fined a total of $35,000 and docked 50 driver points by NASCAR for retaliating against Waltrip during Sunday's race in New Hampshire.

SILVER KEY | 3 shelter locations

had no room."

Though the shelter is backed by the City of Manhattan, United Way and receives various grants, its main source of funding is through private donations, Chapman Semple said.

"Everything we do, we do it because we know it needs to get done," she said. "We take every penny we have and say, 'how can it impact today?'"

The shelter has three separate locations: 831 Leavenworth St., 901 Leavenworth St. and 1326 Fremont St.

The latter two locations are considered transitional facilities. These facilities are designed to help residents transition from homelessness to self-efficiency and are designed similar to an apartment complex where residents agree to pay as much rent as they can afford.

The first location is the actual homeless shelter. People seeking refuge are admitted for two weeks. Refugees are required to seek employment and get out in the community on their own, Chapman Semple said.

"We're not just a place where people can hang out, plop down and sleep," she said. "We're a place of action."

VOLLEYBALL | Success attributed to teamwork, patience

be mature and resilient."

One player who has proven her maturity in Fritz's eyes is junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin. In K-State's last outing, Hamlin paced the Cats with 15 kills on 22 attempts, marking a .545 hitting percentage. Hamlin is also No. 3 in the Big 12 in blocks with 1.61 per game.

"Joy Hamlin is playing really well," Fritz said. "She finally gets it – that takes time. Her and Agata (Rezende) are our two most consistent players."

Hamlin said she welcomes her leadership role.

"I'm focusing on being a more efficient middle blocker," Hamlin said. "Team-wise, I'm just working on setting a good example and having patience and understanding for the younger girls."

Hamlin said the team's success is due to its cohesiveness.

"As time goes by, we start playing more as a unit," Hamlin said. "When we play as a team, we're better off."

SCHOOLS | District 383 studied

To be recognized in the report, districts must serve grades kindergarten through 12, enroll 30 students per grade, reduce the achievement gap in reading and math proficiency by at least 5 percent and raise the rates of reading and math scores.

Standard & Poor's conducted its study with data from www.SchoolMatters.com, a free pubic service sponsored by the National Education Data Partnership.

Standard & Poor will also begin a more in-depth study on this subject involving four Kansas school districts, Jones said.

"Our district will be interested in looking at these findings and seeing if we will be able to use those strategies in our district," Jones said. "I'm not sure what the timeline is in this part of the study, but we'll definitely be interested in what we can gain from that."

The study's four main objectives are to help Kansas identify districts particularly effective in using financial resources to optimize learning; to analyze management practices, specifically the allocation of key resources, such as money, staff and time; to document promising findings and strategies to provide a resource for the state and a model for other districts to use in the effective allocation of resources; and to establish a base-line measure of resource effectiveness.

The study also follows the No Child Left Behind Act that aims for proficiency in reading and math for all students by 2014.

Unprepared for disaster

Crestview Christian Church

In the event of a moderate to strong earthquake that could lead to the failure Tuttle Creek Dam and flooding of the downstream area, residents in evacuation subzone 1 have several locations to evacuate to. The Crestview Christian Church, 4761 Tuttle Creek Blvd., is one of those locations.

Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community

Residents in evacuation subzone 5 can evacuate to Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community, 2121 Meadowlark Road. Another possible gathering place is the Blue Hills Shopping Center parking lot, 2303 Tuttle Creek Blvd.

Businesses not prepared for flood evacuation

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Army Corps of Engineers has a detailed plan for what should happen if the Tuttle Creek Dam would fail, but many Manhattan residents and businesses named gathering places are not aware of the it.

The U.S. Postal Service distributed booklets made by the Corps of Engineers describing what to do during an evacuation, but the post office only delivered booklets to customers located in evacuation zones, said Brian McNulty, operations manager with the Army Corps of Engineers.

Many large businesses, including Wal-Mart, K-Mart and the east Dillons are located in evacuation zones. Shoppers and employees may never have received information on the evacuation plan even though they spend a significant time in these zones.

"I am concerned. I work at a radio station only a few miles from the dam and if it bursts, I am going to be close to the rushing water," Chris Swick, senior in mass communications, said. "It makes me want to have an idea of what to do."

Swick did not receive the booklet at home and was not aware of evacuation instructions. Reading the booklet would have been a priority, especially after Hurricane Katrina, he said.

"If people are being told to come here we need to know how to deal with these people."

"I think people who have seen the devastation will pay better attention as to what should happen in the event of a natural disaster. I think Katrina is opening our generation up to thinking, yeah, I need to pay attention now," he said.

Sigma Chi is located in the flood zone and didn't receive the booklet. With 50 people living in the house, each member needed to receive and understand the information, said Chris Donnelly, Sigma Chi vice president and junior in geography.

"We would want to make a plan and pick a meeting place, that way we could account for everyone, but we need more information to do so," Donnelly said.

McNulty said he is not certain how the post office distributed the booklets or whether the fraternity would have received enough for every person receiving mail there.

After leaving their homes or workplaces, potential gathering places identified on the map should be used as a place for evacuees to gather. But many of the gathering places identified in the booklet were never contacted about their part in the evacuation.

Residents in evacuation subzone 8 can go to the Manhattan High School West Campus, 2100 Poyntz Ave. Other possible gathering places are Yorgensen-Meloan-Londeen Funeral Home, 1616 Poyntz Ave., and Manhattan Arts Center parking lot, 1520 Poyntz Ave.

'Under God' not original to pledge

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The controversial phrase "under God," ruled unconstitutional last week by a federal district judge in Sacramento, Calif., wasn't always in the Pledge of Allegiance.

According to www.encyclopedia.com, Congress issued a joint order to add the phrase to the pledge in 1954 to make a distinction between the United States and Communist countries.

"When the U.S. was fighting the Soviet Union during the Cold War and godless Communism, Congress wanted to make the affirmation of being one nation," said John Fliter, associate professor of political science.

Katha Hurt, principal of Woodrow Wilson Elementary School, said she can remember when "under God" was added to the pledge.

"I was probably in third or fourth grade," she said. "I lived in a small, rural community that was pretty conservative. Everyone believed in God, so no one found the change offensive or threatening."

According to www.encyclopedia.com, the Pledge of Allegiance first appeared in 1892 in an issue of the magazine, The Youth's Companion,

School board raises $15,000 for relief effort

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan community has raised $15,000 to aid Hurricane Katrina victims, and a large portion of these donations were made by Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 faculty and students, superintendent Bob Shannon said at Wednesday evening's board meeting.

The district also collected other items, such as personal hygiene products, back packs and clothing articles to benefit the evacuees.

The National Education Association has also raised more than $1 million for relief efforts.

"There are lots and lots of schools that will not reopen this year, Ron Johnson, spokesman for Manhattan-Ogden N.E.A., said. "There are lots and lots of teachers who will be out of work and lots of students who will be out of school unless they can go somewhere else."

However, the relief efforts are not complete. A Katrina Relief Run will be on Oct. 15 at Bishop Stadium at CiCo Park. The Red Cross is organizing a variety of relay races with all proceeds benefiting hurricane victims. The event is open to the public; for further information, call 776-5495.

"We encourage all the community to get involved," school board member Beth Tatarko said.

The school board also discussed USD 383 enrollment numbers. Overall, this year's enrollment is down 69 students from last school year. A

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Economy unstable

Kansas hasn't been doing as well economically as most other states and isn't in a position to enjoy long-term prosperity, according to a new Wichita State University study. Those conclusions, based on economic data from 1994 through 2003, were disputed Wednesday by a top aide to Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

Gulf Coast cleared

Residents of Galveston, Texas; low-lying sections of Houston and Corpus Christi, Texas; and a mostly emptied-out New Orleans were ordered to clear out, and hospital and nursing home patients were evacuated Wednesday as Hurricane Rita turned into a Category 5, 165-mph storm that could slam Texas by the weekend.

KU works on center

The University of Kansas is working on a $350 million plan that would use the resources of several areas of the university and regional hospitals to build a top-rated cancer program. The goal is to obtain a federal designation as a comprehensive cancer center which would make the campus eligible for millions of dollars in federal funding.

DON'T FORGET

The Cut-A-Thon to benefit K-State cancer research will be from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. today at Hair Experts, 1323 Anderson Ave.

Next Day Interviews will be from 8 to 11:30 a.m. today on the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

The Rob Regier Memorial Golf Tournament will be at noon Friday at the Colbert Hills Golf Course, 5200 Colbert Hills Drive.

Sebelius fundraising event raises $1,500 for campaign

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Gov. Kathleen Sebelius talks with Kathy Hund, left, and Christy Crenshaw, both rural Wabaunsee, Kan., residents on Wednesday night.

The K-State Alumni Center was filled with music, laughter and a love for politics at the Riley County Democrat's "Victory 2006" fundraiser featuring Gov. Kathleen Sebelius Wednesday night.

The fundraiser focused on revving up county residents about democratic politics and firing up new campaigns for 2006, Kathryn Focke, Riley County Democrats Chair, said.

The fundraiser brought in nearly $1,500, she said.

Sebelius, along with former Gov. John Carlin, Rep. Sydney Carlin and Rep. Tom Hawk spoke to the 160 people in attendance about important issues in the county and state.

During the summer, Sebelius toured Kansas, meeting with different communities and discussing their concerns.

"What was very interesting in the 24 counties was how similar everyone's hopes, concerns and dreams were," she said.

The governor spoke about health care, national security, education and other issues.

"This state is well positioned and prosperous to ensuring good education, health care," Sebelius said. "These aren't democrat or republican issues – these are Kansan issues."

Throughout Sebelius' three years as governor, she said party lines are dwindling and the issues are emerging.

Kay Shanks, Manhattan resident, said she agreed with Sebelius. Although she said she respects the Riley County Democrats, she has no official party affiliation.

"I consider myself to be world-minded and interested in sharing resources and wealth," Shanks said.

Kay Shanks' husband, Roger Shanks, said he was also issue-oriented rather than politically affiliated.

"I'm very concerned with the public school system, especially when it competes with private schools today," he said.

Kay Shanks said she attended the event because of her admiration for those involved.

"Most of what the governor does is heading in the right direction," she said. "I appreciate Sydney Carlin and Tom Hawk in they way they vote, and I check who and what they support very closely."

Sydney Carlin said her love for politics is why she continues to serve as a state representative.

"We are a family," she said. "When Kathleen and the rest of us were elected in office, we had to get out of the billion dollar debt – we did it."

Dam failure preparation

By JP Wilson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

September is National Preparedness Month, and the Army Corps of Engineers wants Manhattan residents to take a few minutes to review the Tuttle Creek Dam failure warning system. Booklets detailing evacuation plans were delivered to residents living in evacuation zones, but all Manhattan residents and visitors need to be prepared for dam failure.

"The magnitude of damage that would result is so significant that we take it very seriously. We plan for the worst, hope for the best and hope the community is educated and prepared," Bill Empson, project manager with the Army Corps of Engineers, said.

Everyone should read the booklet and form an evacuation plan, he added.

"I visit friends in Manhattan all the time, and their house is in an evacuation zone. The map is easy to understand, and now that I took a couple minutes to read it, I know what to do," Brandon Custer, a frequent visitor of Manhattan, said.

Six sirens are located throughout Manhattan, and if a moderate to strong earthquake were to threaten the stability of the dam, the sirens would sound. A voice message would follow instructing residents to evacuate.

"We understand the stress an evacuation will cause, and it is a very important decision," Empson said. "So if it is made, people need to take it seriously to help save lives."

Did you know?

How to prepare

- Ensure home, work, school or other places frequently visited are located in an evacuation zone.
- Study the subzones to identify the evacuation routes.
- Have children check the location of their school and determine where they will evacuate if they are in an evacuation zone.
- Make arrangements if family members need assistance during an evacuation.
- Get a booklet and read it.

After hearing the sirens, four steps should be followed. First, follow directions from the warning system. Second, evacuate by foot. Third, watch for downed power lines and the condition of buildings and roads. Fourth, help people who need assistance.

If the warning system were not in place or were not followed, 400 people could die. Unlike the floodwater in New Orleans, the water from the dam would not be stagnant, Empson said.

"Within six to 10 hours after the dam fails, the water will reach 17 feet, and then it will be flowing very quickly," he said. "It will likely take debris down the stream and would damage homes that were already damaged by the earthquake," he said.

The Army Corps of Engineers coordinated with Riley County along with numerous state and federal agencies to complete a full-scale dam failure exercise last fall. Failure of the dam was simulated and evacuation was practiced.

After the exercise, the Army Corps of Engineers re-evaluated the current plan and made adjustments.

"It taught us a lot about communication and where we need to improve," Empson said. "We ended up buying a whole new set of radios that include the school district."

The warning system will not be a permanent fixture for Manhattan residents. After the dam is strengthened the warning systems will not be necessary and will be removed. Construction on the dam will be completed in five phases and will cost a total of $200 million. The project is estimated to be completed in 2012.

College Republicans, Young Democrats offer political outlets, ideas

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State follows the nation's two-party political system with Young Democrats and College Republicans as the main campus political organizations.

Clint Westgate, senior in political science, is president of the College Republicans. He said the College Republicans encourage political involvement.

"The purpose of College Republicans is to provide a place conservative students can meet with like-minded students and get involved with the political process," Westgate said.

If you go

Meetings

What: College Republicans and Young Democrats meetings
When: College Republicans meet at 8 p.m. on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. Young Democrats meets at 7 p.m. every other Tuesday.
For more information: Contact Clint Westgate for College Republicans and Jeff Smith for Young Democrats.

Jeff Smith, senior in political science and president of the Young Democrats, said the group tries to promote democratic ideals while helping on-campus Democrats get involved in local politics, issues and activities.

"In the past we've done an education forum right before the elections," Smith said. "We got people from all sides. Basically what we do is get knowledge out there."

Smith said Young Democrats facilitates forums and runs registration booths to encourage people to register and vote. Westgate said College Republicans performs similar activities.

"We did voter registration drives last year and helped to organize speakers," Westgate said. "We are looking into a number of community activity services for this year."

Both groups have more than 100 interested members. Smith said Young Democrats has around 40 active members and more than 130 on its mailing list. The College Republicans' mailing list contains more than 100 names.

"More people find out about it on Facebook than anywhere else," Westgate said.

Both use outside financial backing to fund activities and guest speakers.

College Republicans are funded through dues and member donations. Young Democrats have fundraisers, like its recent joint fundraiser with the Riley County Democrats at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

Joelle Mausolf, junior in political science and Young Democrats vice president, said the group interacts with locally.

"We work a lot with the Riley County Democrats and the state party," she said. "We do a lot of voter education and held a Barbara Meyer candidate forum last year."

Smith said Young Democrats helps the state party during campaigns by going door-to-door, making phone calls and performing basic groundwork.

College Republicans has also assisted off-campus party leaders, Westgate said.

"When it's a campaign year, some of our members will go door-to-door and help with campaigns," Westgate said. "Last year's president and I did internships on Jim Ryun's campaign."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Residents should be ready for flooding

The full pool at Tuttle Creek Reservoir contains more than 2 million acre-feet of water, restrained from flooding Manhattan by a tenuous earth dam built in the 1950s by the Army Corps of Engineers.

That means many residents live in the equivalent of a drained bathtub, lacking only some mildew on the roads and a massive rubber ducky on Poyntz Ave.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Over the past few weeks, the Corps of Engineers has mailed emergency information pamphlets to residents living in evacuation zones, containing important information like where to seek refuge in the event of a dam failure.

Only a portion of residents that would be affected have received it, and several businesses designated as gathering places are completely unaware of the action plan.

Manhattan has had its share of floods, including the 1951 debacle that led to the construction of the dam in the first place. The more recent 1993 flood also left many residents treading water.

But those natural disasters allowed officials some forewarning. A dam failure would result in immediate flooding, and an action plan that can be quickly executed is essential.

Everybody who might be affected by this potential catastrophe deserves to be aware of it.

Don't quit

Loans, classes can be overwhelming; students must try to persevere

ALYSSA ALEXANDER

Maybe it's just me, or maybe it's just my mind-set, but does anyone else feel a little worn down already?

I know we've only had class for about three weeks now, but I'm already feeling the stress of things.

I've always heard that your college years are supposed to be some of the best years of your life, but as of right now, I'm just not feeling it.

Like everyone else, I came to this university with my heart set on good times and my eyes set on my future. I was ready to make things happen for myself. But for some reason, the good times aren't commencing, and I find myself more than a little depressed.

I know, like tons of other students, that I can't afford college. I also know that my parents are depending on me to use their money wisely and perform to the best of my ability in my classes.

But honestly, I walked onto this campus, lost my name and gained a number.

No one actually cares if I go to class anymore, no one will be calling my mother to let her know I was absent, and that just makes it that much easier to sleep in and play hooky.

Going home to get away from my homework and poor attendance is no longer an option because I often find my parents are disappointed in my performance and would rather I stay in Manhattan to give my school work a little more attention.

I can't even find my job to be a getaway because somewhere in the mix of things I lost that too.

Somewhere, since I've been here, my heart stopped beating and I just lost my love of life. And I can't help but feel that I'm miserable with no excuses because I could fix my problems if I'd only try.

I can't find any reason why I'm still here other than I feel that I have something to prove.

It didn't feel like anyone was really cheering for me when I left home, destined for college.

My money wasn't in great supply, my car was playing the, "Will we make it?" game every time I traveled to Manhattan from home, and even I wasn't sure if I would be accountable and actually make it through college.

So here I am, behind in my classes, poor and more in debt than ever and feeling low because my situation seems a bit ridiculous.

On my road to college, I've managed so far to make a wrong turn, drive out of my way to turn around and hit a skunk in the confusion of things.

And now I have to deal with the sheer realization that the sour skunk stench is going to cling to me for the next 60 miles. Great ... but at least I'm back on track.

That's the point of it all right? Being a fighter and proving everyone wrong? Climbing the ladder to success and advancing yourself in life, all the while conquering obstacle after obstacle that arises in your path?

Well, let's just say I'm doing something like that, I'm barely cruising by ... but I'm on my way.

So, for those of you who are feeling a bit like me, (and I know this sounds cheesy) just chin up.

We've already conquered getting loans from our parents or banks as well as the realization that we're going to be in debt for the rest of our lives, so let's spend this borrowed money wisely and never give up.

Bush learned no lesson from Katrina

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

Maybe Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., was right when he said we shouldn't automatically view Bush's reconstruction plan with a cynical eye as I did previously.

Unfortunately, being such a liberal devil, I tend to agree more with Obama's statement that we also need to verify what Bush is doing. And from what I can see, the President is up to his old tricks again.

The first problem I noticed was the cheap car dealership response he always gives while he to explain the deficit he's acquired: You don't have to pay a cent today because we'll take care of everything! And no worries about tax raises because here at George Dubya's, we're crazy!

But just like getting suckered in by that slick used-car salesmen, just as soon as you realize how much you actually owe, the deceitful idiot who did this to you no longer works there.

Sadly, Bush's only solution to getting rid of this massive debt is to once again promise budget cuts. Even if he's able to cut other government programs enough to cover the billions that will be spent on this disaster, we've already witnessed how watered down agencies like FEMA already are.

I pray that Bush has given up all hope of going to Mars by now.

I probably wouldn't complain that he wants to spend the $200 billion, even with his dim-witted tax cuts, if I hadn't found out exactly who this money is going to benefit. With the first major action Bush took, we found out who he really wants to help out during this process. As anyone could have guessed it's not the people who really need it. Instead it is multi-national corporations such as Halliburton.

As if the no-bid contracts he handed them weren't enough for his buddies, Bush also made another decision to make sure the companies could really profit off this tragedy. He actually had the gall to suspend the prevailing wage law in the Katrina area.

This man is like a Robin Hood in reverse. It bewilders me how anyone can justify paying workers in these areas less when many of them have already lost everything and have no other job to return to.

Need more proof the compassionate conservatism Bush preaches is as false as his military record? According to a recent New York Times article "Republicans said Karl Rove, the White House deputy chief of staff and Mr. Bush's chief political adviser, was in charge of the reconstruction effort."

With a CIA leak investigation going and more scandals under his belt then an Enron executive, this man should be fired. Instead, he is now relaxing at an exclusive conference in Aspen, Colo. Don't worry though, I'm sure he's still doing his job and thinking constantly of the reconstruction effort. Maybe our president has finally given up on being viewed as a loving man though. His wife at least tried to look compassionate while talking about "Hurricane Karina," while his mother did not seem to care at all while making comments about how the conditions of Katrina were working out for the underprivileged.

From beginning to end, President Bush has failed to take care of this situation. The hurricane is now gone and it has taken his caring veneer with it. Now it's time to take off those silly standard-issue blindfolds Bush handed out and see the truth for yourselves.

Then you will see just how much corruption and greed have gone into the policies he enforced.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Columnist should give all the facts

Editor,

There was one important fact and a couple considerations left out of Lucas Maddy's article regarding the controversial Nebraska couple. I spent the summer in Omaha, Neb., and read the headlines day in and day out regarding the controversy which is really a big deal to the state of Nebraska and its citizens.

Both the bride and groom are mentally handicapped. Though neither to the degree of mental retardation, their reduced mental capacities played a significant role in the series of events that now top headlines. The male was in the special education program while the female still is. I personally don't agree with the marriage or its outcomes, but I don't necessarily agree with the potential punishment either, as this is a true test of modern law.

If anyone is to be punished, the parents of the girl ought to take responsibility for allowing a relationship to develop in the first place.

Both families were aware of the age difference before the pregnancy. Even neighbors in the small Nebraskan town were aware, hence the spark that started the fire.

For anyone unfamiliar with the case, Maddy's article can create an immediate bias toward the male. But when considering all the facts, he isn't 100 percent to blame.

It's important to state the facts if you're going to give an opinion. Even if nothing else is said on the matter, give the public the information needed so that they may form their own unbiased opinions.

Leave the pledge of allegiance alone

Editor,

God, as in "under God" in the pledge of allegiance, may educe visions of the unknown, unknowable or a supreme being of some sort; it is a matter of individual choice and beyond the scope of the Constitution.

What it does not do is violate the protection guaranteed under the First Amendment, the existence of which serves as evidence of the distinction between the ideas.

In his personal disagreement with religion, Mr. Newdow limits the word "god" to but one point of view, and in so doing endeavors to empower both himself and religion with powers neither rightfully claim.

Constitutionally ineffectual as it may be, the real problem isn't Mr. Newdow's public discussion of his personal tiff with religion, but that the remedy he seeks utterly discounts a much more clearly defined right: the freedom of choice.

ID costs not students' responsibility

Editor,

This letter is written in response to the article in the Sept. 14 paper regarding identity theft.

I whole-heartedly agree that putting your social security number on your student ID is not a good idea.

However, when a new student registers, they are given the option of an alternate ID number. I am not sure if that has always been an option, but it was when I registered last year.

So, if a person was offered the option it would be their fault that their social security number appears on their ID.

The major point that I don't agree with is that K-State should have to pay for replacing student IDs. What would happen if K-State did pay for all of these IDs to be replaced? The money used to buy new IDs has to come from somewhere.

Some options to acquire this money would be to cut the faculty's pay, cut money from budgets for campus activities and organizations, or raise tuition.

Over the past few years I have paid close attention to a couple schools near my hometown that passed bond issues to pay for things.

Through observation of these schools and human nature, my guess is that pay and budget cuts are out of the question.

Now we are left with the option of raising tuition. Doing this would impose the financial consequences on the whole student body.

I don't know about you, but I would rather not have to pay for someone else's mistake.

Social Security office to move to new location over weekend

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those interested in getting a new social security card, they might have until Monday for their cards to process.

The Manhattan Social Security Administration, currently located at 222 South Wind Place, is moving its office to a new location, 1121 Hudson Ave., this weekend. The Manhattan Social Security offices will be closed Friday.

Dennis McLaughlin, Manhattan Social Security Administration district manager, said the office has looked forward to the move for years.

"We've just had so many reasons for the move," he said. "But the office has served us well."

The local Social Security office has been at its South Wind Place location for nearly 20 years.

McLaughlin said the office is rather small for the Manhattan-area demands.

"Our reception area is rather small," he said. "A lot of people are concerned about their privacy, where people may feel like someone is listening in on their conversations, their information."

But privacy isn't the only reason for the move. McLaughlin notes that there are several technological advances that demand a larger space.

"When we originated the office, we didn't have computers or fax machines," he said. "We've become more automatic, and it's helped. Computers have big servers, therefore bigger space is in demand."

While the office is closed on Friday, McLaughlin said there are still other ways the Social Security Administration can serve the community. He encourages students to look at the Social Security Administration Web site, www.ssa.gov, or call the Social Security Administration national help line (800) 772-1213.

According to the site, most people can access Social Security card, welfare and retirement information without going to a Social Security office. The site also offers advice on Social Security, taxes and medicare.

By Sept. 26, McLaughlin said the new office should be in full operation.

"We've had small installations of phone lines and other things in recent weeks," he said.

McLaughlin said that all data moved over the weekend is safely protected.

"The General Services Administration is coordinating the move, where people are guarding the files," he said. "Everything will be in order."

Embryonic stem cell column incorrect

Editor,

I was disgusted with Kody Cooper's article on embryonic stem cell research. I would like to take this chance to give Collegian readers some real facts regarding stem cell research.

Mistruth: "Adult stem cell research has the greatest promise."

Fact: Embryonic stem cells are capable of becoming any type of cell in the body. From National Geographic, "Adult stem cells ... have thus far proved incapable of producing the full range of cell types that embryonic stem cells can."

Mistruth: "Not one cure has been produced."

Fact: Scientists have been able to grow new cardiac tissue from embryonic stem cells which will group together and pulse. These new cardiac muscle cells have been implanted in mice and have replaced damaged tissue and sped up recovery.

Oppositionists would have us believe that some horrible embryo-snatching boogey man steals embryos from the unwilling. Scientists use embryos from fertility clinics that are set for disposal. They are cells, suspended in time, not dividing and nowhere near developing a nervous system or a heart.

I know this is a highly controversial issue. But intelligent people are those who do research before forming an opinion.

Watching sports brings fans together

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

Three former Dallas Cowboy legends had their legacies etched in Cowboy history during halftime of Monday night's game against the hated Washington Redskins.

Troy Aikman, Emmitt Smith and Michael Irvin took their rightful places among other Cowboy greats on the heralded Ring of Honor at Texas Stadium.

They became just the 15th, 16th and 17th players to be put on the Ring, next to other legends such as Roger Staubach, Tony Dorsett and Tom Landry.

Aikman, Smith and Irvin, known as The Triplets, said they felt it was only proper they go on the ring together after accomplishing so much as teammates.

"It's truly a blessing to go on the ring with these two," Irvin said during Monday's broadcast. "It would not have been right any other way."

In their nine seasons together, they comprised one of the greatest offensive threats in modern NFL history. They won three Super Bowls, went to a combined 19 Pro Bowls and broke numerous Cowboy records, such as the most rushing, passing and receiving yards, along with total touchdowns, points and receptions.

Watching The Triplets' careers was an incredible experience for me growing up, and being able to watch their games with my father made it that much sweeter.

My dad's love for the Cowboys rubbed off on me, and watching them play is one way we bond.

We have seen it all, from the glory days of Super Bowl victories, to sitting through three consecutive 5-11 seasons.

I remember watching Don Beebe strip Leon Lett as he returned a fumble for a touchdown in Super Bowl XXVII.

We were tuned in when Smith won the MVP award in Super Bowl XXVIII after he rushed for 132 yards and two touchdowns to help the Cowboys to their second consecutive championship.

One of my favorite memories came on Oct. 27, 2002, when Smith surpassed Walter Payton as the all-time leading rusher in NFL history.

I remember it like it was yesterday.

I was on the couch and my dad was in his chair, and we were talking about how cool watching Smith break the record was going to be. We both knew he was going to break it during that game, we just did not know when it was going to happen.

Midway through the fourth quarter, Smith took the hand-off from then-quarterback Chad Hutchinson and burst up the middle for an 11-yard gain to claim the record.

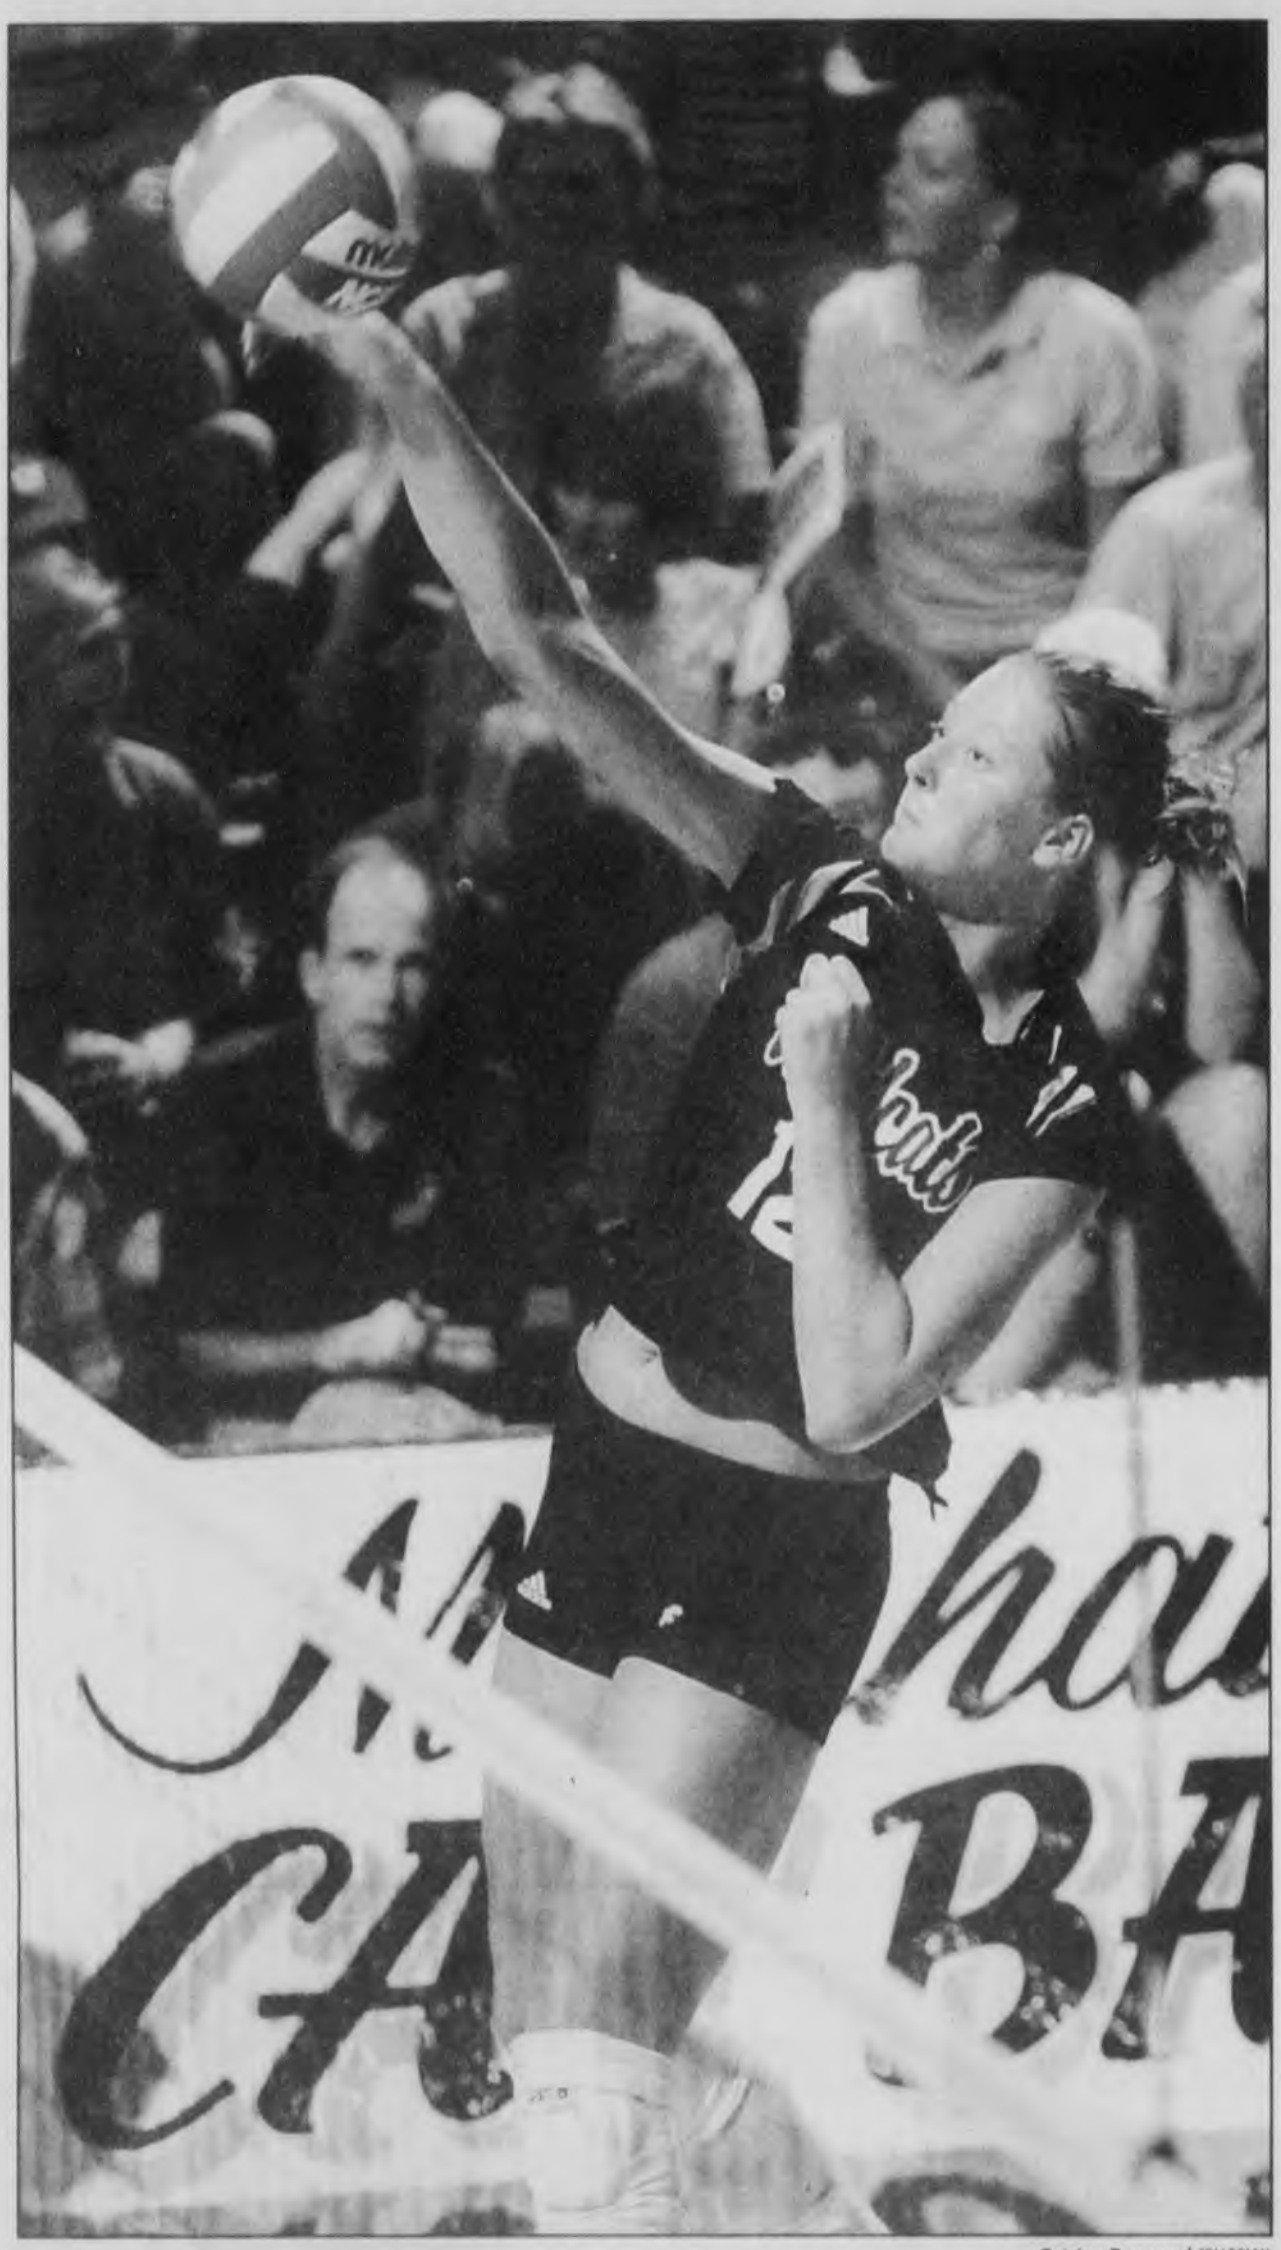
After Smith stumbled for those 11 precious yards to put him over the mark, he stood up and threw his arms in the air.

The whole stadium went nuts, and I started jumping up and down like a little kid on Christmas.

I will never forget what happened next. I looked at my dad for some sort of expression during this momentous occasion, and he smirked at me and said, "He should've scored."

That's the kind of response I would expect from him.

He is a pretty humble guy, and doesn't get overly excited about too much, but I know that moment meant something to him because we shared it together.



Even though I am away from home and don't talk to my dad as much, I still call him every week to make sure he is watching the Dallas game.

Sports has a funny way of uniting people, and I just want to thank Aikman, Smith and Irvin for giving my dad and me so many wonderful memories.

Seeing those three men do the things they did on the field every week brought my father and me closer.

Those Sundays belonged to Martin and Cedrique, something nobody can ever take away from us.

Wildcats get 3rd consecutive sweep against Jackrabbits

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In its first-ever meeting against South Dakota State, the K-State volleyball team notched its third consecutive sweep, defeating the Jackrabbits 3-0 (30-18, 30-17, 30-26), Wednesday night.

South Dakota State came out fighting against the No. 17 Wildcats, but in games one and two, K-State controlled the tempo with a solid lead throughout the majority of the two games. Game three, similar to the Texas Tech match Saturday, proved to be more of a nail-biter.

"Undisciplined is my answer for that," coach Suzie Fritz said of her team's performance in game three. "You know, you can't wait for people to give you points and be complacent. You have to go earn them."

Sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg echoed Fritz's concern.

"We definitely need to work on consistency over time, that's our main objective right now," Spiegelberg said. "We're just trying to play good

Simosa named No. 1 singles player for K-State

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even after a 9-12 finish last year, K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau isn't changing a thing.

Bietau said the same system with different faces will be enough to change the Wildcats' luck in the 2005-06 season, as he said this year's team might be the most talented he's ever coached.

"This is a completely different team than last year," Bietau said. "In terms of the way we do things, we really don't do anything differently than we did last year."

Bietau said even though the team is looking better in practice than it did last year, he still needs to see how they perform in real situations.

"I'm pretty reluctant to start talking about the team and how good they are before they ever even hit a ball in a competition," Bietau said. "When you're really good, you never have to say it yourself because everyone around you will realize it."

A few surprises for this season include senior Jessica Simosa being listed as the No. 1 singles player over sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia. Kvaratskhelia had been the strong favorite for the spot after having the most successful freshman season in Wildcat history last year.

Bietau said the move was based on what he had seen from Simosa in practice.

"It's a result of her being good through the last few weeks," Bietau said. "She played solid and won her challenge matches in practice."

Simosa said the team had improved in the off season by running and exercising their core muscles.

Kvaratskhelia said the team looks both physically and mentally tougher

CFB | Games postponed because of Hurricane Rita

HOUSTON — Rice and Houston postponed home games scheduled for Saturday, and Texas A&M has pushed up its game against Texas State, in anticipation of Hurricane Rita reaching the Texas Gulf Coast this weekend.

The Aggies will play Texas State Thursday night instead of Saturday.

Rice was scheduled to play Navy, but on Wednesday the game was rescheduled for Oct. 22. Houston was to play Southern Mississippi on Saturday. No makeup date was announced, but school officials said they were looking at Nov. 12 or 13.

To make room, the SMU-Houston game originally scheduled for Nov. 12 was postponed to Nov. 19, when both teams have an open date.

The Golden Eagles play at Marshall on Tuesday, Nov. 8.

CFB | Spartans regret South Bend flag-raising

It was an image replayed on all the highlight shows — and likely one seared into the minds of Notre Dame players, coaches and fans.

Smith

Michigan State's ecstatic players raced to midfield after their 44-41 upset of Notre Dame to plant their school flag on the Fighting Irish's home turf.

Some of the Spartans, including coach John L. Smith, regret the flag-raising.

"We would not have encouraged our guys to do that," Smith said.

He suggested a more appropriate response would have been hoisting the Megaphone Trophy for which the two schools play. The trophy, however, was not in the stadium after the game.

Notre Dame coach Charlie Weis didn't say a word about the Spartans' postgame antics.

MLB | Royals to open 2006 at Kauffman Stadium

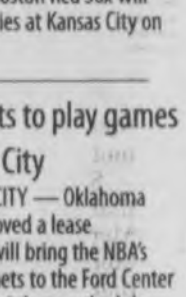
KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals will open next season at home on April 3 against the Detroit Tigers, the club announced Wednesday as it released its 2006 schedule.

The schedule also features six games against the Cardinals, May 19-21 at Kansas City and June 30-July 2 at St. Louis.

Another schedule highlight includes the New York Yankees at Kauffman Stadium on Labor Day, for the beginning of a three-game series on Sept. 4. The Royals are also home on July 4 as part of a three-game series against the Minnesota Twins.

Kansas City will host NL Central Division teams Pittsburgh and Milwaukee, June 20-June 25, in interleague play. The Boston Red Sox will play their only series at Kansas City on Aug. 8-10.

NBA | Hornets to play games in Oklahoma City



OKLAHOMA CITY — Oklahoma City officials approved a lease Wednesday that will bring the NBA's New Orleans Hornets to the Ford Center to play most of their home schedule.

The Hornets will schedule 35 of their 41 home games in Oklahoma City, with the other six games to be played in Louisiana. The New Orleans Arena, where the Hornets normally play, was damaged by Hurricane Katrina and could take months to repair.

Playoffs games are also to be played in Oklahoma City, and the Hornets will also have the option to play in Oklahoma City next year if they so choose.

TEN | Serena Williams loses in China in second round

BEIJING — Serena Williams was upset in the second round of the China Open on Wednesday, losing to unheralded Sun Tiantian 6-2, 7-6 (7).

Williams

Sun, ranked 127th in the world and fourth among Chinese players, took advantage of numerous errors by Williams, who said she was bothered by an ailing left knee.

"I just played terrible," Williams said. "Sun played very well and was ready for the match. I'm disappointed I couldn't perform better today."

Williams, No. 9 in the world rankings, won last year's event and is very popular in China. However, the crowd cheered as Sun pulled off a surprise victory — the first of her career against a top 40 ranked player.

PUTTING ON YOUR FACE

Choosing the kind of makeup that is right for your complexion

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cosmetics can be a girl's best friend or worst enemy. It all depends on what kinds and colors are used.

There are many kinds of makeup that are used and common mistakes that are made when applying it.

Gail Urban, studio owner and beauty consultant at Merle Norman, said the store specializes in basic and advanced makeup artistry. Basic makeup would be what a person would wear for class or work. Advanced could be worn for a special occasion or a night on the town.

"We can help teach someone how to highlight a certain feature they like on their face or diminish something they dislike," Urban said.

Urban said an important aspect that most makeup users need to do is have the right skin care system. Merle Norman can help a person choose the correct products for skin issues and give basic skin care lessons.

She said the studio also offers a five-minute hydrating facial with a foot massage, consultations and makeovers that are all complimentary unless the makeover is for a special occasion.

Other services include birthday parties for ages 9 to 16, presentations to sororities, civic groups and classrooms and participation in fashion shows.

Urban said the store has been at Manhattan Town Center for about two months, although the company itself has been around for about 75 years.

"Many years ago, when this company first started, Merle Norman established the 'Try before you buy' motto, which is one we still use today," Urban said.

She said its products are a little bit higher priced than others, but the cosmetics are a higher quality. Merle Norman is more of a private and personal establishment, she said. They keep track of products that are bought and they want customers to have 100 percent satisfaction.

"We are really excited to be back in Manhattan," she said. "We are looking forward to serving the Manhattan community and the K-State women."

Tasha Staab, sophomore in elementary education and beauty consultant at Merle Norman, gave some tips some women may not know.

"Ask for three kinds of foundations, when buying it at a counter, and from there decide which one fits best with your skin," she said.

Staab said to use three shades of eye-shadow as well. Applying the lightest on the brow-bone, darker on eyelid and darkest on the crease.

She said using a cleaning and foundation brush keeps things more sanitary, as well as cleaning makeup brushes every other day with conditioning brush, available at Merle Norman.

If eye or lip pencils break after sharpening, put them in the freezer for a couple of hours. Also wetting powder shadows will create a darker color.

Other products that are helpful are a cream eyeliner that doesn't run and a lasting foundation that lasts for eight to nine hours and doesn't rub off on clothes.

"Cleansing your face is extremely important," she said. "Cleanse, tone and moisturize and choose something that will not dry your skin out."

Brooke Heavey, senior in criminology and Clinique consultant at Dillard's, said to always use a moisturizer.

"Buying products at the mall allows the customer to try them on and find out what works," she said. "A counter will give you quality products and quality service."

Heavey said to test out products to see what works and to try new things also.

Wearing a powder over a foundation extends the wear of the foundation and wearing it over a blush allows a more natural look.

"Just remember that with any makeup, less is more, you can always add," she said.

She said the makeup from the counter will last longer than what is sold at department or drug store.

A bronzer is a healthy way to get a glow without damaging skin with the sun, Heavey said. Also, using an eyebrow pencil will help shape brows and keep them tame.

Clinique's "Impossibly Glossy Lip-gloss" gives a wet look and color for a quick lip.

Cravings satisfied with chocolate cake yummy to the tummy

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the end of September, the weather turns cooler, leaves change colors and people need more chocolate.

Chocolate cake is one way to satisfy a chocolate craving.

In fact, the richer the chocolate, the better. How does a chocolate sheet cake with a chocolate fudge icing sound?

Since this cake is baked in a jellyroll pan, it cooks quickly.

The icing is poured over a warm cake and allowed to cool just long enough to set up. The chocolate sheet cake is then served warm and dripping with icing.

In less than an hour, this cake can be mixed, cooked and served.

Buttermilk is the secret ingredient that makes this cake and frosting so rich and tasty Regular milk can be substituted in a pinch, but buttermilk makes the cake creamier and more flavorful.

This is a great cake to make any time. No excuses needed to indulge a sweet tooth.

Worth the time recipe

Chocolate Sheet Cake:

2 cups of flour
2 cups of sugar
A pinch of salt
1 1/4 sticks of margarine
4 Tablespoons of cocoa
1 cup of water
1/2 cup of buttermilk
1 teaspoon of baking soda
1 teaspoon of cinnamon
1 teaspoon of vanilla
2 eggs, slightly beaten

Mix the flour, sugar and salt in a bowl. Set aside.

In a saucepan, heat to boiling the margarine, cocoa and water. Pour over the dry ingredients and mix.

Add the buttermilk, baking soda, cinnamon, vanilla and eggs. Mix well.

Bake 20 minutes at 400 degrees in a jellyroll pan (or a 9-inch by 13-inch pan may be used). Allow cake to cool only slightly before pouring on the cing.

Icing:

Make icing while cake cools slightly.
1 stick of margarine
3 Tablespoons of cocoa
6 Tablespoons of buttermilk
1 1/2 pounds of powdered sugar
1 teaspoon of vanilla
1/2 teaspoon of cinnamon

In a saucepan, heat to boiling the margarine, cocoa and buttermilk. Remove from heat and mix with the powdered sugar, vanilla, and cinnamon. Blend well and pour over the warm cake.

TV PREMIERS

"Everybody Hates Chris"
Thursdays at 7 p.m. on UPN, premieres Sept. 22.

Back in 1982, 13-year-old Chris moves with his family to a new neighborhood in Brooklyn, N.Y. Every day he takes a two-hour bus ride to a "good" school — that happens to be predominantly white. Chris Rock narrates the story, which is based on his life and how he came to use humor in his life. (www.upn.com)

"Love, Inc."
Thursdays at 8:30 p.m. on UPN, premieres Sept. 22.

The people who work at Love, Inc., a dating consulting firm, work hard to help their clients find true love, despite the fact that all the employees have trouble finding loves of their own. (www.upn.com)

"The Night Stalker"
Thursdays at 8 p.m. on ABC, premieres Sept. 29.

After his wife is killed in a bizarre attack that he survived, newspaper reporter Carl Kolchak is determined to find her killer. He discovers other weird deaths similar to his wife's, and begins to wonder who — or what — killed them all and how they're all connected. Kolchak reports the weird and mysterious things no one else wants to hear about. (www.abc.com)

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (Jan. 21 - Feb. 18)
A good time to learn to laugh at yourself — or develop multiple personalities.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20)
You will have an intellectual discussion with a potato soon. You'll be so caught up in whether it was Descartes or Voltaire who first advocated empiricism, that it will fail to strike you as a bit odd that the potato knows much of anything about 17th-century French philosophers.

Aries (March 21 - April 19)
You will become trapped in an elevator with the local Christian Karaoke Club, but, as with many hostage situations, you may end up getting a television mini-series out of it.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20)
This might be a good time to refer to your roommate as "Watson." Eventually, you'll be able to reconstruct an evening's events from a drop of raspberry vinaigrette.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)
You're fussing with your hair too much. Perhaps you should cut back on shampoo. Or at least demand real poo.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22)
Things haven't been going well for you lately, and you're sinking into a fairly ugly bit of self-pity. You merely need to count your blessings.

Leo (July 23 - August 22)
You need to stop accepting responsibility for your life. Everything is actually the fault of that darned liberal media.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
What are you looking here for? You should be on a spaceship, sticking a fish in your ear.

Libra (Sept. 22 - Oct. 22)
You will vow to tell the truth, but it will backfire on you. Most people find that kind of behavior highly suspicious.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
Your perfume or cologne has too much patchouli. Only an idiot wears patchouli.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec.21)
You used to say "live and let live." But if this ever-changing world, which we live in, makes you give it a miss, say "live and let die."

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)
Soon, through no fault of your own, you'll catch someone underlining words in a library book.

Candlelight vigil held for Katrina

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Big 12 Council on Black Student Government in conjunction with the Black Student Union sponsored a candlelight vigil on Wednesday night. The vigil was a special recognition of Hurricane Katrina victims and took place at All Faiths Chapel.

Abdul Yahaya, junior in civil engineering and chairman for the Big 12 Council, said the event was a reflection on Katrina and more of a celebration.

"The same thing is going on at nine other Big 12 schools, at the same time tonight," he said.

The Big 12 Council is the government body presiding over all black student organizations, including BSU.

Josh Criswell, sophomore in social science and president of BSU, said the mission of BSU is to uplift and promote African-Americans culture at K-State.

"We hold meetings every Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Union, room 212," he said. "It's a place for any student to come and hang out, and our intention is to enlighten campus on African-American culture and issues."

The candlelight vigil event began with a performance by Workers of Wisdom, a Bible study and ministry group. They performed an inspirational dance, dramatically displaying the concept of encouragement.

The United Black Voices choir also performed of "Blessed be the Name of the Lord," and later they sang "Yes!"

Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity, also spoke.

"Any person ... has to have some kind of reaction to the devastation, loss and incredible fury of nature," she said. "We have an awful lot of people – our people – who have been left behind.

"Hurricane Katrina is a metaphor for all people in America who are sick, pitiful and can't get out. Hurricane Katrina also reminds us that everything that has an end has a new beginning," Gordon said.

Twenty-nine people lined the front of the chapel to begin the candle lighting process. Each person read an inspiring message on the subjects of hope, unity, compassion and more. There were 29 people because the Hurricane struck on Aug. 29.

The Rev. Don Fallon also spoke about how Katrina is a reminder of terrible losses.

"Maybe we can go from here with the realization that our relationships in life ... give life ultimate value," he said. "Sometimes out of this comes new life, new hope."

Gloria Conner, junior in accounting, attended the event and said there needs to be time to grieve for what was lost.

"I think this is very significant because there have been lots of fundraisers, but not really an opportunity to breathe and remember those who lost things," Conner said.

Midnight madness focuses on improv

By John Becker
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If students have nothing to do around midnight on Thursday, the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance has a solution.

This year's first Midnight Madness begins at 11:30 p.m. in the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium.

Midnight Madness is a student-run night of improvisational acting. Students bring scripts and the emcees distribute them to the audience. Then members of the audience come up on stage and act out the scene.

"The great thing about Madness is we don't censor unless it gets way out of hand," George Stavropoulos, senior in theater, said. "You can say what you feel."

All students are welcome to write scripts, watch and act.

"It's a way for students from all majors to express themselves," Bret Palmer, junior in theater, said. "Madness is like an uncensored Saturday Night Live."

This year Kelly Wood, senior in theater, is one of the hosts. The second will be announced tonight.

Midnight Madness started about 10 years ago and has been growing since then. It runs one Thursday each month in the Purple Masque, which seats about 100.

"This is something you'll talk about through the weekend and on Monday," Wood said.

Walt Disney College recruits K-State students as interns

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you go
What: Walt Disney College recruitment presentation
When: 4 p.m. today
Where: K-State Student Union Ballroom

Recruiters are offering jobs in the Magic Kingdom and positions with Mickey Mouse and Goofy.

On Sept. 21, Walt Disney College representatives presented internship opportunities to K-State students. They will give another presentation at 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Internships are in fields ranging from architecture and hotel operations to sales and marketing.

Aaryn Grauer, junior in personal financial planning, worked in the Magic Kingdom, doing main street operations like parade crowd control and conducting in spring 2004 and 2005.

"I was just researching Disney as a school project and stumbled across the intern programs on their Web site," she said. "I went to the presentation and didn't really think I would go, but ended up doing it. It was a spur of the moment kind of thing, but I loved it."

Grauer said her favorite aspect of the internship was meeting other students.

"I'm still close to a lot of them," she said. "And what I also loved was 'making the magic,' just like they say. It really is what you're doing, and you can see the smiles on every face."

Grauer said she plans to return in January 2007 for an advanced internship, which will be more directed toward her major.

Zach Hainline, junior in open option, was a lifeguard at Blizzard Beach during his Disney internship. He said he enjoyed the experience because he now has friends nationwide. He said he also liked the free admission and a nearby beach.

Hainline said he acquired people skills through his internship.

"You learn how to manage crowds, how to approach people and how to deal with people," he said.

Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, agreed.

"The program is a great way to build transferable skills," she said.

Brantley said students should dress in business casual for the presentations. After students fill out applications, Disney representatives will have initial talks with them.

She said the representatives do not look for students of a certain age or major, but select students through an interview process. Students who make it through that process and accept an internship can remain connected to K-State through CES's university recognition program.

To apply, students must be enrolled full-time with a 2.0 grade point average or better and must have work authorization. Interested students must either attend a presentation or watch one online. They can schedule an interview at the presentations or set up a phone interview after watching an online presentation. Two to three weeks later applicants should receive a statement of their status.

"You meet such nice, quality people (at Disney)," Hainline said. "That's who Disney hires. It's just the happiest place on earth."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

place, but the general manager was never told its property would be involved.

"I don't mind helping out, but no one asked us," Andy Streeter said. "It wouldn't hurt to know what to do if people arrive injured."

Vista is not the only gathering place people were not aware they were involved in the evacuation map. Econo Lodge is also listed and did not receive any information on the evacuation plan.

"No one told us that we would have people coming to our parking lot. It would be an excellent idea to have guidelines as to what we should do," Steve Greinke, an Econo-Lodge employee, said. "At our hotel we have first aid and many of the staff is certified in CPR so we certainly could take care of them."

Many gathering places are empty lots without phone service or a way to call for help if an evacuee arrives injured.

"911 would not be automatically going to these places because if there was an earthquake of this magnitude, they would be overwhelmed," McNulty, operations manager, said.

If children are in school during an evacuation, the Manhattan-Ogden school district would be responsible for evacuating all students. The district is working on a plan to reunite families after an evacuation, said Michele Jones, communications coordinator for the district.

The Army Corps of Engineers said the potential gathering places are just somewhere for people to go.

"These places are supposed to function as a place for families to meet. We don't expect evacuation places to do anything," McNulty said.

But citizens may expect businesses to know what to do or to be able to help and businesses would like some guidance.

"If people are being told to come here we need to know how to deal with these people," Streeter said.

PLEDGE | Opinions differ on Pledge of Allegiance to commemorate flag day, and "the flag of the United States of America" was changed from "my flag" in 1924. The Web site said Congress didn't officially recognize the Pledge of Allegiance until 1942.

The current pledge case includes two families who are represented by atheist Michael Newdow. Newdow lost a pledge case before the Supreme Court of the United States last year. The Sacramento district judge who ruled "under God" unconstitutional last week used the precedence of the ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which ruled in favor of Newdow's case in 2002.

Last year, the Supreme Court dismissed Newdow's case because he did not have custody of his daughter who he sued on behalf of.

Fliter said it is likely the circuit court will uphold the ruling because of precedence, but the Supreme Court may be a different story.

"I think the Supreme Court would probably reverse the ruling just based on what I've seen from Justice Roberts," Fliter said.

The Bush administration has also opposed the removal of "under God" from the pledge, making it clear if the ninth circuit court upholds that it is unconstitutional, the case will go to the Supreme Court.

Hurt said she does not agree with removing the phrase from the pledge because the majority of people don't have an issue with it.

"We should go with the pledge as it's currently written and locally accommodate the few who do not want their child to say the pledge," she said.

Although she hasn't had any students who can't say the pledge since she has been principal, Hurt said she did have a couple when she was a teacher.

Fliter said if the case goes to the Supreme Court and they uphold the district court's ruling that the phrase "under God" is unconstitutional, it wouldn't be unbearable for the country.

"The fact that it was not part of the pledge until 1954 and we didn't have a pledge until 1942 suggests that the country could survive without the pledge," he said.

SCHOOL BOARD | Summer programs evaluated

total of 5,139 students are currently enrolled, with a graduating senior class of 426 students and 396 kindergarten students coming into the district.

Only five classes within the district exceed the recommended amount of students, most only by one or two students.

"I've got a hunch that this feels way too low, but that's the number I have today," Bob Seymour said.

The 2006 summer school program was also discussed

Last year, the program lasted a period of eight weeks, which the district plans to continue next year. It was also the first time Ogden had its own summer school program rather than sending students to Manhattan.

Attendance for the program in Ogden was significantly higher than other years, with 50 percent of the student body participating in the program.

In response to rising gas prices, the district increased the amount of gas mileage compensation to $.40 per mile for classified employees. This rate compares with the state average.

The board also approved a budget of $326,174 to install carbon dioxide sensors in Anthony Middle School and Eisenhower Middle School. These sensors influence the use of air conditioning and heating units in the buildings. Board members expect this will cut long-term costs.

over all three games."

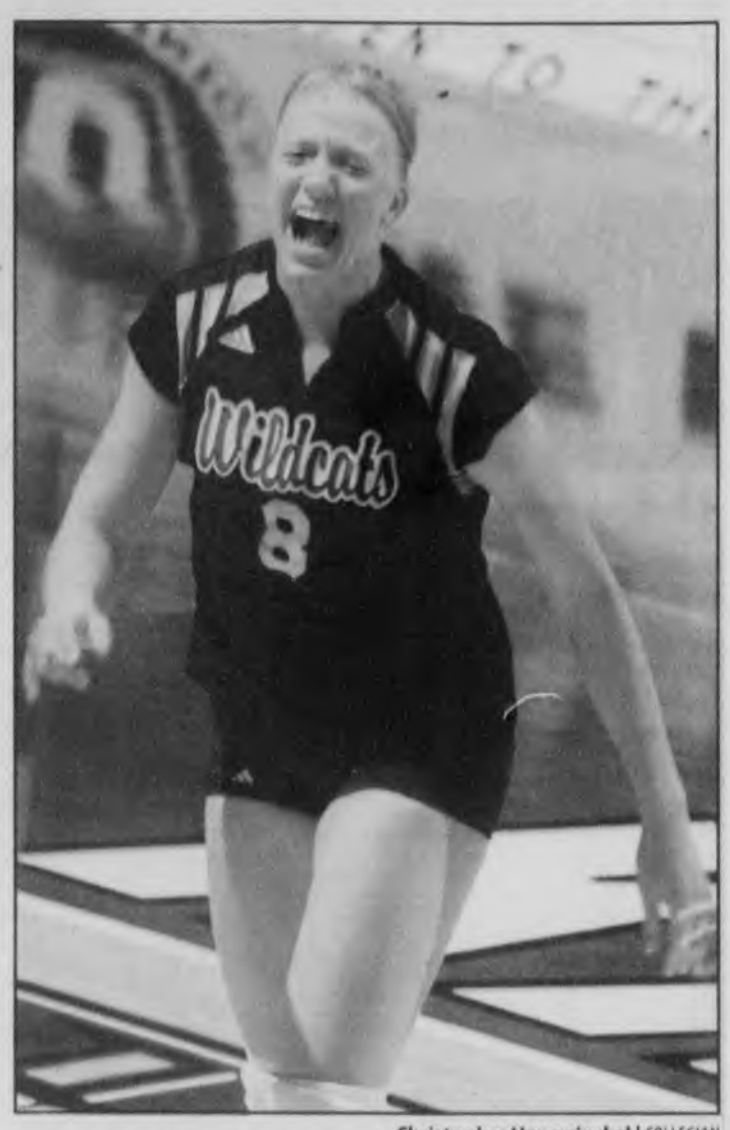
Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende was a factor in all three games, leading the Wildcats with 11 kills on 18 attempts for a .556 hitting percentage. Junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin was close behind with nine kills on 17 attempts, hitting .412., while redshirt-freshman middle blocker Megan Kroeker also chipped in nine kills.

Spiegelberg paced the Cats with 39 set assists.

In game one, the Jackrabbits (6-9) took the early lead, but K-State caught up quickly.

After K-State captured the lead at 8-7, South Dakota State never led again. Rezende took charge with three kills on five attempts, and Spiegelberg had 11 assists.

Game two was similar to game one, with South Dakota State jumping to an early 5-2 lead.



However, it was not long before the Cats took over at 9-8, never allowing the Jackrabbits to regain the lead. Once again, Rezende led with six kills, while Spiegelberg had 14 assists.

K-State scored the first point in game three and led all but once when the Jackrabbits led 2-1.

However, South Dakota State was hot on the Cats' trail throughout, rarely trailing by more than two or three points.

"We always say that the most respect we can give a team is by rolling them and giving them our very best," Fritz said. "I didn't feel like, again tonight, that we did that in game three."

There were, at the same time, positives in Wednesday night's match – particularly the lack of unforced errors and the serving, Fritz said.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Junior outside hitter Jamie Perkins celebrates after a point during the second game Wednesday night. The Wildcats will try to improve their Big 12 record to 3-0 when they travel to Missouri Saturday evening.

"Even when we didn't have the opportunity to make a really good swing, we kept the ball in play, and that's what we want to do," Fritz said.

K-State switched up its serving for the first time this season, and the change proved to be a success, Fritz said.

"We liberoed for our middle blockers and let Megan Kroeker serve for us," Fritz said. "Our objective when we go back to serve is to stay there for awhile, so if we can get two or three points, that's good."

TENNIS | Team is more mature than last season

both physically and mentally tougher than last year.

"We have gotten stronger physically and definitely more mature," Kvaratskhelia said. "We have an idea of what is out there in college tennis."

Simosa said the team needs to get everyone on the same page to be successful.

"We want to get everyone in the same mentality and get on the same level in practice and tournaments," Simosa said.

The Wildcats open up their season at the Missouri Invitational in Columbia, Mo. The tournament, which runs Friday through Sunday, will have teams from Missouri, Arkansas and Iowa State competing with K-State. Bietau said the team will have a better idea of where it stands after this tournament and another tournament in Indiana next week.

"It's a two-week period we're looking at because we don't really have time to change anything until we get back," Bietau said.

Most of campus buildings to be without electricity

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most of campus will be without electricity from 8-11 a.m. Sunday morning while K-State Division of Facilities tries to fix the problems) that caused last week's power outage.

On Sept. 14, the power went out for about 15 minutes in 21 campus buildings.

The cause of the outage is, unknown, said Dale Boggs, associate director of facilities maintenance and utilities.

An electrical engineer searched for the cause of the problem last week and suggested that the control panel may need repair, although Boggs said that is uncertain.

In the meantime, facilities has to replace that control panel so campus can still have electricity.

Boggs said another control panel that is not being used in the substation by Weber Hall will be moved to the substation west of Memorial Stadium where the problem was happening.

He said the cost for replacing the control panel on Sunday will be about $1,000.

One building that will be affected by the power outage is Seaton Hall.

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design is located in Seaton, where many students spend their weekends working on projects in studio.

Mary Rakowsky, administrative assistance in the college's dean's office, said all students in the college were notified of the outage.

"We have them all on e-mail so we always e-mail them this stuff so they know in case they need to turn their power off on their computers and save things," she said.

Boggs said the replacement was scheduled on Sunday morning because campus is not as busy.

"The union is closed, and housing doesn't have breakfast in the morning," he said. "It is the least evasive time that we could do."

Boggs said he is unsure how long it will take to find out if there will be repairs needed.

"Even the electrical engineer that was giving us advice wasn't 100 percent sure that this was going to solve it," Boggs said. "We are still looking for the answer."

K-State Student Ambassadors reflect on experiences as their term ends

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Kent Hildebrand and Lindsey George became K-State Student Ambassadors last fall, they were faced with the task of creating a presentation to show prospective students and alumni.

But George said it didn't take too long.

She said the material that eventually became their skit started out as a joke.

"We found out we both played the guitar, and then we started messing around," George said. "Kent and I actually ended up writing a song about K-State."

Their song, "Wildcat Pride" is to the tune of Don McLean's "American Pie."

"My, my, there's been a lot of change/New buildings, new faces and new claims to fame/ There's one thing for sure that will always be the same/Our Wildcat pride will never die/Our Wildcat pride will never die."

George said the song goes on to talk about things to do on campus and how things have changed over time.

"It was a fun twist on how to let people know what is going on," she said.

Now, the duo are almost finished with their year as ambassadors and they will retire along with their song at the Homecoming football game, Oct. 29.

"I'm kind of sad it's coming to an end," Hildebrand said. "It's gone by really fast."

Man arrested for theft, forgery

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man was arrested for theft and forgery Wednesday afternoon.

Evan Condict, 23, 1530 McCain Lane, was arrested at 3 p.m. at Home Depot on Seth Child Road on five counts of theft and three counts of forgery.

Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said Condict had been an employee of the store.

He said Condict allegedly stole products from the store and forged names on the return receipts so he could get credit with the store to spend on other items.

He said the value of goods believed stolen totaled $256.13.

Quintanar said Condict was released on $3,000 bond.

An employee in the district court clerk's office said he is currently bonded to appear on Oct. 5 at 9:30 a.m., but the date may change. Home Depot declined to comment on the arrest.

New restaurant opens

Attention to details is what owner Claudia Pereyda said sets Los Potrillos apart from other family-owned restaurants.

"A lot of family restaurants are categorized because their menu is on a piece of paper or they don't have a variety of drinks at the bar," Pereyda said. "You have to have an eye for detail. You have to take care of everything small or big."

Los Potrillos, 420 Tuttle Creek Blvd., opens today. Pereyda said the restaurant serves Mexican recipes from the Guadalajara region, where she grew up.

"It's quality authentic Mexican food with a traditional taste," she said.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Museums see effects
The dispute over science standards used in teaching Kansas children is beginning to make an impact felt at some of the state's museums. Guides at the museum are increasingly confronted by people angry about exhibits using evolution to explain the history of dinosaurs and fossils.

Oil refineries in danger
Hurricane Rita closed in on the Texas Gulf Coast and the heart of the U.S. oil-refining industry with howling 145 mph winds Thursday, but a sharper-than-expected turn to the right set it on a course that could spare Houston and nearby Galveston a direct hit.

One step closer
With a 13-5 vote, the Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday approved John Roberts' nomination as the next Supreme Court chief justice, virtually assuring his confirmation by the Senate next week. The committee's 10 Republicans lined up solidly behind the conservative judge's nomination to the full Senate weeks in advance.

Haircuts supported the Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research Thursday.

At $30 a cut, 100 percent of proceeds went to further cancer research.

Hair Experts Salon and Spa, 1323 Anderson Ave., had its 15th annual Cut-a-thon from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m.

"Every year we like to give something back to the community," Deb McCullough, salon owner, said. "We pick a different charity every year, and we like to pick those where the money stays in Manhattan."

McCullough said this year's goal was $10,000. At 3:30 p.m., $3,000 had been raised. She said the salon chose to donate to the cancer center because cancer touches many people.

Pedicures were available for $30 and tanning sessions were $3, with the proceeds also going to the cancer center. A silent auction inside the salon featured products and items donated by different businesses and organizations around Manhattan.

Lanae Koons, graduate student in education, had her hair cut in support of the cause.

"I think it's a good way to give to the community and then get something back," she said.

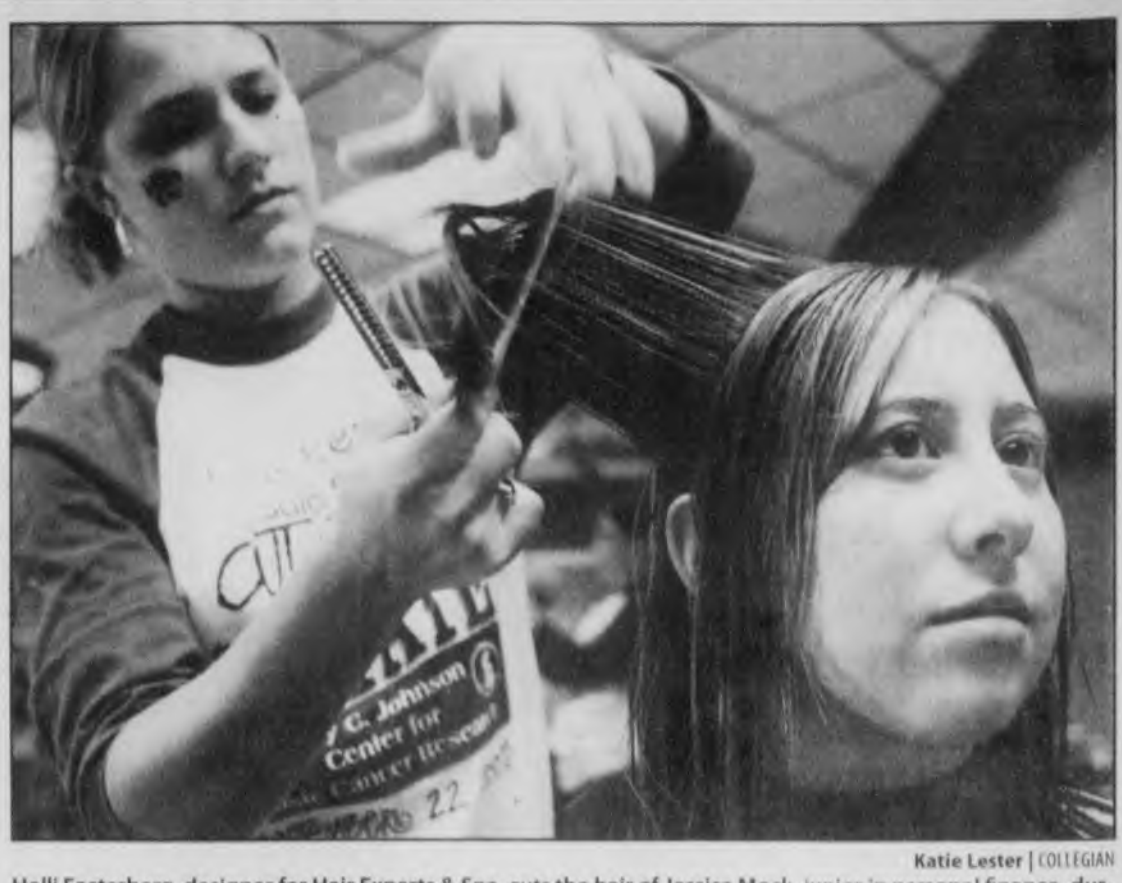
Stylist Christy Kruse has been with the salon for 12 years. She worked all day Thursday.

"It's wonderful. We do it every year," Kruse said. "There are so many things to give to right now, with everything going on, and we realized that everyone is affected by cancer."

Marcia Locke, public relations and outreach coordinator for cancer center, said the donations received will go toward cancer research and education.

"We have award programs, where we can give faculty and students cancer research awards," she said. "We're taking applications now for an undergraduate student to work on a cancer-related research project."

More information about the cancer center can be accessed at www.k-state.edu/cancer.center. Those interested in donating can also find out how online.



The cancer center is just one of many charities the Cut-a-thon has supported. In past years proceeds have gone to Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan, Big Brothers Big Sisters and City of Hope.

McCullough said the stylists volunteered Thursday and most donated their tips to the cause.

"No one is getting paid today," she said.

Gamma Phi Beta helped with the event by cleaning and organizing.

"It's exciting to be thrown into this," said Katie Murray, freshman in mass communications and Gamma Phi member. "It's a lot different in regards to anything else I've volunteered for."

Police arrest local woman for child abuse

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan woman was arrested Wednesday on a warrant for abusing a 12-year-old child, Lt. Mike Quintanar with the Riley County Police Department said.

Sandra Hill, 36, 1370 Flint Hills Place, was arrested at 9:15 p.m. at 1001 Seth Child Road.

Quintanar said the duration of the offense is from Dec. 1, 2004 to Aug. 29, 2005. The warrant for Hill's arrest was issued Sept. 16, 2005.

Bond was set at $15,000.

Senate discusses textbooks, allocates $4,500

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is taking a stance on textbooks.

Student Body President Michael Burns said Union Governing Board, faculty and he spoke to Varney's Bookstore about textbook policy problems.

He said there is a major problem with communication between students and faculty.

In some classes, there are several changes with book requirements. Burns wishes solidify faculty textbook deadlines and whether the book will be used in the course, Burns said.

Other problems included textbook buy backs.

"We are really striving to work with buy backs, especially in lower-level courses," Burns said. "Our committee wants to increase the cycle of buy backs."

The group thought an increase in buy backs could save students money, Burns said.

"Varney's is our biggest concern," he said. "We are working on what we can do to effectively reduce it together."

Senator Ben Trenary asked if the university could post an official textbook list online.

Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said if students bought books online, teachers could easily change requirements, making returns more difficult.

Varney's is a stronger source for textbooks, Burns said.

Student Senate, however, is not issuing any legislation regarding textbooks at this time.

Student Senate also allocated nearly $4,500 toward Black Student Union, Creative Arts Therapy students, the Chapter of Engineering in Medicine and Biology Society, Honesty and Integrity Peer Educators and Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council.

TO THE POINT

Ambassadors work hard for K-State

Do you know who your K-State student ambassadors were this past year?

Do you know who represented you to prospective students across Kansas, schmoozed with alumni and donors and proclaimed with Pat Bosco-like conviction the greatness of your university?

Probably not – but you should.

Over the past 12 months, Kent Hildebrand and Lindsey George have done an exemplary job in a capacity that goes largely unheralded. Despite soaring tuition, K-State once again witnessed an increase in enrollment, a testament to their representation and recruiting efforts.

They also helped with K-State Alumni Association functions, helped plan Homecoming and assisted the president's office with various events.

The current ambassadors are in the last few weeks of their tenures, though. Applications are due next week for the new ambassadors and the selection process, comprising several rounds of interviews, will whittle prospects to a few deserving candidates.

Students will vote during Homecoming week for the next ambassadors, who will be announced at halftime of K-State's football game against Colorado.

Hopefully they are as successful as the outgoing ambassadors have been.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Not about race

Diversity differs from culture

Illustrations by Eric Thompson
COLLEGIAN

JONAS HOGG

First came the hurricane. But we are acquainted with hurricanes, so this was no shock.

Then came the mass destruction. But sadly, we are acquainted with destruction, so this was no shock, either.

Next came the people. We thought we knew people. This was the shock.

For almost a week, the world tuned in as images and stories of people beating, looting and murdering streamed out of New Orleans. "This is a mistake," we wanted to think. This is a scene from some God-forsaken country. Such things do not happen here.

But they do, and New Orleans is not an isolated incident. We witnessed the same thing in Los Angeles and again in Cincinnati. This unspoken trend that no one dares to utter is the continuance of poor black neighborhoods exploding in times of distress, dragging surrounding areas into chaos.

A clarification: this is not about race.

Any first year anthropology major will tell you the concept of race is as dead as the Dodo. This is about culture.

But culture is the untouchable relic of our time. Hidden and safe from criticism in the politically correct term of "diversity."

Race does not matter, culture does.

The cohesiveness of black communities amazed the world in the 1950s and 60s as black culture toppled the oppressive bureaucracy that kept it in chains for several hundred years. The world cheered as Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat, setting thousands of people walking miles to send their message.

Along the way, something went wrong.

The culture of the communities changed. They are no longer cohesive. Perhaps they are not communities at all anymore.

While children cried, the elderly died lying in their beds. Thousands of people in a beleaguered city cried out for someone to help them while thousands of strong men and women did the only thing worse than ignore them all together – they went the other way.

Hands that could have carried children to safety threw bricks through store windows. Arms that could have provided for the old and sick carried out TVs and Nikes.

Thousands of people who had the chance, the ability and the calling to be heroes instead became rapists and criminals.

But despite the failing of a culture to provide for its weakest and most vulnerable citizens, no condemnation has been said – no words of blame uttered. Anyone who dares to speak out is cast as a fanatic standing in front of a burning cross wearing a pointy hood.

This culture is not bad, it is different. It cannot be judged from our perspective. It is "diversity in action."

Diversity has become a gag. From the Los Angeles riots to Washington, D.C., to Cleveland and now to New Orleans, diversity is the buzzword – the instant response to any cultural criticism.

Fortunately, diversity is not racist. It silences people across the skin pigment spectrum. If whites criticize other cultures, they are racist. If blacks such as Bill Cosby criticize the black culture, they are dismissed as "kooks."

"But they are poor and disenfranchised," is the common reply. "But they are rich compared to those who live in the tsunami devastated areas," is my response. These people did not turn on themselves.

For there to be progress there must be criticism. There would be no thing great if there was no one to criticize mediocrity. Diversity does not allow for criticism. It resides on fluffy clouds of feel goodery and specious rhetoric.

It is above criticism, looking down as its wards tear each other to pieces.

Wanted: characters who are offbeat, entertaining

While watching an episode of the very funny and neurotic "Monk", a commercial for USA Network plays that makes a wonderful invitation.

Characters Welcome.

These off-beat characters remind us the world is a stage and the different characters in the world make life a more rich and diverse experience.

This television network is celebrating its wide array of off-beat characters that produced successful shows.

Many television comedies have disregarded the nuances and potential that a character can have and instead have tried to overcompensate with funny one-liners.

As television choices explode, it seems that the ones that really touch us and that we watch are those that have somewhat odd, interesting characters.

The attraction Monk has is not that he is a detective, solving cases and bringing in the bad guy. It is that he is an odd, obsessive-compulsive detective who drives the people close to him crazy, elicits odd looks from strangers as he straightens their coffee table, and looks at the world from a different perspective, noticing the strangest little details. This character is what pulls in the humor and the viewers, not the dialogue.

RACHEL THOMPSON

Appreciating the comedian who looks at the world in a way that always makes people laugh or the enthusiastic person that get excited for everything certainly make life more incredible than walking through the indistinctive, bland masses.

Having a place where we can look and see our variety of characters come alive, and be proud of what makes us who we are is invaluable and the comedy of characters is important for this process.

Television is clearly a place we reach to for entertainment, and having a character that itself is entertaining is much more successful then a puppet that spits out the occasional witty comeback.

These characters are also excellent outside the scripted, unrealistic world of television, but they are a lot less accepted or appreciated.

If someone who was thought of as strange or neurotic entered our lives, some people would not be entertained and cherish the person for their character.

I have often seen a sneer and a 'what is he doing?' look pass over people's faces. Especially as brave characters express themselves without fear or alteration – often in a way that is outside the sneerer's comfort zone or idea of how people should behave.

Oh well, their loss of a delicious way to diversify life and make it more entertaining.

The television sitcoms that arrive every year and leave from lack of audience interest might have a better chance if they played more with the range of characters whom they present and allow them to be funny or touching without sappy scripting.

It is the personality and quirks that vary from person to person that is one of the most amusing things to notice when interacting and observing the world.

Characters are definitely welcome in my world, whether on TV or walking down the street.

8th annual Wildcat Run to benefit United Way

K-State-Salina SGA sponsors 5K run, 2-mile walk

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday's eighth annual Wildcat Run will benefit the Salina Area United Way.

The event, sponsored by K-State-Salina's Student Governing Association, is a five-kilometer run and a two-mile walk. Both begin at 8 a.m. at the corner of Ash and Santa Fe streets in downtown Salina.

"The Wildcat Run is a tradition for our students and campus to make a difference in the local community," Shana Meyer, assistant director of college advancement for student life, said. "It's a great chance for K-Staters – and any athletes – to support the local community."

Prizes will be awarded to the top male and female finishers in each age group. The age groups are 17 and under, 18-35, 36-55, and 56 and over.

Registration forms can be downloaded from the K-State-Salina Web site, www.sal.ksu.edu.

Participants are encouraged to arrive between 7 and 7:45 a.m. so they can check in and get their race packets.

The check-in booths will be located at the intersection of Ash and Fifth streets, just west of the post office. Packets include a T-shirt and a race number, both donated by K-State-Salina's SGA.

Entry fees are $12 in advance or $15 on race day. Additional donations will also be accepted.

In the event of rain, the race may be delayed. Any delays will be broadcast on KSAL-AM 1150 Saturday morning.

"I'm looking forward to the race," Jeff Stolper, freshman in accounting, said. "I like to run and I like to support the United Way. I think that it is an excellent combination."

Cultural Harmony Week features walk, student panel

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Next week, for the 18th time, K-State will spend a week promoting diversity.

Racial and Ethnic Harmony week was founded by former K-State student Barbara Baker and Student Governing Association in 1988. The event began after a racism incident during summer 1987 at Bushwacker's Club in Aggieville.

The week was renamed Community Cultural Harmony Week in 2002 since planning board members are from the community, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 and K-State, said Doug Benson, professor of modern languages and co-chair of Community Cultural Harmony Week.

Benson said Baker has said "until we truly have equalized the vision of people of color toward how we can achieve an equitable society, we must have an event called Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week."

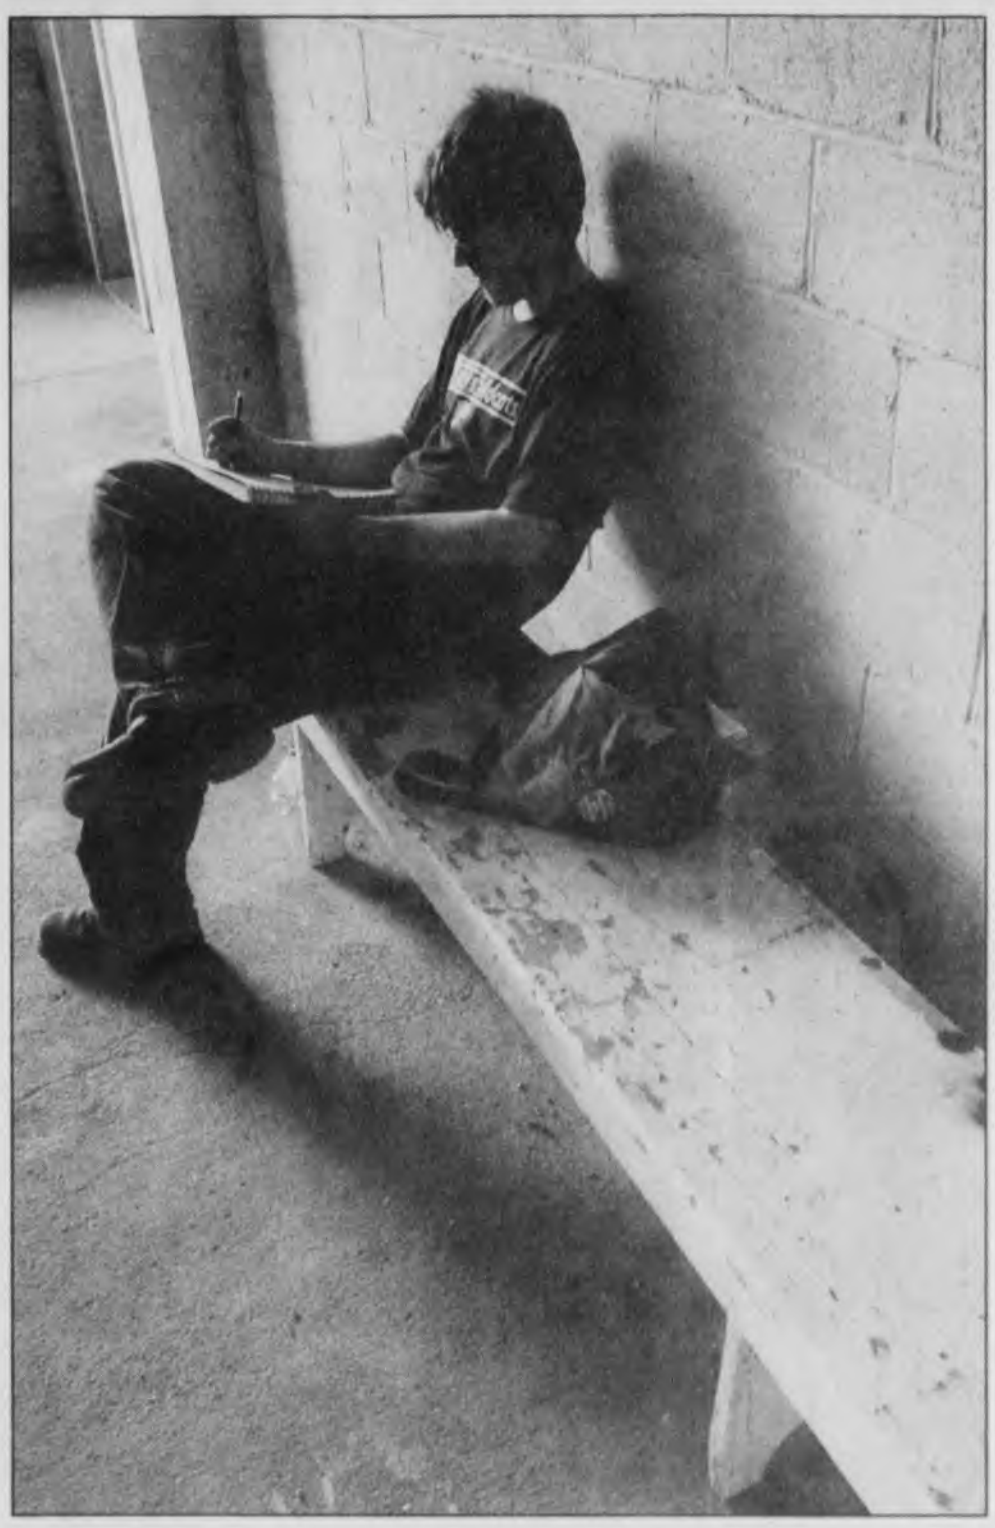
Baker also started a scholarship in memory of her brother Joey Lee Garman. The winner is announced at the week's banquet every year.

Other events during the week include Harmony Walk, a student panel on diversity, art exhibits, films and lectures.

If you go

What: Community Cultural Harmony Week: "The Journey Toward Inclusion: Are We There Yet?"
When: Sept. 25 - Oct. 1
Where: For a complete listing of the week's events with times, dates and locations, visit http://www.ksu.edu/cchw.

Benson said students should attend the week's events because K-State is a diverse community.



"Students need to understand how to live and work together in a diverse community," he said. "Diversity creates a learning environment in which people can develop their critical thinking skills."

Community Cultural Harmony Week is an opportunity for the K-State community to look at issues from different perspectives, said Candi Hironaka, associate director of leadership studies and programs and co-chair of Community Cultural Harmony Week.

"I think that learning occurs in all different areas of the university," she said.

Hironaka said she hopes the week will help to make K-State a more inclusive community.

"All of us are on this journey," she said. "We can grow in making positive changes throughout the week."

Bike tour aims to raise $150,000 for MS

By Laura Noll
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who ride their bikes around campus can ride them in Topeka on Saturday to help save lives.

On Sept. 24, the Mid-America Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society will host Topeka's 19th Annual Eastern Kansas MS 150 Bike Tour.

From Saturday to Sunday, cyclists will ride around the Topeka area in an attempt to raise funds for Multiple Sclerosis research and support. Money for the fundraiser is collected through sponsor donations.

Mark White, associate professor of family studies and human service has ridden in the tour for six years.

White's wife, along with 3,500 others in the region, have Multiple Sclerosis.

White said riding in the tour is a commitment or statement to those with multiple sclerosis, letting those battling the illness know there is support.

White's team will ride through Saturday and Sunday, knowing every mile is closer to a cure.

In 2004, the Mid America Chapter raised about $2 million to support multiple sclerosis research through regional bike tours.

Laura Farmer, development coordinator for the Mid America Chapter of MS 150 Bike Tours, said the chapter expects to raise approximately $150,000 from the Eastern Kansas tour this weekend. This year's goal is $30,000 more than last year's total.

Farmer said that 60 percent of the funds from the tour stay in the area to support those battling multiple sclerosis and their families.

The funding is used to cover numerous expenses including client education, emergency financial assistance and education training.

The remaining 40 percent of the money is used across the nation in search of a cause and cure for the disease.

According to the National Multiple Sclerosis Society Web site, multiple sclerosis is an autoimmune disease that affects the brain, spinal cord and optic nerves.

However, the definite cause of the disease is unknown. When myelin, a fatty tissue in the central nervous system, is damaged, it leaves scar tissue, known as sclerosis.

Sclerosis prevents the central nervous system from functioning as it should, presumably resulting in symptoms such as depression, fatigue, difficulty walking and vision impairment.

"I think the most important thing to realize is that it's really individual efforts contributing to programs like this, especial those in college," Farmer said. "In fact, the average age of a person affected by MS is in the range of 20 to 40 years old."

"If you can ride 10 miles, you can do the MS 150," she added.

"Cyclists ranging from 10 to 75 years old have supported the National Multiple Sclerosis Society by participating in the tour in the past."

"However, if biking isn't your cup of tea, then the chapter encourages you to donate you time by helping out at the event or make a monetary donation to support the search for a cure," Farmer said.

Farmer said she likes to summarize the campaign by her own five-word phrase. "To make their lives better."

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

Biggest game of the season not on TV

MATTHEW GIRARD

It's one of the most important football games of the season and it happens only once a year, but you won't see it on TV or hear it on the radio.

It's the annual Collegian-Student Governing Association football game.

In case you haven't heard of it, I'll give you some background.

The game was a long-standing tradition for some time, until 1999, when the game went unplayed for some unknown reason. Then in fall 2003, the rivalry was rekindled with the Collegian thrashing SGA 42-21 at Memorial Stadium, bringing the traveling trophy back to Kedzie Hall.

Last fall, the game ended in a tie because of darkness. I would tell you the score of the 2005 matchup, but I was knocked silly on the second-to-last play of the game. I can tell you the game came down to the last play, with the Collegian defense making a goal-line stand to keep the tie intact.

You're probably curious as to how this game could be the most important football game, since it is just two student groups getting together and bashing each other's heads in.

It's more than that.

The annual game displays who really has the power on the K-State campus, and any time we get a chance to knock some politicians' egos down a notch is always good times.

On Oct. 14 the third installment of the renewed Collegian vs. SGA game will take place once again at the 'Ole Stadium,' and from what I've heard, SGA is scared of how badly the "Kedzie Saints" are going to beat them.

Last year's game was a fluke.

We were missing some key players and our coach was on sabbatical. Despite losing some players to graduation, we have recruited well, our coach is back and we have brought in the nation's best drinking coach.

I wouldn't be surprised if we put up a Texas Tech-like 80-spot on SGA.

So, if you want to see your student leaders smash the snot out of each other, or if you have nothing else to do on the evening of Oct. 14, make your way out to the stadium and watch the true meaning of "power of the press."

I've even heard the "Kedzie Angels" cheerleading squad will make an appearance.

No. 17 Wildcats to take on No. 8 Tigers

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After losing their only match of the season Sept. 10, to No. 5 Minnesota, the No. 17 Wildcats have rebounded by sweeping three consecutive matches against Oklahoma, Texas Tech and South Dakota State.

But to beat the undefeated and 8th-ranked Missouri Tigers (9-0, 3-0) Saturday in Columbia, Mo., senior outside hitter Agata Rezende said K-State (11-1, 2-0) must play much better than it has recently.

"We did not have a good match against South Dakota State because we played very bad in our third game," Rezende said. "Emotionally, we need to get stronger."

K-State, which swept Missouri in both matches played last season, is not taking the Tigers lightly.

Coach Suzie Fritz, who is six wins shy of passing Mary Phyl Dwight (107) for second in career wins in K-State history, said the Tigers have something her team needs more of: experience.

"Everyone that played for them last year, for the most part – I think they only lost one player who contributed for them last year – is back," Fritz said. "Now, they are more mature and more experienced, and you can't make up for that."

One of Missouri's experienced players is senior setter Lindsey Hunter, who is the Tigers' career leader in assists with 5,015. Hunter was named Big 12 Volleyball Player of the Week on Sept. 5.

Fritz, in her fifth season as K-State's coach, said the Tigers are also a very efficient volleyball team.

"They don't make a lot of errors," she said. "They just know how to respond in difficult situations."

The Wildcats and Tigers are two of six Big 12 Conference teams ranked in the Top 25.

Rezende said the conference schedule will be tough and getting road wins is important.

"Especially for me, it is very hard to get a win on the road because we don't have the support of our fans, which are especially amazing here at K-State," Rezende said. "But, every time we get a win on the road, it is pleasurable for us."

No. 17 K-State vs. No. 8 Missouri
When: 6:30 p.m. Saturday
Where: Hearnes Center, Columbia, Mo.

Fritz said winning on the road is what separates good teams from the great ones.

"It's the difference between being in the top three in the conference and the top six," Fritz said. "Not that it is easier to play at home, but there is a comfort level to playing in front of your own fans and having their support. Going into a foreign environment and trying to emulate the things you do everyday in practice is difficult."

Sophomore libero Angie Lastra, who was the 2004 Big 12 Libero of the Year, said the secret to beating the Tigers is consistency and focus.

"I think we're confident about our abilities, but we need to concentrate and keep focused and respect all the teams we play," Lastra said. "Every game on the road is different, but we need to work hard. To beat (Missouri), we are going to have to play consistently for the whole game."

Wildcats set for Wolverine Intercollegiate golf tournament

Team ready for first trip to Ann Arbor, Mich.

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team returns to action this weekend at an unfamiliar course.

The Wildcats will travel to Ann Arbor, Mich., for the first time Saturday and Sunday to participate in the Wolverine Intercollegiate.

This is the team's first time playing in Michigan.

Coach Tim Norris said he has seen his team play with more confidence so far this year and is looking forward to seeing how well the Wildcats respond to the new course.

"If they play like they did in the first two rounds last week, then we will have success no matter what course we are on," Norris said. "It's all about eliminating the mistakes."

Senior Ben Kern, who placed second overall at the team's last tournament – the Cleveland State Invitational Sept. 12-13 – said he wants to remain on top of his game and also wants to see his teammates perform at the level he knows they can.

"I play with them every day, so I know what they can do," Kern said. "I think we have a great chance to place in the top three as a team, and I am looking forward to seeing how my teammates perform."

One player expected to bring an added boost is true freshman Joe Kinney.

Kinney is playing in his first collegiate tournament after qualifying earlier this week and is looking forward to helping the team and showing he is capable of playing at the collegiate level.

"I'm more excited than nervous," Kinney said. "I know that if I just go out there and do the best I can, then the scores will be there."

Another newcomer to the team this year is freshman Robert Streb.

Streb made his debut at Cleveland State and responded with a second-place finish on the team and 35th overall.

His performance earned him an automatic bid to the Wolverine Intercollegiate Saturday.

Streb said getting the first tournament out of the way was a relief, and now he knows what to expect from his game and what parts he needs to work on.

"It helps getting that first one out of the way," Streb said. "Now, I can concentrate on improving my game and working on the things that help make me a better golfer. I just want to do well and have fun, which is what it's all about – just having fun."

CBA | Massey drafted by Dakota Wizards of CBA

The Dakota Wizards of the Continental Basketball Association (CBA) selected former K-State forward Jeremiah Massey in the fifth round of the 20th annual draft Tuesday.

Massey was one of six players drafted by the Wizards, who have won two of the past four CBA Championships. Other players taken were Chuck Hayes (Kentucky), Chris Taft (Pittsburgh), John Reimold (Bowling Green), Matt Vaughn (Colorado Christian) and Glen McGowen (Pepperdine).

The Wizards are coached by former Baylor coach Dave Bliss, who was hired Aug. 26. As a senior in 2004-05, Massey averaged a team-best 17.9 points and 6.9 rebounds per game and was named second-team All-Big 12 by the league coaches and the Associated Press.

MLB | Griffey to have knee, hamstring surgery Monday

CINCINNATI — Ken Griffey Jr. will have surgery on his left knee and right hamstring Monday, presumably ending a stellar comeback season for the oft-injured Cincinnati Reds star. The 35-year-old center fielder is expected to be ready for spring training.

Griffey Jr.

He will have arthroscopic surgery to clean out his left knee and treat scar tissue around his hamstring. The hamstring injury threatened his career last season.

Griffey missed his 15th straight game Wednesday night because of a sprained right foot. Griffey hurt his foot rounding second base in early September in a game against Atlanta. At the time, the Reds said they thought he'd be able to play again this year.

MLB | Rollins extends hitting streak to 27 games

ATLANTA — Jimmy Rollins singled on the second pitch of the game Thursday against the Atlanta Braves to extend his hitting streak to 27 games — a Phillies' franchise record since 1900.

Rollins broke the mark he tied a day earlier with Chuck Klein, who had two 26-game streaks in 1930. The only longer streaks in Philadelphia history were posted by two players from the 1800s: Billy Hamilton (36 games in 1894) and Ed Delahanty (31 in 1899).

Rollins had never hit in more than 12 straight games before his current streak, the longest in the NL this season. The longest in the majors was put up by Boston's Johnny Damon, who hit in 29 consecutive games.

NFL | Game times set for Saints home games

NEW YORK — The NFL set kickoff times for the New Orleans Saints' remaining seven home games, all but one to be played on Sunday afternoons.

The Saints will play Buffalo on Oct. 2 and Atlanta on Oct. 16 at 1 p.m. EDT in the Alamo Dome in San Antonio. The other Alamo Dome game will be on Saturday, Dec. 24 at 1 p.m. EST against Detroit.

Games at Baton Rouge, La., will be Oct. 30 vs. Miami and Nov. 6 vs. Chicago, both with 4:05 p.m. Eastern time kickoffs, while games on Dec. 4 against Tampa Bay and Dec. 18 against Carolina will begin at 1 p.m. EST.

CFB | Missouri State cancels Sam Houston State game

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Missouri State will get an unexpected weekend off after its game with Sam Houston State was canceled because of Hurricane Rita.

Officials from both teams had discussed playing the game at a neutral site, but Missouri State coach Randy Ball said there weren't any buses available to take his team to and from the airport in Dallas. Most buses have been sent to south Texas to help with hurricane evacuation efforts.

Desperate to know

After a summer of reruns, fans can't wait to learn the truth about Desperate Housewives

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When ABC's new television show "Desperate Housewives" premiered last October, viewers were introduced to Bree, Susan, Lynette and Gabrielle, four friends who were trying to make sense of their friend's Mary Alice suicide.

The show became an instant hit as each episode raised more questions than it answered.

As they dug into the secrets of Mary Alice's past, the lives of the four friends were also exposed.

Last May's season finale finally answered the biggest question of the season: why did Mary Alice kill herself?

Mary Alice's widower, Paul, confessed to Mike the plumber that when Mary Alice worked at a drug rehab clinic, a patient named Dierdre gave Paul and Mary Alice their son, Dana, in exchange for drug money.

Paul and Mary Alice moved across the country and changed their names, but many years later, Dierdre returned for her son, now named Zach. Desperate to keep her son, Mary Alice killed Dierdre and Paul buried her body in a trunk.

Nosy neighbor Martha Huber discovered Mary Alice's secret and tried to blackmail her, so Mary Alice killed herself rather than have her secret discovered by even more people.

Paul's confession answered one big question but left viewers with a new one.

"I want to know if Mike is Zach's father," Beth Sheely, senior in life science, said.

Mike didn't know Dierdre had a child, but Sheely said as her boyfriend, it's possible he's Zach's biological father.

"I'm thinking he is because he's Dierdre's son," Sheely said.

Meanwhile, viewers are waiting to see what happens at Mike's house with Susan, Zach and the gun.

When moody teenager Zach learned Mike was going to kill his father, Zach broke into Mike's home and was waiting for him when Susan stopped by. Zach kept Susan hostage all day as they waited for Mike to return home so Zach could kill him.

The "Desperate Housewives" episode guide at www.tv.com promises we'll find out if Zach kills anyone in the first episode, and Mike and Zach will also learn the truth about their relationship to each other.

The stories and lives of Bree, Lynette and Gabrielle also took surprising directions in the season finale.

Bree's estranged husband, Rex, had another heart attack and died in the hospital after George the pharmacist, who was in love with Bree, tampered with his medicine.

We're expected to see more of George in the upcoming season, while Bree has to start life on her own and deal with her overbearing mother-in-law, according to www.tv.com.

Lynette's husband Tom quit his job in the season finale after discovering Lynette sabotaged his career. He told Lynette he's going to become a stay-at-home dad and she can go back to work. According to www.tv.com, Lynette gets a great job at an ad agency this season, causing even more problems between her and her jealous husband.

Meanwhile, Gabrielle became pregnant last season after her husband Carlos tampered with her birth control. She didn't know if he is the baby's father or if it's her teenage lover/gardener John's.

In the season finale, John told Carlos that Gabrielle was having an affair with him and they got in a fight in the courtroom, where Carlos was on trial for a hate crime.

According to www.tv.com, after their courtroom brawl John and Carlos wind up in adjoining jail cells in the season premiere. After John's confession, Gabrielle also gets arrested for having a relationship with him before he turned 18.

Fans of the show are especially interested in finding out who the father of Gabrielle's baby is.

"I think it's John, the gardener's," said Sheely.

Katie Siebenmorgen, senior in family life and community service, had an idea for a new twist in the upcoming season - that the baby isn't John's or Carlos's.

"I think it would be funny if it turned out to be somebody else's baby that we didn't know about," she said.

Columnist examines positive, negative sides of drinking

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

I have a friend who cries when he gets drunk. Do you have any advice for him?

Being overly emotional while drinking is nothing to be ashamed of. I can remember back to freshman year and the first time I got drunk, not simply buzzing, but completely drunk. We were watching the "Wizard of Oz" synched up with Pink Floyd's "Dark Side of the Moon," which, if you haven't done, is totally amazing.

I was doing fine until an old girlfriend came into the room. As soon as she sat down, I started wailing out "I'm sorry," and crying like a little baby. That was my first experience with alcohol putting me in a highly emotional state.

There are a couple of things to note about this. First, when you are drinking heavily, try to stay away from old girlfriends. This also carries over to phone calls and instant messaging. If there's an old girlfriend in Illinois who you are still in love with and you are prone to drunk-dialing people, maybe you should take her number out of your phone or only drink with friends who will take your phone away from you before you make a fool of yourself.

Secondly, it is okay to be a little emotional when drunk. In fact, that is why many of us drink to begin with - to lower our guard, allowing us to talk to new people and say things we normally would not say. A general rule of thumb, though, is that if your friend cries during more than one out of 10 drunken outings, then perhaps your friend needs to take a break from drinking until he straightens out his emotional baggage.

When I stay up late doing homework, I end up sleeping through my classes the next day. But when I stay up late drinking, I can stay awake through my classes. What should I do?

There must not be a lot to do in Manhappening since I'm getting all of these questions about drinking.

Well, of course I'm going to say that you should do your homework. I tried not doing homework for a semester and it was the one semester that the College of Engineering limited the number of hours I could take the next semester to one more credit hour than I passed the previous semester. I only passed nine hours the semester I decided not to do homework, so I could only take 10 hours in the spring. That was my infamous 19-hour year. The fact I'm still graduating on time is a testament to my abilities.

Back on topic, you should definitely do your homework and go to all of your classes.

But drinking is too darn fun. Luckily, a happy medium exists for your problem. You can stay up late doing your homework and then go out drinking. Or you can do what I did last week and stay up late drinking but then get up early to do your homework. Be careful with getting up early though, because it may take longer to do your homework than you think.

Either way, not only can you have your homework done and stay awake for your classes, but you can drink your beer, too.

Matt Peterworth is a fifth year in architectural engineering. You can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Pagans to gather in City Park

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tarot card reading, an herb workshop and a speech on the definition of paganism are among the events planned for Saturday's Pagan Pride Day at City Park.

The event is for people who identify themselves as pagan and believe in worshipping deities found in pre-Christian, classical, aboriginal or tribal mythology. It also includes those who base their religious beliefs in shamanism, magical practices, past pagan religions, community, ecology or the Divine Feminine.

Bethany Dunnam, event coordinator, said pagans are "people who self-describe as a pagan, worshipping earth-bound religions."

The event will feature several worship services and a nontraditional marriage ceremony known as hand fasting.

Hand fasting is a ritual performed within the Pagan community, binding people together for a specific period of time, typically a year and a day, said Sarah Lawver, senior in philosophy and president of the K-State Pagan Student Group.

If the hand fasting isn't for a limited period of time, and the people who are joined wish to remain together, it can also be a civil marriage, Lawver said.

Since the ceremony is performed by legal clergy, it is legally recognized as a marriage, Lawver said.

Several members of the pagan student group will attend the community festival.

The K-State Pagan Student Group is debating renaming itself the Alliance for Understanding of Religious Alternatives, Lawver said.

The group plans to welcome students with agnostic, Unitarian/Universalist and Buddhist leanings, as well as others who don't identify with more mainstream religions.

Apple Market to feature deli, bakery, improved customer service

By Lola Shrimplin

Customers of Food 4 Less at 3011 Anderson Ave. and 222 N. 6th St. will be noticing some changes with the stores as of Oct. 5.

Ray's Apple Market of Clay Center will own both stores beginning Oct. 2, and both stores will be closed from Oct. 2 to 4 for the new owners to take inventory. The store will open Oct. 5.

Ray's Apple Market is a small company with stores in Clay Center, Kan., Seneca, Kan., and Fairbury, Neb.

The new store hours will be from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m., Aaron Floersch, son of Apple Market owner Mike Floersch, said.

"We called Associated Wholesale Grocers and inquired about the Manhattan market and what's going on in it," Floersch said.

AWG called back and said Food 4 Less wanted to exit the market, and Ray's Apple Market was able to bid and take over the stores, Floersch said.

Lyle Butler, president and chief executive officer of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the store at 401 E. Poyntz Ave. previously closed and the new owners of the remaining the store plans to close the location at the end of the year.

"We are going to either totally gut or remodel the store," Floersch said.

He said the stores aren't in the best condition at this point, and will require major renovations.

Eventually Ray's Apple Market will include a deli and a bakery and will have a lot more variety in the new locations.

Ray's Apple Market will also focus on having good quality perishables.

"We will have it a little more organized and have it make a little more sense," Floersch said.

There are roughly 50 employees at the two Food 4 Less stores, and those employees will be retained as employees of Ray's Apple Market.

Floersch said another change new store is grocers' custom service. He said he wanted to se employees carry groceries out fo customers.

The changes will be a welcom addition, Sherrailynn Cockes, junior in horticulture said.

"It sounds like they're trying to make it more of a big town experience in a small town setting," Cockes said.

Red Cross plans picnic to honor volunteers

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Hurricane Katrina, people lost their homes, families and lives.

This weekend, citizens and refugees have the opportunity to unite and share a moment as a family within the community.

The Flint Hills American Red Cross and Mercy Health Center are hosting a local picnic, inviting members of the community to meet the Hurricane Katrina refugees in the area. The picnic starts at 1 p.m. on Sunday in the pavilion at CiCo Park.

Chuck Smith, professor in family studies and human services, said about 25 refugees in the area have expressed interest in the event.

"We've had over 70 families arrive from the coast, and we are expecting more from Texas" Smith said. "However, we're not going to going to continue to have a huge number of evacuees for a while. Many of them have moved on."

Smith, also a case manager in the Flint Hills American Red Cross, said the purpose of this weekend's picnic is to recognize the entire community.

"It's a way to recognize volunteers and victims," he said. "This is a thank you for the citizens from the Manhattan-area for their time and money they've invested in the Red Cross and Salvation Army."

Mercy volunteer coordinator Erin Porter has been organizing food donations for the picnic. Smith said many areas businesses have been donating to the event.

Other highlights Smith outlined were guest speakers from the Red Cross and Mercy.

Ben Moore, senior in finance, has been coordinating student participation for several relief programs, including the picnic.

If you go
Red Cross picnic
When: 1 p.m. Sunday

Smith said Moore's efforts, along with several other K-State students, have made events like this possible. "Initially, I asked him if he could gather students, pairing them in teams of three to work on projects," Smith said.

"Thus far, Moore has gathered 90 students to help us."

However, with Hurricane Rita soon to hit up the Gulf Coast, Smith said the group is preparing for the worst possible outcome.

"The other day, I met with three students, and they are calling nearly 75 area motels and bed and breakfasts to see if they have space," he said. "We're all pretty apprehensive at the Red Cross, and we're competing with a lot of space due to football."

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said the state is preparing for the worst as well.

"We have about 2,000 evacuees in the state," she said.

"Right now, the state is regrouping and filling in the gaps with what went wrong in this disaster and work with what we can for the future," she said. .

And as the state prepares for disaster, local student volunteers are working with the remaining refugees in the area.

Smith said at the Red Cross, students are also assisting refugees who hope to find their families.

"We are searching for missing persons on Web sites and we are coordinating many ways to help people find their families," he said.

State museums starting to see effects of evolution controversy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE – The dispute over science standards used in teaching Kansas children is beginning to make its impact felt at some of the state's museums.

Jerry Choate, director of the Sternberg Museum of Natural History in Hays, says that about once a month workers find brochures in the restrooms that promote creationism over evolution.

In addition, guides at the museum increasingly find themselves confronted by people angry about exhibits using evolution to explain the history of dinosaurs and fossils.

"It's happening more than it used to," said Choate. "A person or group will come in and confront one of the guides with rapid-fire questions for which the person is not qualified to respond."

John Calvert, a leader of forces that want the Kansas State Board of Education to require criticism of evolution in the classroom, said the museum encounters are part of a rising tide of opposition to Charles Darwin's theory.

"I think you're finding that wherever there's a discussion of evolution going on, you'll find people raising their questions," said Calvert, a retired Lake Quivira attorney who helped found the Intelligent Design Network. Intelligent design holds that some features of the natural world are so well-ordered and complex that they're best explained by an intelligent cause.

Evolution, which says that natural chemical processes could have created the basic building blocks of life on Earth, that all life had a common ancestor and that man and apes shared a common ancestor, is about to get increased focus at both the Sternberg museum in Hays and the University of Kansas Museum of Natural History.

AMBASSADORS | Year-long term comes to end

As ambassadors, Hildebrand and George visit with alumni and prospective students. One of their main events is Just for Juniors, which is organized by the K-State Alumni Association for high school juniors and their parents.

George said they typically have an event about once a week, but it can vary.

Hildebrand said although he has enjoyed being an ambassador, he had to cut back on other things.

"It's challenging sometimes balancing everything," he said. "But as long as it's something you are passionate about and you really enjoy it, you can make time for it."

As their year winds down, Hildebrand and George are now looking forward to helping with the application process for the next ambassadors. Applications for the positions are due Sept. 29.

"We don't actually get to participate in choosing the finalists, but we are here to answer any questions and give suggestions to those who are applying," George said.

Hildebrand said the most important thing is for applicants to have a love for K-State.

"The thing to keep in mind is if you really have a desire to do it and you really want to be involved, just go for it," he said.

After they finish their reign as ambassadors, George and Hildebrand said they are going to focus on school.

George, a senior in agricultural education, plans to graduate in May 2006.

Hildebrand, senior in secondary education and print journalism, said he still has a year left.

Both ambassadors said they have learned a lot from their experiences.

"I got to meet so many people around the state and the passion they have for the university rubs off on you," Hildebrand said. "It's great seeing the pride the alumni have."

FOOD | Family opens new restaurant in Manhattan restaurant in Salina, Kan.

"It was mainly my husband's dream to have his own business," Pereyda said. "It's in his family. His parents back at home in Mexico City run a grocery store."

With the addition of the Manhattan location, Pereyda and her husband now own three restaurants, including one in Hutchinson, Kan.

But Pereyda said they still want to expand.

"Now we are looking at a Topeka location and we will be negotiating in January," Pereyda said.

Because Pereyda and her husband, Servando Moises, can't be in three places at once, they hire their family members to run the restaurants in Hutchinson and Manhattan.

Pereyda's brother, Armando Pereyda, is the manager for the Manhattan restaurant.

"My goal as manager is to exceed her sales in Salina and to become the customers' first, last and best choice for Mexican dining," Armando Pereyda said.

TOP 5 RUNNING BACKS IN THE BIG 12

LEADING THE PACK

JAMAAL CHARLES

Texas has rushed for more than 300 yards in two of its first three games, and Jamaal Charles is a big reason why. The true freshman's 189 yards rushing against Rice last weekend is the second-best single game total in Texas freshman history, short of Cedric Benson's 213 yards against Kansas in 2001.

TEXAS LONGHORNS

- Texas is off this week.
- Record: 3-0
- Next: The Longhorns play at 11 a.m., Oct. 1, at Missouri. The game will be televised on ABC.

"I just knew this was going to be the right place. It felt like home here. Everything just felt right, and when the shoe fits, you always wear it."

Thomas Clayton
K-STATE RUNNING BACK

CORY ROSS

The senior I-back for Nebraska, Cory Ross is second in the Big 12 in rushing with 118.7 yards per game. Against Pittsburgh last Saturday, Ross rushed 32 times for 153 yards, his 11th career 100-yard rushing game. Ross is 17th on Nebraska's career rushing chart with 2,217 yards.

NEBRASKA CORNHUSKERS

- Nebraska is off this week.
- Record: 3-0
- Next: The Huskers play at 2:30 p.m., Oct. 1, at home against No. 22 Iowa State. The game will be televised on ABC.

STEVIE HICKS

Against then-No. 8 Iowa on Sept. 10, junior running back Stevie Hicks rushed for 118 yards to help the Cyclones upset the Hawkeyes 23-3. Hicks is averaging 104 yards per game on the ground for the No. 22 Cyclones, who are ranked in the top 25 for the first time since 2002.

IOWA STATE CYCLONES

- Record: 2-0
- Next: Iowa State will play at 7 tonight against Army in West Point, N.Y. The game will be aired on ESPN2 and on Sirius Satellite Radio channel 126 (Army feed).

K-State running back has overcome obstacles to find success on the football field

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Running back Thomas Clayton is used to difficult situations.

As K-State's starter this season, the junior is seeing his first extended action as a collegiate running back, and has made the most of his opportunity.

Clayton leads the nation in rushing with 164.5 yards per game, but his chance to shine has been a long time coming, something Clayton said was hard to swallow.

"It was hard for the simple fact of being patient," Clayton said. "It was obviously something that I had to gain over three years. I think that was good for my development, and I'm happy that things happened the way they did."

Out of Mt. Vernon High School in Alexandria, Va., Clayton had his choice of nearly any college, as he was ranked the No. 8 running back in the country by Rivals.com.

He chose Bobby Bowden and the Florida State Seminoles, where he played in four games as a true freshman in 2002 before deciding Florida State was not the place for him.

"It was just the feeling; I didn't feel comfortable at any point in time when I was there," Clayton said. "But I tried to stick it out, and I played the season. We did okay that year, but I just knew that wasn't the place for me."

He was released from his scholarship by Florida State, and again was faced with a decision of where to play college football.

Clayton took recruiting visits to Vanderbilt, Northwestern and Michigan, but it was a trip to Manhattan that put Clayton's heart at ease.

"I had another (visit) set up, but I didn't go after I came here," Clayton said. "I just knew this was going to be the place. It felt like home here.

"Everything just felt right, and when the shoe fits, you always wear it."

Clayton joined the Wildcats in 2003, and had to redshirt under NCAA transfer guidelines. That year, then-junior running back Darren Sproles led the nation with 1,986 rushing yards, helping the Wildcats to their first-ever Big 12 Championship.

In 2004, Clayton played sparingly behind the All-American Sproles, gaining 71 yards on 14 carries, and watched as the Wildcats finished with a 4-7 record.

ADRIAN PETERSON

The Heisman Trophy runner-up as a freshman in 2004, Adrian Peterson has had a rough start this season for the 1-2 Oklahoma Sooners. Peterson is fourth in the Big 12 Conference in rushing with 113.7 yards per game, but in Oklahoma's losses to TCU and UCLA, he has been held to 63 and 58 yards respectively.

OKLAHOMA SOONERS

- Oklahoma is off this week.
- Record: 1-2
- Next: The Sooners play at 6 p.m., Oct. 1, against K-State. The game will be televised on Fox Sports Network.

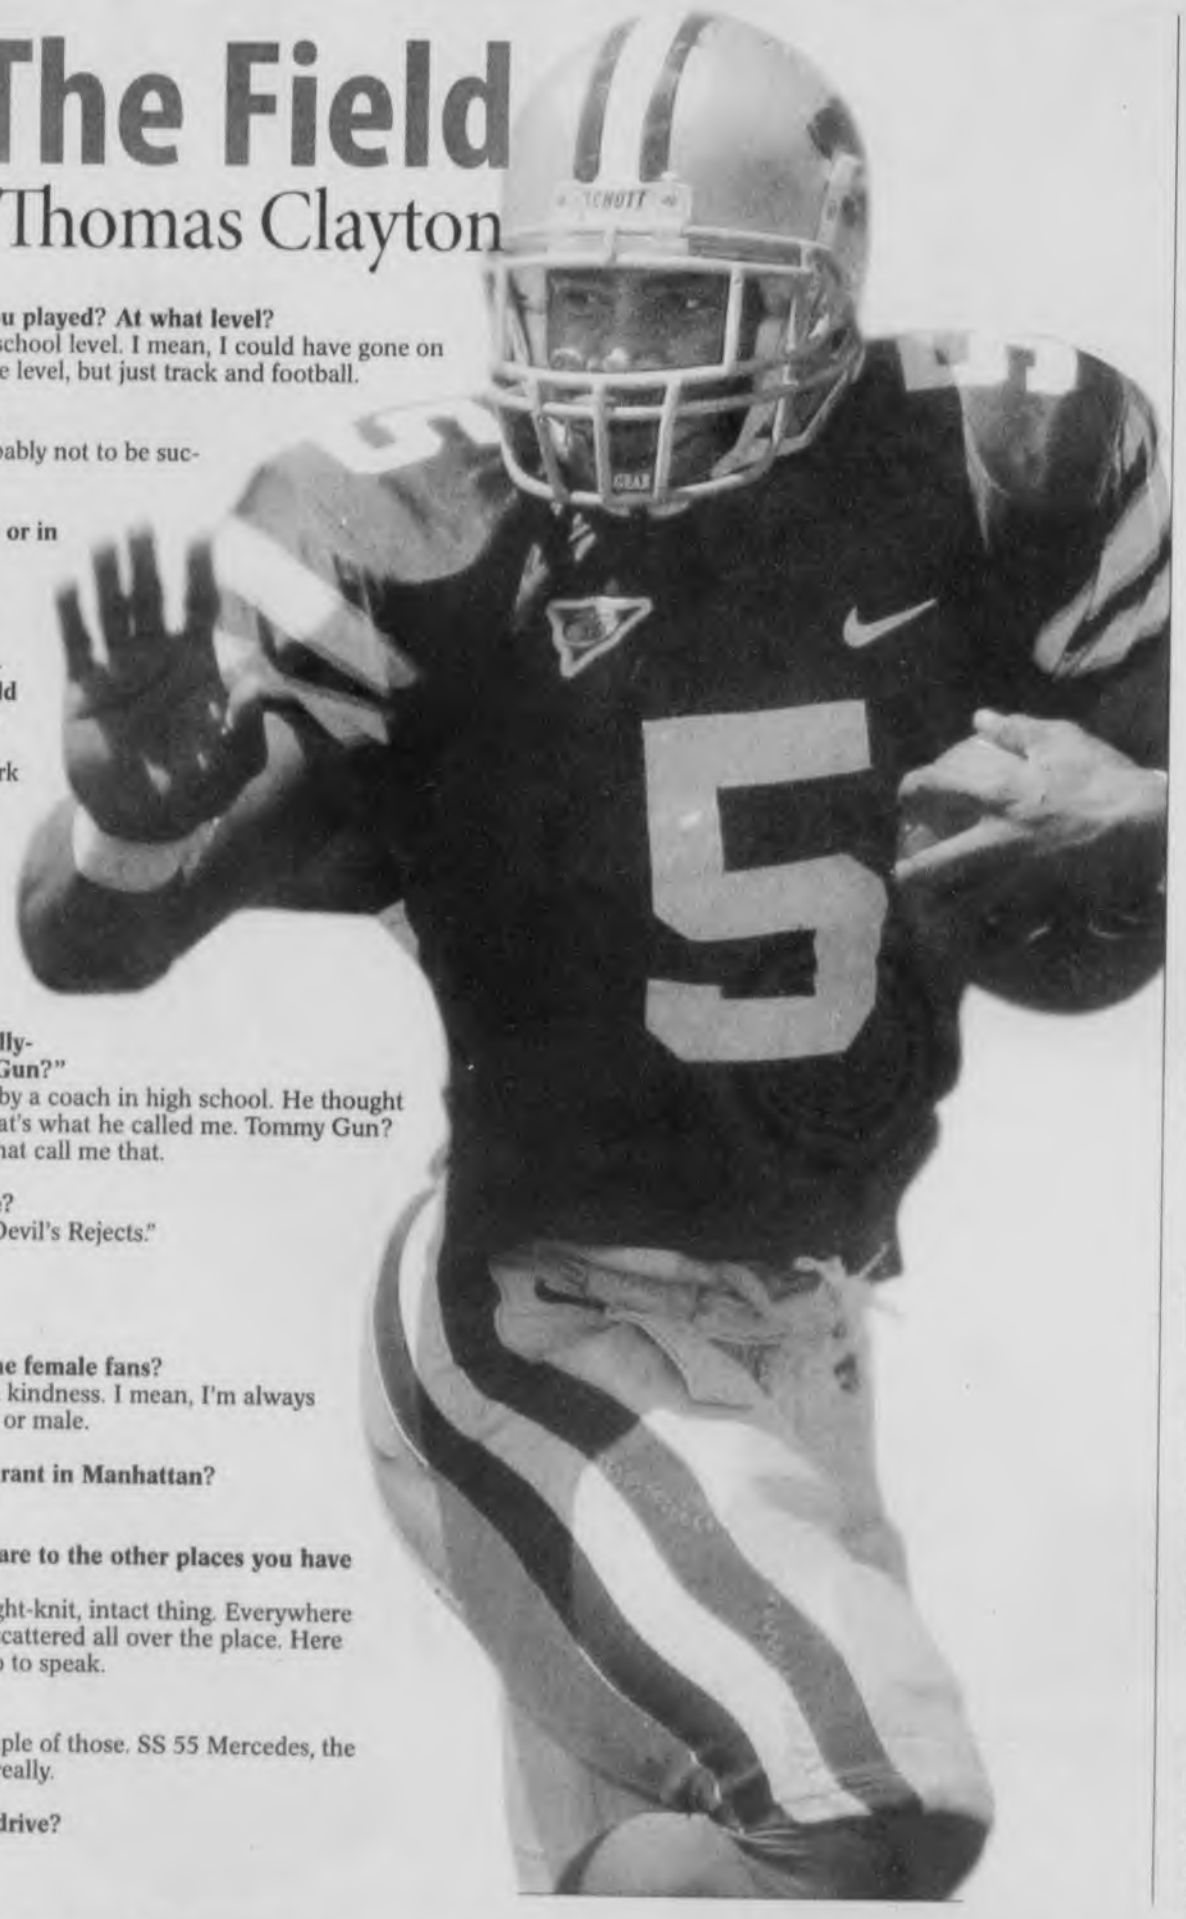
Off the field Page 2 | Marcus Watts' switch Page 3 | Jermaine Moreira: special teams threat Page 4 | Stopping the run Page 5

"Stopping the run is a big priority. If we can't do that, it's going to be a long day. North Texas has two great backs and a physical offensive line, so we need to be ready."

Steve Burch
K-STATE DEFENSIVE END

K-State (2-0) vs. North Texas (1-1)

1:10 p.m., Saturday



History: K-State leads series 2-1

Radio: K-State Sports Network — 1350AM, 101.5FM

Because North Texas likes to run the ball a lot, and because the Mean Green do most of their running up the middle, defensive tackle Quintin Echols could be called on heavily Saturday if the Wildcats want to stop the run.

Off The Field
with Thomas Clayton

Q: What other sports have you played? At what level?
A: Track and field at the high school level. I mean, I could have gone on and done track at the collegiate level, but just track and football.

Q: What is your biggest fear?
A: My biggest fear? Wow. Probably not to be successful.

Q: Not to be successful in life or in football?
A: In life. I think Thomas Clayton's bigger than football.

Q: If you could go to any concert in any location, who would you see and where would you go?
A: I probably would go see Björk in Iceland.

Q: Do you have any pregame rituals or superstitions?
A: I listen to some hard-core rock before the games. I mean, I have to do that.

Q: Why is your nickname "Hollywood?" What about "Tommy Gun?"
A: Hollywood was given to me by a coach in high school. He thought I looked like a movie star, so that's what he called me. Tommy Gun? My arms. There's a lot of guys that call me that.

Q: What is your favorite movie?
A: "House of 1,000 Corpses." "Devil's Rejects."

Q: Favorite Actor?
A: Johnny Depp.

Q: How do you handle all of the female fans?
A: Wow, I try to treat them with kindness. I mean, I'm always welcoming to fans either female or male.

Q: What is your favorite restaurant in Manhattan?
A: Famous Dave's.

Q: How does Manhattan compare to the other places you have lived?
A: This is definitely more of a tight-knit, intact thing. Everywhere else, it's kind of – everybody is scattered all over the place. Here everybody's huddled together, so to speak.

Q: What's your dream car?
A: My dream car? I've got a couple of those. SS 55 Mercedes, the Lotus. I like Hummers, but not really.

Q: Which one of those do you drive?
A: None of them – yet.

OFFENSE

The question is whether or not running back Thomas Clayton — the nation's leading rusher with 164.5 yard per game — will play or not. Clayton's status after his arrest last Friday is unknown and won't be revealed until game time. Should Clayton be benched, look for redshirt-freshman Parrish Fisher to fill in nicely.

Yes, North Texas has the last two national rushing champions in running backs Patrick Cobbs and Jamario Thomas, but the Mean Green offense has been bad so far this season. North Texas' offense did not score against Tulsa in a 54-2 loss, and in the season opener, managed just 14 points against Middle Tennessee State.

DEFENSE

The Wildcat defense is allowing 286 yards per game to rank 25th in the nation. But the bigger statistic for Saturday's game is that K-State is holding its opponents to 78 yards rushing per game, which sets up nicely against North Texas' run-oriented offense. The pass rush might not be as big of a factor this week, but K-State needs to improve, as it only has two sacks this year.

It bears repeating — North Texas gave up 54 points to Tulsa. This is the same Tulsa team that lost to SMU, which in turn lost to Big 12 Conference patsy Baylor. The Mean Green are giving up 370.5 yards per game, including 227 on the ground. This could mean good things for the Wildcat ground game with quarterback Allen Webb and either Clayton or Fisher at running back.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Return man Jermaine Moreira is quickly becoming the special teams threat K-State lacked in 2004. Moreira's ability to make people miss will pay off big for the Wildcats, possibly as soon as Saturday, since North Texas gives up 36 yards per punt return. Punter Tim Reyer is averaging 40.5 yards per punt and has pinned opponents inside their 20 yard line on 3-of-8 attempts.

North Texas' return game is meek at best, averaging -2 yards per punt return and 20 yards per kick return. North Texas kicker Nick Bazaldua is 0-of-2 on field goals this season, one of which was blocked. But, Bazaldua has converted on 6-of-6 extra point tries. However, the Mean Green are holding their opponents to 11.8 yards per punt return, which could help on Saturday.

PREDICTION

Now is the time for K-State to break loose and blow out a seemingly inferior opponent. After two close games to start the season, it would be helpful for K-State's psyche if it entered conference play with a blow-out win under its belt. North Texas won't stop the K-State offensive attack, while the K-State defense should slow North Texas' running game.

Watts finding comfort zone after switch to defense

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marcus Watts (left) was a standout on special teams for K-State in 2004, recording 11 tackles in 11 appearances. Watts, a sophomore, made the move from wide receiver to free safety in the spring and has started in place of senior Jesse Tetuan in K-State's first two games this season.

Free safety Jesse Tetuan makes a tackle against a Texas Tech running back on Oct. 30, 2004. Tetuan — K-State's second leading returning tackler from a year ago with 58 tackles — has been replaced at free safety by sophomore Marcus Watts.

COLLEGIAN

All senior Jesse Tetuan can do is stand on the sidelines.

After 26 consecutive starts, Tetuan, who finished second in tackles for K-State last season, must watch while converted wide receiver Marcus Watts takes over his position at free safety.

Tetuan may not be on the field, but he has helped Watts figure things out on and off the field this season.

"I come off the sideline and Jesse's right there, and if he sees stuff that I'm doing wrong, or if he sees something that I'm doing wrong, he'll let me know if coach (Bob) Elliott doesn't let me know," Watts said. "It's like having two coaches. Jesse's a great guy; we're friends off the field and on the field. He helps me out a lot."

Watts made his move to safety while Jordy Nelson moved from the defensive secondary to wide receiver during spring practice.

Watts said it was not a big deal when coach Bill Snyder told him about the move, but he was hesitant to accept the change because he thought there was a chance to crack the starting lineup on offense.

"Coach Snyder brought me into his office and talked with me, and he allowed me a couple of days to think it over," Watts said. "I was excited about it, but at first I thought that I could compete for a starting position at receiver, so I thought I had a good chance to play a lot of receiver.

"Then I was going over to a new side of the ball where I was just going to be thrown in. I didn't want to be put way back behind everybody, and be going back from the top to the bottom, but I knew that I would have to work hard, and that's what I just did."

Watts has established himself as the No. 1 free safety, saving the Wildcats on two separate possessions in their 21-19 win over Marshall.

He halted two possible scoring drives by the Thundering Herd, forcing two fumbles inside the 10-yard line.

A self-proclaimed joker and smart-aleck off the field, Watts, the third-leading tackler for the Wildcats, transforms himself when he steps onto the field.

"I'm doing that all in fun," Watts said. "I think that's how people know me, but once I get on the field, the smart-aleck and the jokes stop, and it's time for business."

Last year's defense did not get it done, finishing sixth in total defense in the Big 12 Conference and allowing nearly 31 points per game.

To fix the problem, Snyder wanted to add speed to the defense, and Watts found himself in the mix at secondary while Maurice Mack moved from the secondary to linebacker.

Snyder has been impressed by Watts' play in the first two games, and said Watts has improved each week in his new position.

"He runs so well, he makes us so much faster, and I think that's what has taken place since he's been at that position," Snyder said. "I think he's gotten better week in and week out. He's made improvement prior to the season starting and into the first game, and he's made improvement from the first game to the second game."

Watts, along with Mack, have begun the transformation back to the once-proud defense.

Mack, K-State's leading tackler this season, said Watts is a player who can make a big play at any time.

"Watts is one of those guys, once he gets on the field, he can make a lot of things happen for you," Mack said. "He's not that big of a guy, but he can make those big hits like everyone saw last game. Once we get guys like Watts on the field, big things can happen for us."

Big things have already happened two games into the season, and that's no joke. It's just business as usual for Watts.

Moreira excels as return man

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

In two games this season, junior Jermaine Moreira has returned five punts for 78 yards — an average of 15.6 yards per return. In the second half of K-State's 21-19 win over Marshall on Sept. 10, Moreira had a 99-yard kick return for a touchdown called back because of a holding penalty.

Returner ranks 14th nationally in punt return yardage

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jermaine Moreira always looks to change the game.

The junior wide receiver said he sees himself as a difference-maker on offense, where he leads K-State in receiving with 11 catches for 117 yards, as well as on special teams, where he has made plays as a kick and punt returner.

"The only thing I need is a couple blocks, and I can get it out of the gate," Moreira said. "I'm always trying to get in the end zone and get the team up."

Moreira has already given his team a boost.

In week one against Florida International, Moreira set up a key Wildcat touchdown with a 67-yard punt return in the third quarter.

Moreira continued to electrify fans the next week against Marshall with a 99-yard kick return that was called back on a penalty.

The play was enough to impress coach Bill Snyder, who said he sees Moreira as a playmaker on the team.

"We did a nice job of protecting him and blocking for him, but it doesn't happen if it wasn't for his athletic ability," Snyder said. "You saw on several occasions, it wasn't just that return, he had several returns, and you've seen him do some things with the football."

Moreira leads K-State with 5 punt returns for 78 yards and 11 kick returns for 111 yards.

Yamon Figurs began the year as the Wildcats' return man, until he had fumbles on a punt and a kick, which both set up touchdowns by the opposition. Moreira has been on the field ever since.

Wide receiver Jordy Nelson said K-State's special teams have been playing with more confidence knowing they have a play-maker like Moreira returning kicks.

"It's good to know someone's back there that, if we give him a couple blocks, he's able to take it to the end zone," Nelson said. "He's very elusive, so if we can get a couple of blocks, he can take it to the house."

Nelson said a big play on special teams can swing the momentum of the game.

"Special teams changes the whole aspect of the game," Nelson said. "Everyone thinks the game is only offense and defense, but for the most part, special teams pretty much determines the game."

Moreira, who plans to continue the special teams tradition here at K-State, said he has the confidence in his teammates to be patient and wait for them to set up blocks for him.

"I'm always trying to be a play-maker, but depending on our schemes, sometimes you get it and go, and sometimes you wait for your blocks," Moreira said.

Cat's defense focused on stopping the run

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

North Texas' running backs could pose a problem for K-State's rushing defense Saturday.

Patrick Cobbs and Jamario Thomas are the previous two national rushing champions. Cobbs rushed for 1,680 yards and 19 touchdowns in 2003 to lead the nation, while Thomas rushed for 1,801 yards and 17 touchdowns last year to take the honor as a freshman.

Coach Bill Snyder said Thomas and Cobbs are more alike than different.

"Cobbs is probably a little more physical of the two, but both of them are very similar in the way they run and the way the team utilizes them," Snyder said.

Snyder said North Texas' offense is very effective in the Sun Belt Conference.

"Their system is their system, and they plug guys in, and they've done that over a period of time," he said. "The rushers were very good in that conference and, obviously, No. 1 in the nation."

Junior linebacker Maurice Mack said no matter who North Texas uses at running back, it will be a challenge for the defense.

"Two good backs, either way the defense will have their hands full," he said. "We're going to take both of them seriously."

K-State currently ranks second in the Big 12 and 14th in the nation in rushing defense, with an average of 78 yards allowed per game.

Establishing the defense earlier in the game, Mack said, will be key.

"Once we establish our game plan and get a counter attack on the running backs, it'll all be about finding the ball," he said. "One of our main goals defensively is to stop the run and then worry about the pass."

Junior defensive end Steve Burch said having two good running backs could pose a threat for the defense.

"They've got two great backs, so their offense will never get tired," he said.

Burch said the fact that North Texas relies so much on the run will be a positive for the players.

"It's easier because you pretty much know what they are going to do," he said. "They're going to get out there, and there's no disguise; there's no trickery. Everybody in the country knows that North Texas is going to get out there and run the ball. I would say it's easier to predict, but we're going to have to get out there and stop the run."

North Texas averages 111 yards per game rushing, but is 0-1 this season when held to less than 100 yards rushing.

Burch said it will be difficult containing the two backs, but K-State has positives too.

"We have a good defense," Burch said. "Our guys are going to come to play. We're looking forward to getting a chance to play against their offense and try to stop the run. That's one of our deciders of whether we have a good defense or not."

Junior running back Thomas Clayton rushed for 152 yards and a touchdown in K-State's 21-19 win over Marshall on Sept. 10.

COLLEGIAN

CLAYTON | Back has made the most of playing time

However, Clayton was patient and never doubted his move to K-State.

"The opportunity to play was going to eventually come wherever I went," Clayton said.

Sproles graduated in 2004 as the school's career leading rusher, meaning Clayton would finally have the chance to prove himself, even if it meant following a legend in the mind of K-State fans.

Through K-State's first two games, Clayton has shown why he was so highly sought-after out of high school.

While leading the nation in yards per game, Clayton has three rushing touchdowns, including an 80-yarder in the season opener against Florida International.

"Yes, he has gotten off to a good start, and why is that the case?" coach Bill Snyder said. "I think he's improved himself as a ball carrier and as a receiver, and he's running more aggressively than perhaps at earlier stages in his career."

His teammates said Clayton's success was expected all along.

"It's not really a surprise," senior fullback and team captain Victor Mann said. "He's one of those big-time players."

Things were going well for Clayton until this past week.

Last Friday, Clayton was arrested for aggravated battery after a run-in with a university parking official. Details of the incident have not been released, and no charges have been filed, but it is unknown if Clayton will play Saturday against North Texas.

On Tuesday, Snyder defended his starter, saying Clayton made a mistake, but the issue is not as bad as it was originally reported.

"I want you to understand that I'm not trying to make light of any action of any player in our program, including Thomas," Snyder said. "Thomas made an inappropriate decision. Thomas had no intent to, nor did he harm anyone. He knows that there are consequences, and he is in the process of responding to those consequences."

Snyder said Clayton would face internal team punishment while the legal aspects were worked out, and, in the meantime, the decision to play or not play Clayton against North Texas would not be made public until Saturday's game.

If Clayton does play, it will be yet another hurdle he has overcome. Should he be held from Saturday's game, he will have to wait to prove once again he can push through difficult times.

Prior to the arrest, Clayton said he still hasn't had his best game as a Wildcat.

"I still don't feel like I've had, quote-unquote, that game," Clayton said. "I'm going to continue week in and week out to play as hard as I possibly can, but I'll know when that game comes. It's just that feeling of knowing that you played your best."

Pagan festival includes crafts, auction

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of the Heartland Spiritual Alliance, the Flinthills Pagans Alliance and the K-State Alliance for the Understanding of Religious Alternatives met Saturday in City Park for Pagan Pride Day.

The day included a fundraiser, a craft display and plans for upcoming events. The fundraiser benefited the T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter, Flint Hills Breadbasket and the American Red Cross' Hurricane Katrina relief fund.

There were tarot card, palm and tea leaf readings, a children's coloring booth and a silent auction table.

The event gave pagans a chance to share experiences and to learn and debate about Paganism and its various types.

The vice president of the Flinthills Pagans Alliance, only known as Disa, attended the event. "Wicca is the most popular gateway religion for paganism."

Paganism is a religion that is popularly misconstrued, Disa said, and it will take some work to build bridges among

Damage from Hurricane Rita not as extensive as feared

By Michael Graczyk
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEAUMONT, Texas – Nasty as it was, Rita wasn't Katrina. For that, a drenched, twice-battered Gulf Coast gave thanks.

Hurricane Rita hammered east Texas and the Louisiana coast Saturday, unleashing floods and collapsing buildings, yet the overriding reaction was relief that the storm proved far less fierce and deadly than Katrina.

As the storm passed, authorities pleaded with the roughly 3 million evacuees not to hurry home too soon, fearing more chaos on the roads and potential danger from high waters.

"Be patient, stay put," said Texas Gov. Rick Perry. "If you are in a safe place with food, water, bedding, you are better remaining there."

In any other hurricane season, Rita might have seemed devastating. It knocked out power for 1 million customers, sparked fires across the hurricane zone and swamped Louisiana shoreline towns with a 15-foot storm surge that required boat and helicopter rescues of hundreds of people.

But the new storm came in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, with its 1,000-plus death toll, cataclysmic flooding of New Orleans and staggering destruction in Mississippi. By Saturday evening, the only reported death was in Mississippi, where one person was killed when a tornado that spun off the remains of the hurricane overturned a mobile home.

Memorial to K-State's precursor, Bluemont Central College, unveiled

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The physical difference between the two stones is large, but the reason for their presence is the same.

The stones, memorials to Bluemont Central College, were unveiled Friday afternoon at the northwest corner of Claflin Road and College Avenue. More than 30 people attended the ceremony, most of which was indoors due to rain earlier that day.

"There would be no K-State without Bluemont College," Patricia O'Brien, professor emeritus of archeology and anthropology, said.

O'Brien excavated much of the original college site and told the crowd facts about the history of the college.

Bluemont Central College was chartered in 1858, according to university archives, and was deeded to the state of Kansas in 1863 for the creation of Kansas State Agricultural College. The transfer was made to take advantage of the 1862 Morrill Act, which provided for the creation of land-grant universities.

The college was renamed Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science in 1931 and Kansas State University in 1959.

The original 44-foot by 100-foot building was dismantled in the 1880s when the college moved to its present campus and the land was sold by the university in 2003 for the Founder's Hill Apartment Complex, according to a release from the Riley County Historical Society.

The college was founded by Joseph Denison, Isaac Goodnow and Washington Marlatt. Marlatt was the school's first principal and married

Features distinguish between real and counterfeit bills

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To the untrained eye they look like the real thing.

They are green, printed on high quality paper and they have the familiar picture of Benjamin Franklin in the center.

Counterfeit $100 bills have turned up in stores in Riley and Pottawatomie counties, including Food 4 Less, Wal-Mart and Sears, said Captain Gary Grubbs with the Riley County Police Department.

Grubbs said the bills have distinct features that show they are counterfeit.

First, there is no water-mark or ghost-mark image of Benjamin Franklin. On an authentic bill, the water-mark can be seen on the right side of the bill when it is held up to light.

Second, the color-shifting ink on the lower right corner of the bill does not change from green to black and it can be scraped off.

Third, the security strip on the left side of the bill does show up, however Grubbs said it doesn't turn red under a black light like it should.

Finally, the micro-printing is not legible. This print requires a magnifying glass to see and if the print is unreadable, Grubbs said it's not real. In the number 100 in the lower left corner of the bill, "USA 100" is repeated several times. What appears to be a line in the left lapel of Franklin's coat is actually "The United States of America" in micro-print.

Grubbs said the counterfeit $100 bills are not high quality and could be done in someone's home.

"A decent and very good color copy machine could do it, but it can't duplicate the ghost image or watermarks on authentic bills," Grubbs said.

Ron Werner, co-manager of Wal-Mart said the store has received some bills but he is unsure how many.

Werner said all Wal-Mart employees are trained in identifying counterfeit bills.

"They pretty much know to be aware that it is a possibility," he said.

The employees use marking pens on the bills to identify if they are real or not, Werner said.

However, Grubbs said other security features on the bills should be examined as well.

"Do not rely on counterfeit marking pens," he said. "They are not always correct."

Werner said he would be notifying employees to look closely at the other features on the bills that would identify them as counterfeit.

Grubbs said the Riley County Police Department is working with the United States Secret Service to find who is making and passing the counterfeit bills.

No one from the Secret Service was available for comment.

Evacuating bus explodes

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A bus that caught fire on Interstate 45 is towed away on Friday in Wilmer, Texas.

Up to 24 people were killed from explosions and fire on a bus carrying elderly evacuees on Friday on a highway near Dallas. Thirty-eight residents and six employees from the Brighton Gardens nursing home were riding on the bus. Dallas County Sheriff's Department spokesman Don Peritz said early indications show the bus caught fire due to mechanical problems, then passengers' oxygen tanks began exploding.

Manure-powered ethanol plant

An ethanol plant will be built in southwest Kansas by a Dallas-based energy company that will be powered by cattle manure. This will be the third manure-fueled plant that has been announced this year for Panda Energy. The $120 million facility would refine about 100 million gallons of ethanol. About 1 billion pounds of manure would be used each year to power operations.

Afghan president calls for end of military operations

President Hamid Karzai said Tuesday that United States-led forces should focus on terror bases and support networks. He said foreign governments should be concentrated on terrorist locations and he wanted an immediate end to foreign troops searching homes without government authorization.

Teen shoots parents, grandparent, dies in collision

After being sent home from school for intoxication, a 17-year-old boy shot his parents and grandmother and then died in a head-on collision killing himself and another driver. Matthew Hackney, of Elkhorn Creek, Ky., was a senior at East Ridge High School. Ivan, 47, Shirley, 44, and Wilma Hackney, 63, were found at the teen's home. State Police Lt. Bobby Johnson said troopers attempted to stop Hackney when he lost control and crashed into a pickup, killing Terry A. Taylor, 41.

Boxer dies of brain trauma

Boxer Leavander Johnson, 35, died Thursday after defending his IBF lightweight title on Saturday night. Johnson was rushed to the hospital after collapsing on the way to his dressing room. He had bleeding on the brain and doctors operated to relieve the pressure, but he never regained consciousness.

AIDS expert proposes 'vaccine'

Francois Venter, a South African AIDS expert, said male circumcision is the best available "vaccine" against the disease in his country. A survey in the Soweto township showed that circumcised men were 65 percent less likely to get AIDS than those that were not circumcised. South Africa has the highest incidence of AIDS cases in the world.

Family Day to bring influx visitors to view campus

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend K-State will have more visitors to campus at the 77th annual Family Day. Students are encouraged to invite family to campus starting Friday.

Family Day is an open house for relatives to see students' environments and campus life.

"It's a great chance to have the students' families up and give them a chance to experience K-State," Emily Lehning, assistant dean of New Student Services, said. "For a lot of students, K-State is a home away from home. They should be proud of where they're going to school and should want to show that off."

Some students said they thought their participation was unnecessary.

"My family never participated in Family Day," Bradley Carpenter, 2004 graduate in computer science, said. "We never attended because my family was already very familiar with K-State and it wasn't like we needed to learn more about campus. They were already knowledgeable on the subject and had visited K-State many other times in the past."

Carpenter said he never saw Family Day advertised, and students didn't know about the event until visiting the Web site.

"I've never participated, but it seems like a great opportunity for parents and siblings to come up and see some of the opportunities K-State has to offer," Justin Metcalf, senior in computer engineering, said. "It looks like a good way to make an impression on younger siblings and hook them on K-State while they are young."

There will be many activities for students and their families this weekend, like Peters Recreation Complex, a dinner theater, tours, golfing at Colbert Hills Golf Course and a children's carnival.

Lehning said the highlights of Family Day weekend will be the K-State legacy pinning ceremony and brunch at 10 a.m. Saturday at the K-State Alumni Center. It is a ceremony where a K-State alumnus can present a pin to a current student and then both take an oath to the university.

Saturday night there will be a dean's dinner hosted by Pat Bosco, dean of Student Life. Lehning said the dinner will be a good opportunity for students to get together with campus leaders.

"It's a nice way to cap off the whole Family Day experience," she said.

For a complete list of events, visit www.k-state.edu/familyday.

Riley County Commission declares Tuesday as Family Day

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eating dinner with one's family is more than just a meal.

And as of last week, the Riley County Commission declared today as "Family Day – a day to eat dinner with your children."

City Commissioner Jayme Morris-Hardeman, executive director of the Sunflower Court Appointed Special Advocates, supported the adoption of Family Day for Riley County. Morris-Hardeman said it's important that parents spend time with their children.

Research from The National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse (CASA) at Columbia University stated children who eat dinner with their families are less likely to smoke, drink or use drugs.

The CASA Family Day Web site claims, "Conversations that go hand-in-hand with dinner will help you learn more about your children's lives and better understand the challenges they face.

"CASA's 2004 Teen Survey found that teens from families that almost never eat dinner together were 72 percent likelier than the average teen to use illegal drugs, cigarettes and alcohol, while those from families that almost always eat dinner together were 31 percent less likely than the average teen to engage in these activities," the site claims.

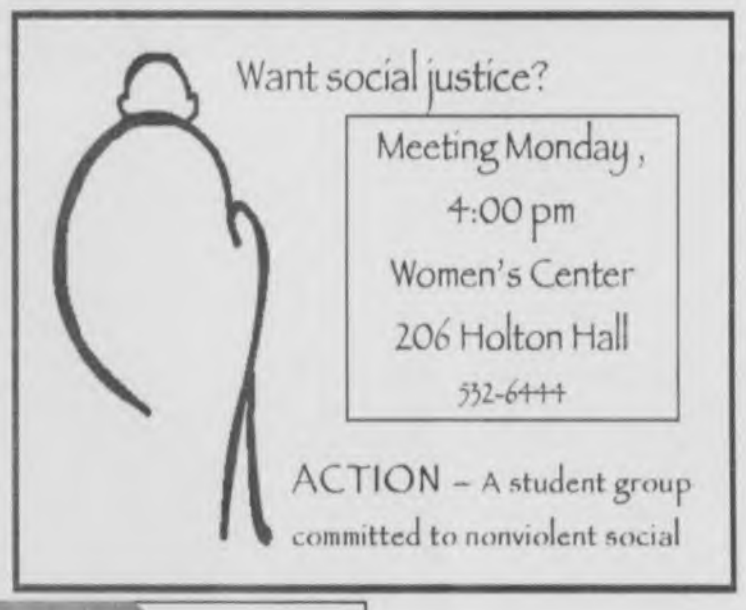
The site further states that households that eat five to seven meals per week have 14 percent teens who smoke cigarettes, of 30 percent who drink alcohol and 12 percent that smoke marijunana. Yet households that eat zero to two dinners per week have 34 percent teens who smoke cigarettes, 52 percent who drink alcohol and 35 percent who smoke marijuana.

President Bush stated in his 2005 Family Day Proclamation that he believed families are a source of hope, stability and love.

"On Family Day, we celebrate the special bonds that link children and parents, and we recognize the importance of parental involvement in the lives of their children," he said "By providing guidance, support and unconditional love, families help shape the character and future of our nation."

Family Day originated from CASA in 2001 to promote safe households, strengthening family relationships with children.

Since 2001, Bush, 42 state governors and more than 400 cities and counties have issued Family Day proclamations.



Did you know?

Family Dinners

- Children and tenns are at half the risk for substance abuse compared to teens who dine with their families infrequently
- They are less likely to have friends or classmates who use illicit drugs or abuse prescription drugs
- They have lower levels of tension and stress at home
- Are more likely to say that their parents are proud of them
- Are likelier to say they can confide in their parents
- Are likelier to get better grades in school
- Are more likely to be emotionally content and have positive peer relationships
- Have healthier eating habits
- Are at lower risk for thoughts of suicide
- Are less likely to try marijuana or have friends who use marijuana

TO THE POINT

Family Day can help with communication

Riley County followed President Bush's lead in his 2005 Family Day Proclamation and declared today is Family Day, a day when families should eat dinner together.

The county is observing this day in hopes of lowering rates of teenage smoking, drinking and drug usage by knitting families together and promoting communication between parents and children.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

A survey of teenagers by the Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse found teens who eat regular meals with their families are 31 percent less likely to smoke, drink and use drugs.

The idea of eating one family meal is a start, but families must take tonight's dinner beyond just one night and make these meals worth the time and effort.

Family dinners should be long enough to keep members updated on each other's lives and should be scheduled on a regular basis. Get to know your children, your parents and your siblings.

One dinner a night will not bring a family together for long, but even eating together or participating in another family activity just once a week will help keep a family united and make its teenagers less likely to engage in illegal activities.

So give a family dinner a try, but not just tonight. Make it a regular occurrence and reap the benefits – immediately and in the long run.

Our nation

Despite trials, difficulties, America is still land of hope, opportunity

LUCAS MADDY

I've a body scraped and scarred through the toil of many years.
And I've a face of weathered lines, eroded by frightened tears.
I cried for all who suffered life and pledged to free them from their strife.
Though average I have been superb and conquered all my fears.
And still stand I on Bedloe
Isle to greet and persevere, as those who pass under my torch face a new frontier.

My sister Justice, lacking sight, still judges all in black and white.
But over my shoulder, as I face East,
I see you all from most to least.
And so do those who bore
your folks,
who came here with the highest hopes,
ambition, bravery, courage too:
they see what has become of you.

A fatter nation day by day who works to find the easy way and shame the work of yesterday it took to slowly cultivate the land, which we now desecrate.
You burn the flag for which I stand without fear of reprimand, and then claim rights to pornography and for your recourse come to me?
You say I give you liberty allowing you this ease to sleaze; but when the twins behind me fell you told me I could go to hell for "profiling" those I don't know well and searching caves in hopes to quell a thirst for blood for just a spell.
But somehow it seems quite unfair
when you say you don't really care, it's now become my cross to bear.
And from the right they pull so hard to proceed with harsh and cruel regard but on my left they soon discard my face that has become so scarred after countrymen were charred and marred because we had let down our guard.
Who came on ships, under my gaze,
would see you now with hearts ablaze.
The sons, of those who left before beliefs forced them to fight a war, are hence sent forth from friendly shore to settle someone else's score but in their homes some are ignored and others yet are much abhorred which leaves them not but to implore to justify their awful chore.

And if you favor this terrorist bout do you do anymore than pout and pathetically piss and moan about injustice as you tout
the ways of the peaceful and most devout, which get the benefit of the doubt even as they kill, without emotion other than to shout
"America must be taken out!"

Surely something can be done:
cloudy skies but hide the sun and in the past things were more fun and no one bothered anyone.
Right?

My thoughts have become quite uncertain –
did not we fear the Iron Curtain?
And in Desert Storm we fought Saddam;
before that it was Vietnam.
And Korea, battles in the sea,
preceded by monstrosities in Germany.
And the tearful duty of the Enola Gay.
And when this paper you have read will it be used to make a bed with just my words to pad your head?

So, much to my dismay,
I must say there never existed the good old days.
In our hearts are merely memories chosen purposely to please our troubled minds.
What keeps us going is just the knowing that the sun will rise tomorrow morning.
Every day another trial;
our defense is spirit and a smile,
acknowledging it's all worthwhile.

Ethanol can be good for engines, save money

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

In the wake of hurricanes Katrina and Rita, we've watched gas prices climb and linger at high prices for the past month. While they are expected to go down once we're out of this year's price sensitive hurricane season, we shouldn't expect them to return to the prices of yesteryear, back in the good old days when gas was averaging $1.50 a gallon.

Thankfully, there are alternatives out there that can shave off at least four cents, and in some areas, nearly 10 cents per gallon at the pumps.

More and more gas purchasers are choosing E10, a blend of gas consisting of 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent ethanol. Ethanol is made from corn and milo crops, and is just one of many alternative energy resources. According to U.S. automakers, E10 can be put into any vehicle that runs on regular gasoline.

Though E10 reportedly gets 1.5 percent lower mileage than regular unleaded, it causes less engine wear and tear, produces less heat and has less of an impact on the environment. The American Coalition for Ethanol stated that E10 reduces carbon monoxide and greenhouse gas emissions by 25 percent and 35-46 percent respectively. Even accounting for the minute mileage difference, it's still cheaper.

The intrigue with ethanol has even motivated some automakers to design cars capable of running on more than just a 10 percent blend of ethanol. Another blend called E85, consisting of 15 percent gasoline and 85 percent ethanol, is even cheaper. But only a limited number of vehicles, called "flex-fuel" vehicles, can operate on it.

I know at least one gas station in Manhattan sells E10, and it wouldn't be surprising if more followed suit with E10 and E85 blends.
So, auto owners rejoice.

Across the country and the world, ethanol plants are popping up everywhere. Even Kansas is getting a new ethanol plant, according to recent press releases.

Panda Energy, the company installing the plant, recently announced that the plant will annually replace 100 million gallons of gasoline. That may relieve some of our anxiety about gasoline, but our second concern is what other energy resource is used to run such an operation. That's because it takes fuel to make fuel.

Illustrations by Christina Forsberg COLLEGIAN

Panda Energy, however, plans on running the plant, the third of its kind, on cattle manure to process the corn and milo to make ethanol.

Instead of merely reminiscing the days of cheaper gasoline, we should recognize that such supply shortages and high prices for any product represent the kind of classic economic incentives that spur the creation of alternative products.

The new ethanol plant to be built in Kansas is simply one small example of that. The company's intent to recycle a waste product from Kansas feedlots to help produce another energy alternative represents the kind of self-sustaining enterprise that offers additional bonuses in that it will not only help reduce our dependence on oil, but it will benefit the environment and rural economies as well by creating a new market for agricultural products.

To the article written by Jonas, you continue to say the black, black, black, but yet it's not race. I'm a little confused.

Don't leave your house if you order delivery!

To the Kappa Kappa Gamma from Johnson County with the 3/4 ton Chevy Silverado, you may benefit from a driving course — just a thought.

Jonas, your article is not about race yet I continue to see racial references here. Let's just read this. "Anyone who dares to speak out is cast as a fanatic standing in front of a burning cross wearing a pointy hood." Is that the Ku Klux Klan? Who do they hate, blacks and Jewish people. Come on now, come on.

It's time to invest in an umbrella or some waterwings. This campus is a freaking swamp when it rains!

To the girls in the orange shirts at the Pike house on Thursday night, all I have to say is, "Oh my God! Are you kidding me?"

I think that Jonas should change the name of his article to "The Black Diversity," because that's the only culture I see.

Better yet, skanky mini-skirts with grandma sweater. Now that is hot.

RIP Creed. Long Live Alter Bridge.

Sand is overrated. It's just tiny, little rocks.

Why do I fall in love with every woman I see who shows me the least bit of attention?

For all of those calling in and complaining about Zach's article, the truth hurts doesn't it.

Since when do you get parking tickets for having a valid permit in your window?

I peed in the pool, but I won't tell which one.

Triscuit, they're not about the flavor, they're about the texture.

I heart Bush.

I just had sex in the stacks, and it was great. At Hale Library.

Katrina picnic unites refugees, city

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mary White came to Manhattan with no more than her car, dog and a suitcase of medicine.

Although she lost her house and her city, she is glad to call Kansas home.

White, a native Kansan and former Bay St. Louis, Miss., resident, moved back to her home state when Hurricane Katrina swept her home away.

Chuck Smith, professor in family studies and human services, said she, along with more than 75 hurricane evacuees, have come to Manhattan seeking comfort, shelter and family.

On Sunday, more than 100 people gathered at the City Park Pavilion to share some food and some experiences with the Hurricane Katrina disaster.

Several of them had stories to share.

White said she considers herself as one of the lucky refugees, able to find a home and start a life thousands of miles away from Mississippi. She currently lives with her sister in Wamego.

When reflecting on her stay, she has only positive thoughts about Kansas.

"For one, I think it's very wonderful," she said. "The folks in Manhattan have been so sweet."

For years, White has been recovering from a heart transplant. Smith said she lugged her suitcase of medicine with her, barely making it as she traveled city-to-city until she finally arrived in Kansas, where she lived more than 70 years ago.

"I have roots here," she said. "You just can't leave that."

Area-residents have assisted White a long the way, making sure her health is a priority.

"Chuck called the hospital, and I'm doing really well," she said.

She admitted that while many others were worried about her when she stayed in Mississippi, she had no concern about Hurricane Katrina.

"I've been through (Hurricane) Betsy, Camille and Andrew," she said. "I've been through them all."

But after how the hurricane affected her hometown, she said she is glad she left when she did.

"They usually aren't bad," White said. "This is probably the worst natural disaster to happen to the U.S."

The Rev. Matt Cobb said sometimes even the worst scenario can bring out the best in people.

"A lot of our faith traditions talk about how God works through those who served," he said. "It's been like this these past few weeks."

Jason Lantz, Flint Hills Red Cross director of operations, said he believes evacuees have brought the city together.

"All of you evacuees have been an inspiration for the Red Cross, for Manhattan," Lantz said. "You brought us together for a common cause."

Eppie Gillory, former Abita Springs, La., resident, also came to Manhattan because of Hurricane Katrina.

She said Manhattan hospitality has never been so sweet.

"This is the cleanest, nicest community I've ever seen, and I've been coming here for a while" she said. "It wasn't something that was put on – its genuine."

Researcher to hunt for ghosts on campus

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can explore the paranormal world with a free presentation by renowned paranormal researcher John Zaffis at 9:30 p.m. in the West and Main Ballrooms of the K-State Student Union. A ghost hunt at the Purple Masque Theatre will follow.

According to Zaffis' Web site, he has more than 30 years of experience with research of the paranormal. He has studied thousands of cases throughout the United States, Canada, Scotland and England. He has also been involved in cases dealing with possession, exorcism and demonology.

Zaffis has been featured in Discovery Channel documentaries and he has made appearances on "Unsolved Mysteries" and Fox News Live. He has also published a book, "Shadows of the Dark."

The presentation will be about two hours long and will include a PowerPoint presentation, a showing of documents and video clips and a question and answer session, Ben Hopper, Union Program Council program adviser, said.

The ghost hunt will begin around 11:30 p.m. As many as 75 people can attend. The 75 individuals will be selected through a process during the presentation. Hopper said the hunt is open to a limited number because of the legal code capacity of the theater.

Hopper said the event should be something fun and different for students.

Freshman sets school record, leads Wildcats

The Replacements

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thomas Clayton prowled the sidelines in the shadow of Bill Snyder, helmet on, waiting for his chance to get onto the field a few minutes into the second quarter.

Parrish Fisher and a host of other running backs never gave Clayton a chance or a reason to be on the field, as the K-State backfield rushed for a combined 262 yards in the Wildcats' 54-7 win over North Texas.

Clayton, who was arrested last Saturday on charges of aggravated battery after a run-in with a university parking official, did not start or step onto the field in the K-State victory.

The nation's leading rusher, averaging nearly 165 yards per game, was a spectator as Fisher stepped into his role as the starter.

He set the freshman record for rushing yards in a game with 169 on 21 carries, becoming the only freshman to start at tailback for Snyder and rush for over more than yards.

"I feel like, as you saw today, we've got four or five running backs deep that can all get the job done," Fisher said. "Donnie (Anders) came in and he had two touchdowns, Carlos (Alsup) had a touchdown and a few yards. It's just a matter of who they put out there, and whoever they put out there can get the job done."

Fisher, a redshirt freshman, was the spectator on the sidelines in K-State's win over Marshall. In his first game against Florida International, he carried the ball 14 times for 74 yards.

Fisher knew he was going to get playing time this game, but did not know he was going to start until Snyder told him to

CBB | Wooldridge donates tickets to coach's auction

K-State head men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge has donated two tickets to the Wildcats' home game with Texas on Feb. 22, 2006, as well as a team-autographed basketball as part of the Coaches All Across America's effort to assist Gulf Coast citizen rebuilding from Hurricane Katrina.

Wooldridge

The tickets and basketball, as well as dozens of other items from professional and college teams, are being auctioned online at www.allcoachescare.com. The proceeds will go to Habitat from Humanity to help build homes for low income families.

The ticket package also includes an opportunity to attend the team's game day shoot around and pre-game meal as well as a basketball autographed by the 2005-06 Kansas State team. Those interested in bidding can directly access it at www.allcoachescare.com/auction.html. Bidding will last until Oct. 1.

K-State begins season strong

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team began the year with a strong showing this weekend at the Missouri Mock Duels in Columbia, Mo., with a 13-7 singles record.

Coach Steve Bietau said the Wildcats were strong against Big 12 Conference foes Missouri and Iowa State, while staying competitive with Southeastern Conference powerhouse Arkansas.

"We knew Arkansas was very strong, and they look even better than they did last year, but our players did a good job of winning when they were better and not giving anything up to anyone," Bietau said.

The Wildcats were especially strong in singles play against Big 12 opponents, going 5-1 against the Cyclones on Saturday and sweeping the Tigers on Sunday.

K-State was led in doubles play by Tamar Kvaratskhelia and Katka Kudlackova, who managed a 3-2 mark, with two losses coming against Arkansas teams. The team of Fernanda Da Valle and Viviana Yrureta played together for two days, winning two of three matches.

Kvaratskhelia and Kudlackova were both 3-0 in singles play. Kvaratskhelia played in the No. 2 position all weekend while Kudlackova started the weekend as the fifth-position player but moved up to No. 3 for the Saturday and Sunday matches. No. 1 player Jessica Simosa put together a record of 2-1, losing only to Arkansas' Aurelija Miseviciute.

Bietau said the weekend was good for getting some experience under the team's belt while allowing his players to see what they have early in the season.

"I felt like we got things going in the right direction," Bietau said. "We had a couple good weeks of practice coming into the weekend, and it carried over into the competition."

Bietau said he was pleased with how the team responded to the first competition of the season.

"They were competitive and coachable, and we had a solid start for the year," Bietau said.

The Wildcats return to competition Friday at the Indiana Hoosier Classic in Bloomington, Ind. Bietau said he hopes Olga Klimova will return to play after battling sickness and recovering from a knee injury.

K-STATE, 54 | NORTH TEXAS, 7

Busting loose

Offense racks up 658 total yards of offense

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Without the services of the nation's leading rusher, K-State dismantled North Texas Saturday 54-7 on the strength of 169 yards rushing from its backup running back.

Redshirt-freshman Parrish Fisher started in place of junior Thomas Clayton, who is averaging 164.5 yard per game to lead the nation but was held because of unresolved legal issues stemming from his run-in with a university parking employee.

Fisher responded to his first start as a Wildcat – the first time a freshman has started at running back in coach Bill Snyder's 17 seasons – by producing the best game by a freshman running back in school history.

"It's good to get the confidence up," Fisher said. "The first couple of runs you get in there, you hit it straight; you hit it hard. You start to see what the defense is doing more and you start to see what holes are going to develop. Once you do that, you start getting into a rhythm."

Not to be outdone, quarterback Allen Webb turned in a career day of his own, throwing for 256 yards. Webb's previous high was 140 yards at Colorado on Nov. 11, 2004. Webb also threw for two touchdowns and ran for 22 yards.

Webb said he was pleased with his game, other than an interception he threw in the endzone at the end of the first half.

"I think I had a pretty good day," Webb said. "I had a lot of fun out there. Too bad I had that interception. I was probably trying to do too much, but I had a pretty good day."

In all, the Wildcats (3-0) rolled up a school-record 658 yards of total offense on the Mean Green (1-2). The 54 points were the most K-State has scored since a 55-14 win over McNeese State in 2003.

On Sunday, Snyder said after reviewing the film that the K-State offense was efficient for most of the game.

"We played well a good portion of the time in all facets of the game," Snyder said on Sunday. "There are things that need to get cleaned up."

The K-State defense smothered the North Texas offense, holding the Mean Green to less than 100 yards of total offense before running back Jamario Thomas reeled off a 39-yard run

GLF | Americans send Nicklaus off a winner

GAINESVILLE, Va. — Fred Couples delivered another magical moment. Chris DiMarco provided the clinching point with a dramatic birdie. Best of all, the Americans sent captain Jack Nicklaus into retirement as a winner.

Right when it looked like the Presidents Cup might end in another tie, DiMarco holed a 15-foot putt on the 18th hole to outlast Stuart Appleby for a 1-up victory Sunday, giving the Americans an 18 1/2-15 1/2 victory at Robert Trent Jones Golf Club and keeping their record perfect on home soil.

DiMarco knew it was good in the final few feet, and he charged toward the cup and then into the arms of Nicklaus.

Volleyball team swept in 1st loss to Missouri Tigers since 2000

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the past 11 years, K-State's volleyball team has dominated its series against Missouri, winning every match but two.

Saturday night, however, the Tigers gave the Wildcats a taste of their own medicine.

Missouri (10-0, 4-0) lived up to its No. 8 ranking by sweeping the 17th-ranked Wildcats (11-2, 2-1) in three games (30-19, 30-20, 30-26) in front of the second largest crowd ever (2,438) at the Hearnes Center in Columbia, Mo.

It was the Wildcats' first loss to Missouri since Sept. 30, 2000 – a year before Suzie Fritz took over as K-State's head coach. The fifth-ranked Minnesota Golden Gophers were the only other team to beat the Wildcats this season.

Fritz said Missouri was simply too experienced and talented for her young team.

"Missouri is extremely efficient and a very talented team, and probably the best serving team we've played thus far," Fritz said. "And it was not just one or two of them; all of them hit the ball well."

K-State did not lead until the first point of game three. The lead, however, didn't last long, as the Tigers quickly tied the game at 4-4.

Missouri then broke away in game three with a 10-2 surge to stretch its lead to 20-10, but the Wildcats answered with a 10-1 run of their own to come within a point, 21-20. K-State kept the game close, but to no avail, losing 30-27.

In game one, Missouri built an 11-point lead and never looked back, winning 30-19.

Senior All-Conference setter Lindsey Hunter, a former K-State recruit, torched the Wildcats in game two with her assists and service aces. Despite a late 5-0 Wildcat run, the Tigers won the game 30-20.

Missouri, who led the Big 12 with 18.36 kills per game entering Saturday, tallied 36 kills through two games for a .470 hitting percentage, while K-State garnered 26 kills for a .194 hitting percentage.

Coach Fritz said the Wildcats were not prepared for the Tigers' attack.

"In games one and two, we were not prepared for the challenges that we faced," Fritz said. "In game three, we were less concerned about what was happening on their side of the net, and we finally started to play volleyball."

K-State finished the match with 41 kills, a .152 hitting percentage and 37 assists.

Students enrich college experience with classic books

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since the book market has risen in the past few decades, more books are on the shelves. It can be difficult for students to browse through their options and find good books to read, so here is a list of the most popular, as well as lesser-known books.

Most students know of the popular "Harry Potter" series by J.K. Rowling. Six of the seven books have been released and have created a "Harry Potter" craze around the planet.

It may be difficult to explain why, the books are so popular. Students might have to read at least one or two of them to understand what has everyone so enthralled.

Another series of books students could read is the "Chronicles of Narnia," which is a classic children's series by C.S. Lewis. "The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" is the best known of the books.

Although it's classified as a children's book, "The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" is worthy of a read by college students, who might be better able to understand the symbolism in this book and throughout the series.

The film version "Chronicles of Narnia" by Disney will hit theaters Dec. 9.

That's not to say that college students should only read what's popular. "On Bullshit," by Harry G. Frankfurt, is a book students might find entertaining. It's about the philosophy of bullshit in contemporary society.

"You wouldn't think anybody would be able to come up with a philosophical viewpoint on bullshit, but it's very funny," Katherine Clymer, senior in art, said.

Larry Rodgers, associate dean of arts and sciences, recommended "The Things They Carried" by Tim O'Brien. This book was a finalist for the 1990 Pulitzer Prize and for the National Book Critics Circle Award.

"The Things They Carried" is a memoir, novel and short story collection. One of the short stories is named, like the book, "The Things They Carried." It's a story of a group of soldiers in Vietnam and tells a tale through the various objects they carried with them. It is simple, yet very moving.

Rodgers recommended reading "1491: New Revelations of the Americas Before Columbus" by Charles C. Mann, and "Their Eyes Were Watching God" by Zora Neale Hurston.

"[I recommend] anything by Tom Robbins because college students especially will appreciate his wit and irony." Karna Pearson, senior in dietetics, said.

Tom Robbins' books include "Wild Ducks Flying Backward, Jitterbug Perfume and Still Life with Woodpecker."

Elizabeth Dodd, professor and director of K-State's creative writing program, said every college student should read Henry David Thoreau's "Walden."

"It's about figuring out what you believe in and how you want to live, and that's what I think college is really all about."

Dodd said students should also read at least one novel by Toni Morrison.

"[Morrison's] view of how race is a part of our national psyche is so complicated and allows you to feel the depth of otherness," Dodd said.

Celebrity marriages that stay out of spotlight stay together

Although the Hollywood norm is to marry often and then divorce, there are some celebrity romances that seem to have a shot at making it.

AMY BOLTON

Unlike last week's couples who are destined to fail, the celebrities who make their marriages last keep their relationships out of the public eye as much as possible. They have similar interests and they share beliefs and values. They don't share every detail of their lives with the media, and minuscule day-to-day events in their lives are not accompanied by a press release. Most importantly, they knew each other for more than a few months before getting married.

Tim Robbins and Susan Sarandon

These Academy Award winners met on the set of "Bull Durham" (1988). Technically, they can't get divorced since they're not married, but clearly they're both invested in the relationship. They've had two children together (Sarandon has a daughter from a previous marriage) and they don't worry when people say they should get married to be a good influence on their children – their relationship works for them. Robbins and Sarandon also share a passion for politics.

They are both very outspoken liberals, and that common interest gives them something to care about and do together. (www.celebritywonder.com)

Madonna and Guy Ritchie

When the once-crazy Material Girl decided to settle down and get married (again), she didn't choose a wild rocker or a famous actor who would be as well known as her (Madonna's first marriage, to actor Sean Penn, ended in 1989.) She married unknown British director Guy Ritchie in December 2000, just a few months after giving birth to their son Rocco.

Madonna, Guy and Rocco, along with Madonna's daughter Lourdes, live a relatively quiet life in England. His non-celebrity status is a good contrast to her international superstar persona, and keeping a low profile and staying out of the spotlight has allowed their marriage to work. (www.vh1.com).

Sarah Michelle Gellar and Freddie Prinze, Jr.

Gellar and Prinze met on the set of "I Know What You Did Last Summer." They did not start dating then, and Prinze went on to star in teen hits like "She's All That," "Summer Catch" and "I Still Know What You Did Last Summer" (Geller's character didn't make it to the sequel.)

Gellar stared in "Cruel Intentions" and "Scream 2" but is best known for playing Buffy on the TV show "Buffy the Vampire Slayer." Eventually the pair started dating, and after getting engaged in 2001, they tied the knot in September 2002. They went on to star in "Scooby Doo" (2002) and "Scooby Doo 2" (2004) together. (www.celebritywonder.com).

Both Prinze and Gellar were extremely popular, but they didn't let their celebrity status go to their heads.

They kept their relationship low-profile, denying the relationship for a while before going public. These two could have exploited their relationship by going to every red carpet event together and gaining exposure.

Instead, they kept their relationship private, as it should be, and are now in the early stages of a successful Hollywood marriage.

BENEFIT CONCERT

J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight local bands will perform over three nights in three different bars for the Manhattan Music Coalition benefit concert for Hurricane Katrina.

T-shirt sales employee at Ballard's Sporting Goods and assistant manager at O'Malley's Clint Hutchens said he thought of doing a benefit concert when concert organizer, Trapper Edwards, talked to him about getting T-shirts done for the MMC benefit concert.

"Actually I was doing booking in O'Malley's and was thinking of something like this," Hutchens said. "I started working at Ballard's when Trapper came in and was talking about having a concert at PJ's and Pat's.

"So, we just thought about doing it all together and make it all happen together."

Edwards said the idea to have a benefit concert came to him after all of the coverage.

"We kept seeing images on the news," he said. "And I was just in New Orleans two summers ago on tour. And Bro Pemberton's brother lost a house down there and we just wish we could help out."

Edwards said he organized a fund through the Salvation Army specifically for Hurricane Katrina relief.

PJ's Bar will charge $3 at the door, and the other two bars will accept donations at the door, Edwards said. T-shirts will be for sale each night, and the door and shirt proceeds will go to the fund.

Several local businesses have contributed to the effort, he said. Sisters of Sound Music, Ballard's Sporting Goods and Auntie Mae's Parlor are three businesses that have donated money.

Bar manager at Pat's Blue Rib'N Bar-b-que, Phil Henke, said the shows will be fun for concert goers and they will be helping hurricane victims.

"We'll have a couple of bands coming to Pat's," Henke said. "They're very talented musicians and it'll be a good show. It'll be a good night for a good cause."

get on the field Saturday.

"Coach Snyder came over and said, 'Get out there, let's go,'" Fisher said. "I knew it was going to be early, so I kind of expected it, but when they actually gave me the go-ahead and I was actually in there, I told myself, 'It's time to go.'"

Not only was Fisher a major part of the running game for the Wildcats, out-gaining the North Texas tandem of Patrick Cobbs and Jamario Thomas, the last two national rushing champions, by 73 yards, he also contributed as a receiver.

A 46-yard reception from Allen Webb led to senior Carlos Alsup's first career touchdown, which gave K-State a 10-0 lead in the second quarter.

"Throughout camp, and throughout spring ball, I've always been a big supporter of Parrish," offensive lineman and Jeromey Clary said. "He's a great running back and I think he does great things."

On Sunday, Snyder said Clayton will be available for this weeks Big 12 Conference opener at Oklahoma, but the Wildcats feel comfortable with Fisher or whoever is carrying the load at running back.

"He's (Fisher) a good back, just like I've told everyone from day one," senior fullback and team captain Victor Mann said. "No matter who we have back there, they're going to get the job done, and P. Fish, he showed everyone he can get in there and tote the rock."

Redshirt freshman running back Parrish Fisher fights off North Texas' defender Roderick Cotton during the second half Saturday at KSU Stadium. Fisher, who started in place of Thomas Clayton, rushed for 169 yards on 21 carries to help the Wildcats to a 54-7 win over the Mean Green.

cats was senior outside hitter Agata Rezende, who led the team with 15 kills and added 4 block assists.

K-State associate coach Jeff Grove said nothing came easy for the Wildcats, and their serving and attacking errors hurt them.

"You've got to earn points," Grove said. "You can't just give away points in this league."

K-State's schedule remains tough, as the Wildcats will face three more Top 25 teams during the next week and a half.

The Wildcats' next challenge will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday against No. 23-ranked Texas at Ahearn Field House.

Professor named master metalsmith

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elliot Pujol, professor of art, has been named the 2005 Master Metalsmith by the National Ornamental Metal Museum in Memphis, Tenn.

Each year, the museum presents a one-person retrospective of the work by an American Metal Artist who is an acknowledged master. A collection of his work will be displayed in the museum from late September through early November.

Pujol is best known for his work with copper. He fashions wall hangings, bowls, baskets and, once a year, jewelry for his wife.

"Copper is inexpensive, readily available and easily malleable," he said. "The biggest feature is that you can color copper beautiful colors. I want color in my work."

The museum will feature three decades of Pujol's work, from his first pieces to the most recent, finished just this summer. His pieces have been shown in 40 states, Africa, Europe, Canada and Mexico and are displayed in many museums, including the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

At most exhibitions, Pujol sponsors workshops over tubing, forming and the coloring of metal.

"My teaching doesn't stop here at K-State," he said.

Pujol has been a professor at K-State since 1973. He earned a bachelor's and master degrees from Southern Illinois University. Before coming to K-State, he taught at the Tyler School of Art at Temple University.

He started working with metal by accident, he said. Originally, Pujol was a theater major and needed props for an upcoming production. He took a jewelry class so he could make the props and found that he enjoyed metal production.

"I like to work with my hands and making things is a pleasure," Pujol said.

He started making jewelry and then things got bigger. He has been working with metal ever since.

"Most of my ideas come from nature," he said. "I like to garden. You see the gourds, pumpkins, melons. I get lots of ideas from the garden and landscape."

He said his passion for teaching is just as strong as his passion for his artwork. He also said his job is wonderful because he can teach and research at the same time. Pujol said he can be a role model for his students because they see how much he works on his pieces every day.

"It's so rewarding to keep learning every day and challenging myself and my students," Pujol said. "I'm so proud of my former students who are now also teaching and own successful businesses."

DEDICATION | University's origins remembered

the school's first teacher, Julia Bailey.

Their granddaughter, Abbie Marlatt, professor emeritus from the University of Kentucky, unveiled the original marker in 1926.

She returned Friday to unveil the new memorial. Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, associate professor in history, who was involved in the memorial's redesign, likened Abbie Marlatt's presence to that of Halley's Comet.

After the speeches were given inside, the audience went outside to watch Abbie Marlatt tug the black sheets from each piece of rock.

First she removed the original stone, which had been cleaned up for its new home. O'Brien cleared up some confusion about the stone's origins and explained that it was made of Sioux quartzite from South Dakota.

"We should import more of it because some of it is purple," she said afterward.

Marlatt then uncovered the newer memorial, with a smooth limestone top and a limestone and concrete base similar in construction to many campus buildings. The new memorial features portraits of Denison, Goodnow, Marlatt and Bailey, information about the college, and an informational audio recording.

The Rev. Jim Reed of Manhattan's First United Methodist Church, Kansas Board of Regents member Nelson Galle, and K-State President Jon Wefald also spoke at the dedication.

PAGAN | Handfasting performed as commitment paganism and more mainstream religions.

"Religions are here for a reason," she said. "They are patterns upon which we can build."

One of the most anticipated events at Pagan Pride Day was the handfasting of Linda McQueary and Judy Smith.

Handfasting is a pagan ceremony that resembles marriage. Two people bind themselves together with a symbolic braided rope. The rope may remain on for the duration of the ceremony or longer, depending on the participants.

In ancient Celtic ceremonies the braided rope bound the couple for up to a year, but that is no longer feasible, Bethany Dunnam, event coordinator, said.

Ceremony attendees stood in a circle around the couple being bound.

An ordained minister of the Church of Universal Humanism, William Leslie, known in the Pagan community as Drogan, performed the ceremony.

The couple was blessed with the traditional aspects of the Pagan religion, which include Earth, Fire, Air and Water.

The couple has known each other for 17 months. Neither is Pagan, but both are close friends of Leslie, and he asked to perform the ceremony for them.

"I just do it for special people," Leslie said.

The couple met in Salina, Kan., when McQueary was working for a writer. Smith went to Salina for books and ended up staying longer than she had anticipated.

"She thought I was cute and I thought she was cute," McQueary said.

When Smith told her daughter of her intention to marry McQueary, her daughter told her that she couldn't because it was illegal.

"Just because it's not legal, doesn't mean it's not a commitment," Smith said.

One of the groups' concerns was the lack of non-Pagan attendees at the event. Pagans don't preach to others or try to convert them, so meeting non-Pagans telling them about the religion is difficult, Disa said.

"Why aren't Christian groups coming to this, and why aren't Pagan groups going to see churches?" said Sarah Lawver, senior in philosophy and president of the K-State Alliance for the Understanding of Religious Alternatives.

FOOTBALL | Wildcat defense allows only 161 total yards of offense late in the fourth quarter.

North Texas finished with 161 total yards, which was a source of pride for the K-State defense following the game.

"Before the game, we all got excited, and we haven't done that as a defense in a long time – everybody getting excited to play every single play," junior defensive tackle Quintin Echols said. "Don't get me wrong, we still have to get a lot better, but I think this was our best game so far."

The Wildcats' defensive performance was enough to vault K-State to No. 9 in the nation in total defense, giving up an average of 244.3 yards per game.

Next up for the Wildcats is defending Big 12-Champion Oklahoma in Norman, Okla.

The Sooners have struggled to a 1-2 record this season, with loses to TCU at home and at UCLA.

Oklahoma features running back Adrian Peterson, the 2004 Heisman Trophy runner-up, who has been bottled up in Oklahoma's two losses for an average of 60.5 yards.

Snyder said there are similarities between Oklahoma this year and K-State in 2004, when Darren Sproles was the primary threat on offense for the then defending Big 12-Champion Wildcats, but the Sooners are better off this year than K-State was last year.

"I hadn't even thought about it that way, but that's an interesting comparison," Snyder said. "Maybe those are the pieces of comparative analysis. I think it probably stops there. I'm pretty certain they're not going to be as bad as we were a year ago."

Columbia professor to address civil rights in current times

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A genius will be at K-State on Thursday.

Patricia J. Williams, professor at Columbia University School of Law and recipient of the MacArthur Foundation "genius" grant, will deliver a Lou Douglas lecture titled "Civil Rights in an Era of Social Wrongs."

"It's important for students to have an opportunity to hear from internationally known people," Olivia Collins, coordinator of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, said. "It enhances what they're already learning in the classroom."

Williams will address complex societal problems, Jane Rowlett, director of Academic Services and chair of the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series, said.

"She's going to talk on societal research and issues, and how those societal wrongs have affected our climate of race and gender," Rowlett said.

In the format of all Lou Douglas lectures, Williams will remain on stage after the lecture for an unscripted question and answer session with the audience. A book signing will follow.

Williams, educated at Wellesley College and Harvard Law School, has taught at Columbia since 1991. Prior to joining the faculty at Columbia, Williams taught at three other universities. Before teaching, she practiced law as a deputy city attorney in Los Angeles and as a staff lawyer for the Western Center on Law and Poverty.

"She can give good insight to how some of the traditional legal documents have dealt with issues of diversity as it applies to the law," Rowlett said.

Williams is also an author. John Fliter, associate professor in political science, said Williams has written a lot on race and family relations.

"She's been really active in civil rights and women's issues, writing from an aggressive perspective," Fliter said.

The lecture is sponsored jointly by the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series and the University Distinguished Lecturers Committee.

"Since she's a legal scholar and speaks on civil rights, it seemed like a good fit for both our lecture series (Lou Douglas and Dorothy L. Thompson) so we partnered to bring her to campus," Collins said.

Williams' lecture is part Community Cultural Harmony Week, a week that aims to bridge diversity gaps.

"Her background and her area of concentration fit well into the racial-ethnic harmony week," Rowlett said.

Pot policy reformers seek help

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The largest marijuana policy reform organization in the United States is asking greek systems across the country to get involved in marijuana law reform, including those at K-State.

Marijuana Policy Project Foundation explains how college students arrested for possession of marijuana lose financial aid, thus damaging careers and futures "for no good reason."

That is why the organization is asking fraternities and sororities across the country to select Marijuana Policy Project Foundation as a philanthropy project this year.

Bruce Mirken, director of communications for Marijuana Policy Project Foundation, said current marijuana laws are harmful and destructive. The organization is seeking help from fraternities and sororities because their members are directly affected.

"The laws hurt more peoples' lives than help them," he said. "It's crazy and it needs to change."

Mirken said the marijuana-related philanthropy is a tax-deductible educational organization, like other charitable organizations.

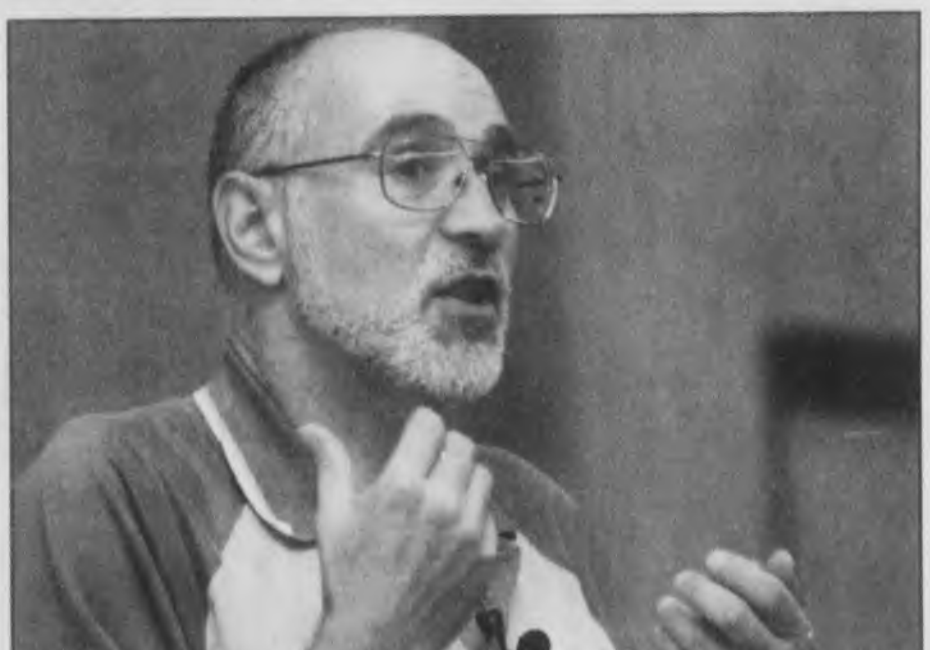
While Marijuana Policy Project Foundation is seeking support from the greek system, several K-State fraternities and sororities do not plan to get involved.

Molly Thimesch, philanthropy chair for Chi Omega and junior in public relations, said her sorority has other priorities and does not support the Marijuana Policy Project Foundation.

"Chi Omega is more interested in helping the less fortunate than helping ourselves in that aspect," she said. "If our fellow college students break the law, it's their fault."

Mike Hudson, philanthropy chair for Delta Tau Delta and senior in psychology, said Delt is also not planning involvement.

"It seems like it would be hard to say you are donating to them," Hudson said. "It seems a lot better to donate to local charities and more traditional philanthropy events."



Paranormal presence

RIGHT: Responding to students during a post-presentation question-and-answer session, John Zaffis, paranormal investigator, explains various events that have occurred during his research. Zaffis spoke to group of students in the K-State Student Union ballroom about exorcisms, poltergeists, spirits and many other paranormal activities.

Purple Masque searched for supernatural

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Student Union Ballroom was crowded Monday night as about 150 students gathered to hear John Zaffis, paranormal investigator, share his experiences with the supernatural.

"I thought it would be interesting," Ryan Murry, freshman in modern languages, said. "I want to see a ghost."

The lecture began at 9:30 p.m. and was followed by an on-campus ghost hunt at 11:30. The ghost hunt was open to 75 students.

"When I was about 15, I saw the spirit of my grandfather," he said. "And that was when I said, 'Whoa, there's got to be something to this stuff.' After that, I started investigating and poking into this stuff."

Zaffis has been researching the paranormal for 32 years. He has spent the past three years traveling the country, delivering lectures to students at various universities.

He has also authored a book, "Shadows of the Dark," and is currently working on four more, the first of which is expected to be in bookstores next spring.

The book is about the John Zaffis Paranormal Museum, which is located in Stratford, Conn. The museum contains hundreds of artifacts Zaffis has collected from the scenes of various, supposed hauntings.

"Am I psychic? No," he said. "But can I feel and sense things after doing this for so long? Yes."

This was Zaffis' first visit to K-State, and he did not know anything about any of the locations commonly believed to be haunted, such as Purple Masque Theatre, where the ghost hunt began.

"I try not to know anything beforehand," he said. "Then it's tainted."

After investigating the Purple Masque for paranormal activity, Zaffis said he felt the presence of an aggressive spirit named Nigel. Zaffis also said this spirit had something to do with farming and was from a time period before East Stadium was constructed.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The number of minority students enrolled at K-State increased this fall, according to 20th day enrollment numbers released by the Office of the Registrar last week.

Provost Duane Nellis said he wasn't surprised minority enrollment increased.

"It is certainly a priority for the university to have diversity," he said. "We have made a concerted effort to increase the amount of students from different backgrounds."

Along with the increase in minority students, K-State enrollment overall reached an all-time high of 23,182 students. However, that increase is only 30 more students than last year's fall enrollment numbers. Enrollment increased by more than 2,500 students between fall 2003 and fall 2004.

Nellis said the smaller increase in enrollment is because there are fewer students in Kansas high schools.

"Enrollment this year is actually more than we were hoping for," he said. "The number of Kansas high school students is declining because Kansas has an aging population."

Not all areas of enrollment are on the rise. The number of international students decreased by 70.

"That reflects the challenges we face post 9/11," Nellis said. "There are a lot of federal regulations to be followed that make it tougher to be an international student."

Student Body President Michael Burns said recruiting international students is still a priority despite the decrease in international enrollment.

"We really try to take care of the international students once they arrive at K-State," Burns said. "They are beginning to fund a position that will purely work on making sure the paperwork is processed and making sure our international students remain up-to-date on what is needed."

Alumni Association sponsors high school visitation night

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN
Explaining the schedule for the rest of the evening, Blair Reynolds, senior in political science and Student Alumni Board member, interacts with his group of high school juniors at "Just for Juniors."

Manhattan and surrounding area high school juniors gathered at the K-State Alumni Center Monday night with their parents. The event is called "Just for Juniors," and has been an annual event for several years. About 30 juniors attended this year.

The Alumni Association sponsors "Just for Juniors" events at several locations throughout the year, said Andrea Bryant, associate director of alumni programs.

"It is unique that this event is sponsored by the alumni center," Bryant said. "We have a great relationship with the admissions department, and together we are able to do this."

The evening began at 6:30 p.m. with what Bryant called "career mingling," where juniors were able to hear about different majors. Tables were set up with information and representing alumni from several degree programs.

Alex Marfise, a junior from Hope, Kan., is not positive he will attend K-State, but knows he wants to pursue sports medicine.

"I came just to find out more about K-State, to check into things," he said.

Prospective students were also entered into a drawing for a $100 scholarship. The winner was Garen Gideon from Wabaunsee county, Kan.

Bryant said the event is always a definite success.

"It's a great opportunity for high school juniors and their parents to find out more about K-State," Bryant said.

Date auction to benefit Katrina victims

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For some, finding a date in Manhattan might be a challenge.

However, finding a date tonight might be as easy as a simple bid.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, 1213 Moro St., is having a date auction to benefit Hurricane Katrina victims.

The auction begins at 8 p.m., with more than 20 Last Chance employees participating in the event. Peter Anderson, owner of Last Chance, said the bar will also auction other items, including Last Chance T-shirts, rent-free use of its facilities and other miscellaneous items.

Anderson said Last Chance waitresses thought of the date auction event during the summer.

"We never initially got around to it," he said. "But when Katrina hit, we finally decided to go through with it – it was good for us to come together."

He said two of the waitresses spearheading the event have worked extremely hard, trying to tie in the campus community.

Ulala Stömberg, senior in psychology, is one of the waitresses coordinating the event.

"After telling people who is benefiting from the auction – Katrina victims – we are getting people to do things they typically wouldn't do," she said. "People are asking me, left and right, if they can participate in the auction."

Stömberg said she wants people to drop by Last Chance for the fundraiser.

"There are thousands of students and thousands of people in Manhattan," she said. "If we could get people out here and donate, that would be extraordinary."

Both Anderson and Stömberg said they are motivated for the event.

Stömberg said she encourages any students looking for a fun evening to drop by Last Chance to get the opportunity to share more than a bottle of beer.

"Rusty's Last Chance isn't all about drinking," she said. "Most people don't correlate us with good causes, but we're wanting to change that. Anyone from any aspect, whether a hard-core drinker or someone who enjoys a good hamburger, will enjoy the date auction event itself."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Project should not be based on stereotypes

The Marijuana Policy Project Foundation is trying to raise money by asking greek organizations to select its cause as a philanthropy project.

The foundation is asking fraternities and sororities to support it based on stereotypes that are common among those who are not familiar with greek life.

Assuming that greek students are affected by marijuana possession laws more than other students, and then asking for their hard-raised philanthropy money, is nothing short of outrageous.

Members of greek organizations are no more likely to support marijuana policy reform than the average student. Furthermore, nationally recognized greek houses have philanthropies that are supported by chapters across the country.

While greeks often support local organizations through volunteer hours and fundraisers, there are criteria that these groups must meet before chapters can donate time and money.

Marijuana is illegal. If you choose to smoke pot, you are choosing to deal with the consequences of being caught. This includes arrest, jail time, community service hours or loss of financial aid.

K-State fraternities and sororities have higher priorities than giving their philanthropy dollars to drug policy reform.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

I pledge allegiance

One nation, standing with or without the pledge to God

JONAS HOGG

Amendment I – "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Seems logical enough – leaving people to establish their own beliefs, or lack thereof, without fear of the state impinging on the most precious of all freedoms, the freedom of thought.

However, religion does not solely belong in the realm of the divine. For many, the symbols of America become sacred, deserving of all the reverence of religious icons. Pay attention the next time a flag is lowered if you have doubt.

If it is possible for patriotism and religion to bleed into each other, how is it possible to shun one while welcoming the other? But, snarling ultra-nationalists impose, daily, a ritual upon our children that is no less than a prayer to an earthbound power.

"I pledge allegiance, to the flag," but why?

There is a large argument among bleary-eyed flag wavers that patriotism should be a compulsory event taught by public schools. (Perhaps this makes sense, as our public schools have shied away from teaching other radical subjects such as "English" and "math," so they might as well teach something.)

It has long been the role of the school system to send forth legions of unquestioning, obedient patriots. Only recently has the merit of this been questioned, as many students and their parents begin to object to ritualized recitation declaring loyalty to something that is nothing more than thread and dye.

Much like a suppository, trying to force something unwanted into someone's psyche generally backfires with messy consequences. Recitation does not equate to practice and belief. For two and a half years in Catholic School, I suffered daily reporting of the Lord's Prayer, the Hail Mary, and the Apostle's Creed.

Lo and behold, I exist a heathen to this glorious, blasphemous day.

Patriotism, like religion, is not a concept that can be drilled in if it is to be substantive. Compelling people to stand and place one hand on their hearts does not make good patriots as much as it makes doddering little pseudo-citizens. The true patriot forms beliefs from personal reflection and ideals – not some ritualistic hokey-pokey performed at the beginning of class.

The United States was a thriving, moral country long before Francis Bellamy first cooked up the pledge in 1892. He dictated that it was to be recited with the right arm and palm extended up and away from the body. Revel in the irony that the world's premier capitalist country recites holy words cobbled together by a socialist. The subject of our current controversy, "under God," wasn't snuck in until 1954.

The idea that the country existed for more than 100 years sans pledge, and another 50 years without "under God," should be evidence enough that extracting it from the public domain would not cause the United States to collapse into an orgy of violence, depravity and reality TV.

Some believe a strong, staunchly Christian country would be the best way to assure a moral state; Tomás de Torquemada, leader of the strong, staunchly-Christian Spanish Inquisition was unavailable for comment. Undoubtedly, the man who was described as "the light of Spain, the savior of his country" would be all for state-sponsored religious/patriotic parrotry.

Liberty rests in the people, it is not lent to us by Congress and is not represented in the flag. I do not owe a flag or a country anything simply by matter of being born within it's boundaries. The glorious ideals of liberty set forth in the Constitution cannot be contained by flags or lines on a map.

The founding fathers must be spinning in their graves when the children of the revolution are herded together to mutter jingoistic oaths to a limp piece of fabric, with or without deital reference.

Under God necessary, religion, morality pillars of democracy

KODY COOPER

Under God? Outrageous! What blatant mixture of church and state.

All ye secularist liberal radicals: fear not – your prayers to the beast of moral relativism for deliverance from the theocratic coup d'état of America have not gone unheard. Good thing you prayed in Darwin's name. As our evolutionary savior said in the Gospel of Charles: "Whatever ye ask, asketh in my name, and it shall be naturally selected unto you."

Answering these cries, the beast has sent his false prophet, Michael Newdow, to accomplish his wicked ends under the guise of "separation of church and state."

Has anyone ever actually read the first amendment? "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion."

Principally, the First Amendment outlaws any such establishment of a "Church of America."

Moreover, notice the words respecting an establishment. The original intent of the establishment clause was to prevent Congress from tampering with established churches within individual states. Verily, nine of 13 colonies had state-sponsored churches and sought to restrict federal mingling in state business.

The "separation of church and state" claim is just a deceptive veil for the false prophet's true motives: the erosion of traditional morality through disestablishment of religion and the abolition of God in America.

After snapping crosses off war memorials, gagging school prayer, bulldozing nativity scenes and jack hammering the 10 commandments, "under God" is just the next proverbial domino.

What that atheistic bigot Newdow and his demented disciples don't realize is freedom doesn't function without religious morality.

In a free and open society, citizens can choose any degree of insane decadence or civil righteousness. Religion exhorts the latter.

Can you imagine a free population divorced from a fear of God? I can – it's called hell.

Why else would George Washington deem religion and morality the two great pillars of liberty? He knew that without this pocket pair, democracy would fold.

The Marxist Newdowians are imprudent not to recognize the benefits of civil religion.

Even if all this God stuff really is a foolish opiate, why would they decry its dissemination? Isn't a God-fearing society that much more orderly and law biding? Wouldn't society benefit more from people who seek to selflessly serve and love their neighbors?

Obviously it's more important to these psychotic sacks of excrement to atheisticize everyone. Only then can they redefine morality to mean hyper-tolerance. That's what it's really all about – the rabid fear of some authority judging profligate behavior. The only way to justify immorality is to kill the judge that defines it.

The false prophet and his flock's hatred of the divine is rivaled only by their hatred of the flag. They want to rip the flag to pieces and use the stars and stripes as toilet paper to wipe. They abhor this symbol of "warmongering" and "oppression."

Of course, if by "warmongering" they mean "American sons and daughters pouring out their blood to protect freedom," and, if by "oppression" they mean, "liberating more peoples than any other nation in history," then I guess they have a point.

Once the Orwellian degenerates have abolished God and flushed old glory, your child will recite the new and improved Pledge of Allegiance:

"I pledge allegiance to moral relativism and the banner
of the United Nations
And to the immorality for which they stand,
One world government, under Darwin,
Incontinent,
With Hyper-tolerance and Partial-Birth Abortions for all."

Aww, I'd love a Nobel Peace Prize. Heck, I'd kill for one of those things.

I wonder if I have enough rep points at KSU to get an epic wildcat mount, so I don't have to walk to class.

To the girl I sit next to in history: I think you are beautiful.

Weren't the other two people in the "remembering beginnings photo" important enough to name?

Don't blame me, I didn't vote.

Could the Collegian please restrain from writing any articles on race and diversity? Because it's clear — you're just like your mentor George Bush, you don't care about black people.

So, at the Yoga I session, the instructor told me personally to come to her Yoga IV session. Last time I checked there were only session's one through three. Is she just yanking my chain? Or is that what she wants to do?

You trying to say Jesus Christ can't hit a curve-ball?

Does it ever get any easier? Does the pain ever lessen? Or are we destined to follow a pattern of berating one another until the death of every living creature is on our hands?

I just saw some guy pulling a skateboard, and behind it, on a rope, was a milk jug full of milk.

I just heard a Varney's commercial saying they had the widest selection of K-State clothes in the world. That's shocking.

Ag Econ 120 yesterday felt like a damn swamp. I was tempted to sit in class in the nude.

I was doing homework and I thought of this question: Was "Truly, Madly, Deeply" by Savage Garden or "Tubthumping (I Get Knocked Down)" by Chumbawamba the most overplayed song in 1997? Just curious...or maybe it's "Mmmbop" by Hanson. I can't decide.

Just so everyone knows — the new Mexican restaurant charges $1.80 for water.

To the dude that drives the red truck and likes to follow girls while they run — watch your back.

Kappa Delta plus hot tub equals classy.

Who's that DJ playing on 91.9 Saturday morning at 2 a.m.? You rock dude. Right on, keep it on dude!

When girls say, 'I'm not like other girls,' that makes me want to vomit on a kitten.

Hello? Hello?

Ummmmm... ummmmm... cats and dogs sitting in a tree, tying bows, making new friends.

Looks like you had a little problem with the crossword puzzle on Monday. Doesn't matter, still finished it, no big deal.

We tore the Panda Express coupons out of the Collegians. Suckers.

Students often juggle classes and work, but have little time in between for a nutritious meal. Smoothies and fitness shakes can be a fast and tasty way to avoid skipping a meal.

However, be careful when choosing a smoothie. Some can be loaded with sugar and chemicals, which defeats the whole purpose of the blended fruit and vegetable concoction.

Although it is nice to pick up a smoothie at the mall, another option is a smoothie that comes packaged as a powder. The packaged smoothie container has nutritional information on it, so customers know exactly what they are drinking. These smoothies are made at home in the blender and are usually less expensive.

Abby Heraud, sophomore in modern languages, said she averages one smoothie a week. She said she would drink them more often if they tasted good, were healthy, and weren't too expensive.

Fast facts

Smoothie ingredients

Smoothie 1:

2/3 cup	strawberries
12 oz.	chilled grape juice
8 oz.	fat-free yogurt
2	bananas, chilled
1 tablespoon	honey

Smoothie 2:

1 cup	cranberry-blackberry juice
1/2	banana
6 oz.	key lime or lemon-flavored yogurt
3/4 cup	frozen raspberries
1 cup	crushed ice

"I do enough things that are bad for my body, so I try to compensate," Heraud said.

Rose Anderson, certified nutritionist and owner of Professional Nutrition Center, which is located across from Wal-Mart, said customers drink smoothies for more than convenience. Customers are looking for a healthy way to take in proteins and stay fit.

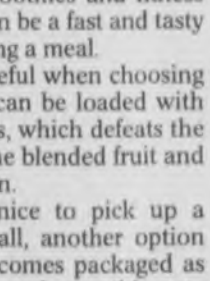
"It also helps with sugar cravings," Anderson said.

Smoothies are beneficial not only as a meal replacement, but also as a replacement for an afternoon snack, she said.

Anderson counsels her customers in their nutrition needs.

"The recommended daily allowances have been changed 10 times," Anderson said.

Food doesn't have the same nutritional value today as it did several years ago. The Recommended Dietary Allowances for fruits and vegetables continue to rise, but people don't get the same nutrition from their food as they once did.



Many health-conscious people are now choosing to supplement their diet. One of the easiest ways to increase fruit, vegetables and protein into a busy schedule is with a nutritious smoothie.

Although many smoothie blends are available, students should avoid those that contain much sugar. Stevia is a natural sweetener that is becoming a more common sugar substitute, even in smoothie shakes. It is found in nutrition stores.

Keep in mind when making fruit smoothies from scratch, the best ingredients are fresh or freshly frozen. Ingredients picked green will provide little flavor and little nutrition.

Juggling schedules can be difficult, but it only takes a couple of minutes to throw some ingredients into a blender for a meal replacement.

Wing 'women' should back off, let friends have fun

JOHN BECKER

Girls constantly defend each other, which is a good thing. However, at parties, the more protective ladies need to take a step back. I have hosted a lot of parties in the last two years and I have noticed the girls without anything but a prayer, block their friends from having a good time. In that spirit, I want to present a little party etiquette for all those girls out there I like to call the walking chastity belt.

When drinking, it is always good to have a wingman. In this case, a wingman is someone who keeps an eye on you. She makes sure you come off as sexy as possible without looking bad, and keeps you from getting too drunk or hurt. As far as the wingman goes, her job is almost over when the night has wound down and the girl she is "guarding" has slowed down and is concentrating all of her attention on one guy. The only thing left to do is get her to wherever she wants to be by the end of the night.

If you are the wingman, don't be a drag. It gets really annoying for both the girl and the guy in the situation. Just because you're not getting any, does not mean you have to keep the rest of the planet from getting laid.

Don't treat every guy like dirt, not all guys are after a one-night stand.

Most girls are too busy dancing or changing the music every five seconds and don't drink enough that they don't know what's going on. In the event the girl you are guarding gets blitzed to the point she can't walk or passes out, or a guy is trying to take her clothes off, then you can go into crazy "I'm going to kill you" mode. In fact, you should inflict bodily harm so the punk remembers not to do it again. Also, make sure he knows how pathetic he is for waiting for a girl to pass out in order to get any.

I talked to several girls when I was writing this week's column and I heard the most disturbing thing. It turns out these sex-deprived chastity belts also try and keep couples from having sex. I often wonder what is going through their minds when they try to do that.

"She's too drunk too have sex" – yeah so what, so is her boyfriend. "I don't like him and they shouldn't be together" – sorry that's not your call. "She is too good for him" – well it appears everyone is too good for you. Last time I checked, people could date who they felt like dating.

So here's a lesson for all of you walking chastity belts: if you would stop being such killjoys and ruining everyone's fun, then maybe you would get laid.

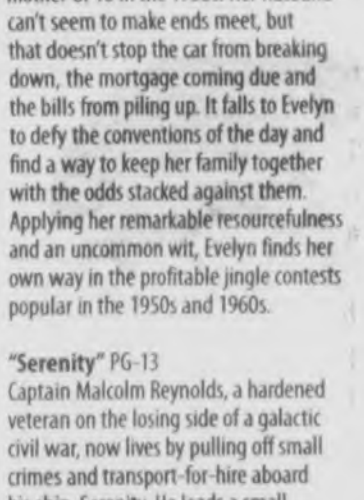
"The Greatest Game Ever Played" PG
An amateur player from a working class family, Francis Ouimet (Shia LaBeouf) shocked the golf world when at the 1913 U.S. Open, flanked by his 10-year-old caddie, he defeated his idol, the defending British champion Harry Vardon (Stephen Dillane). An unlikely match-up — the ingénue versus the seasoned champ — theirs was the greatest match the sport had ever known.



"Into the Blue" PG-13
Into the Blue is a thriller set in the deep, shark-infested waters of the Bahamas. When four young divers discover a legendary shipwreck rumored to contain millions in gold at the bottom of the sea, they believe their dream of buried treasure has come true. But nearby on the ocean floor, a sunken plane full of illegal cargo threatens their find. The friends make a pact to keep quiet about both discoveries so they can excavate the shipwreck before a rival treasure hunter uncovers their secret and beats them to the gold. But their plan goes awry when they realize dangerous smugglers are already closing in on the missing plane, and one of the friends makes a fatal decision that quickly turns the treasure hunters into the hunted.

"The Prize Winner of Defiance, Ohio" PG-13
Evelyn Ryan is a devoted housewife and mother of 10 in the 1950s. Her husband can't seem to make ends meet, but that doesn't stop the car from breaking down, the mortgage coming due and the bills from piling up. It falls to Evelyn to defy the conventions of the day and find a way to keep her family together with the odds stacked against them. Applying her remarkable resourcefulness and an uncommon wit, Evelyn finds her own way in the profitable jingle contests popular in the 1950s and 1960s.

"Serenity" PG-13
Captain Malcolm Reynolds, a hardened veteran on the losing side of a galactic civil war, now lives by pulling off small crimes and transport-for-hire aboard his ship, Serenity. He leads a small, eclectic crew who are the closest thing he has left to family — squabbling, insubordinate and undyingly loyal. When Mal takes on two new passengers — a young doctor and his unstable, telepathic sister — he gets much more than he bargained for. The crew that was once used to skimming the outskirts of the galaxy unnoticed find themselves caught between the unstoppable military force of the Universal Alliance and the horrific, cannibalistic fury of the Reavers, savages who roam the very edge of space.

Capture the flag

The 'other' football most popular fall intramural sport

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

The rules may be different, but the game is still the same.

Although the rule nuances of intramural flag football at K-State can sometimes be difficult to grasp, most participants agree, these differences make the game more fun for everyone.

John Wondra, assistant director of intramurals, said the different style of play is the main reason flag football continues to be the most popular intramural sport during the fall season.

"Our unique two-pass system keeps everyone involved on every play," Wondra said. "With more points being scored, it just makes the games more exciting than the traditional one-pass games."

Indeed, "traditional" is not a word that can accurately describe a typical flag football game.

The two pass rule that sets K-State's flag football program apart from other schools. This system allows the offensive team to throw two forward passes on every play from anywhere on the field. In addition, on plays involving a change in possession, the team that creates the turnover is also allowed two forward passes.

This results in a wide variety of plays and strategies.

Curtis Rempe, senior in information systems and team manager of an independent team called "Shingles," said his team has a set offensive strategy for every game.

"We usually try to throw the first pass short, to get the defense to commit," Rempe said. "If they collapse, then we can look long for the touchdown."

On defense, teams can find it hard to stop an offense that has so many options for plays. Various forms of zone and man-to-man defenses are popular among teams trying to prevent the usual high scores.

Stuart Aller, junior in life science and member of the independent "Quail Hunters," said his team's defensive strategy is fairly simple.

"We basically just try to rush the quarterback," Aller said. "We play straight-up man-to-man and get a lot of pressure on the thrower."

The two-pass system was adopted by intramural officials at K-State to encourage participation among the students. Most other schools in the United States still feature one-pass games.

So far, the change has worked.

Rowers look to improve

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's rowing team will travel to Oklahoma City Saturday and Sunday to compete at the Head of Oklahoma Centennial Regatta.

The teams expected to compete include the University of Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma City University, Creighton, Texas A&M, Oklahoma State, Southern Methodist University and Wichita State.

Jamie Holt, senior captain, said the team's biggest competition will be Texas and Kansas.

"Texas is usually ranked very high, they are in the Top 20 in the NCAA," Holt said.

Although the team will be facing nationally-ranked competition at the Head of Oklahoma Centennial Regatta, coach Patrick Sweeney said the team is focused on conditioning and fitness rather than the competition.

"The thing about fall time races, they're more part of preparation for the spring," Sweeney said. "They're taken seriously, but not as seriously as the spring races."

The regattas in the fall are typically two to three times longer in distance than the races in the spring, and focus more on endurance than speed, Sweeney said.

The Wildcats will use the fall regattas to condition the team for the spring season, he said.

"At this time, we're trying to get the team fit and prepared for the spring time," he said. "This is the time of year to get the team into shape, get them stronger and get their endurance level up."

Along with improving the team's fitness level, Sweeney said he will use the Head of Oklahoma Centennial Regatta to help in deciding the order of the boats. K-State will take all its varsity rowers, as well as a novice boat.

"We use this to see how they perform, it is part of the selection process for the team," Sweeney said.

Holt said although the line up is not yet set, the Wildcats are physically ready to compete.

Holt said the team has been practicing twice a day, five days a week in order to prepare for this weekend.

"People are getting a lot stronger, we're working on getting faster," Holt said.

Megan Hauver, senior captain, said the conditioning this season has been more intense than previous seasons.

"We picked it up a notch from last year, there is more volume of work," Hauver said. "It is a lot harder but it should be worth it."

Hauver said the team has a better starting point this season than previous seasons because of the conditioning, and she hopes the hard work will help the team make its mark this weekend.

"We haven't rowed there before, so I'm looking forward to showing the teams there what we can do," Hauver said, "If KU's there, I'd really like to beat them."

Clemens still dominating Major League hitters at 43

MARK POTTER

Why did Marshall's coach opt to throw one more pass when he could've kicked a game-winning field goal? What makes Kenyans such great distance runners? How can the Cincinnati Bengals be 3-0?

I guess some things in life are just hard to explain.

Likewise, I am mystified at how a 43-year-old pitcher can dominate Major League hitters the way Roger Clemens does.

Despite playing in a hitter's era with shortened fences, juiced baseballs and steroid accusations, "The Rocket" has amassed career totals of 340 wins, 4,497 strikeouts, a .313 ERA and a record seven Cy Young Awards.

There is no doubt Houston's powerful right-hander has posted some incredible numbers during his 22-year major league career, and it would be hard not to include him in a discussion of all-time best pitchers.

But this season may be Clemens' most impressive yet.

This year, Clemens leads the majors with a 1.89 ERA, his career best and more than a half run lower than his nearest challenger, teammate Andy Pettitte.

Clemens also leads the majors in batting average against (.197), is tied for second in quality starts (25) and ranks third in walks-plus-hits per innings pitched (.100). In addition, he has allowed one earned run or fewer 19 times this season.

Did I mention the guy is 43?

With a record of 12-8, Clemens won't win an eighth Cy Young Award this season, but that's not his fault.

The Astros have failed to score enough runs in many of Roger's starts. His 3.57 run support is 7th-worst in the majors and more than 1.5 runs lower than that of Chris Carpenter and Dontrelle Willis, the two leading candidates for the National League Cy Young Award.

With better run support, who knows how many more wins Clemens could have?

Also, like a true Hall-of-Fame pitcher, Clemens shines under pressure. In seven World Series starts, he is 3-0 with a 1.90 ERA.

Speaking of pressure, Clemens pitched his most impressive game of the season Sept. 14 against the Florida Marlins. Not only did he bring his team within a game of the wild card leaders – a lead now occupied by Clemens' Astros – but he did so the same day he lost his mother, Bess, to complications of emphysema.

In a performance reminiscent of Brett Favre's 399 passing yards and four touchdown throws on Monday Night Football the day after his father died, a grieving Clemens allowed just one run while striking out four in 6.1 innings.

Following the game, Clemens told reporters how much his mom meant to him.

"She was my strength, and she was always my will," Clemens said. "She gave me so much, and I am just very thankful she is at peace now."

Even though Clemens was forced to skip his last start due to a strained left hamstring, the man has had an amazing season and continues to raise the bar for modern power pitchers.

Clemens has been the ace of every staff he has ever pitched on. He's blue collar. He's unshakable under pressure. He has once again put his team in position to make a run at a World Series title.

I just scratch my head in admiration.

I'm rooting for you, Roger.

CFB | Fisher earns Big 12 Player of the Week honor

On the strength of his K-State freshman-record 169-yard rushing performance in the Wildcats' 54-7 victory over North Texas, K-State running back Parrish Fisher was named the SBC Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week for games of Sept. 18, league officials announced Monday.

Fisher totaled 228 all-purpose yards, including 59 receiving yards, in just three quarters of work. Fisher's day included runs of 63, 16, 14 and 10 yards and a per-carry average of 8.0 yards on 21 attempts.

The first freshman to start at tailback in the Bill Snyder era, Fisher now has 243 yards through three games and needs just 62 more to break Kansas State's single-season rushing mark by a freshman.

Fishers' Big 12 player-of-the-week honor is the first on the season for the Wildcats.

CFB | Sunflower Showdown to air on Fox Sports Net

Fox Sports Net and the Big 12 Conference announced Monday K-State's annual showdown with rival Kansas on Oct. 8, will be telecast live in the Big 12 region at 11 a.m.

It will be the first time in seven years the rivalry has been televised outside the state of Kansas.

The game will mark the third television appearance of the season for the Wildcats, as K-State's Big 12 opener at Oklahoma will be telecast nationally on Fox Sports Net this Saturday at 6 p.m., while the K-State's victory at Marshall on Sept. 10 aired nationally on ESPN2.

NFL | Broncos beat down Chiefs in Denver, 30-10

DENVER — The Denver Broncos made that newfangled Kansas City defense seem a lot like the old one. And that vaunted Chiefs offense looked pretty lame, too.

Mike Anderson ran for a 44-yard touchdown and Rod Smith became the first undrafted player in NFL history to reach 10,000 yards receiving Monday night, as the Broncos handled Kansas City from start to finish in a 30-10 victory.

Jake Plummer went 13-of-18 for 152 yards and ran for a score.

NFL | Akers likely out; McNabb's status uncertain

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Eagles' David Akers will probably miss Philadelphia's game at Kansas City next week because of a torn hamstring, while Donovan McNabb's status is uncertain.

Akers, who collapsed to the ground in pain after the opening kickoff, fought through the injury to make a 23-yard field goal with nine seconds left to lead the Eagles to a 23-20 victory over Oakland on Sunday.

McNabb played with a sore chest, strained lower abdomen and a shin contusion.

WBB | Arizona player Polk collapses, dies at 22

TUCSON, Ariz. — An Arizona women's basketball player collapsed at the McKale Center on Monday and died, according to a university release.

Shawntinice Polk had not been working out or practicing when she collapsed about midmorning Monday, according to the university. Polk, 22, was taken to University Medical Center afterward.

The school scheduled a noon briefing to discuss Polk's death.

Polk was Arizona's career leader in double-doubles (46) and blocked shots (222).

Schlotzsky's Deli closes

By Logan C Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
Schlotzsky's Deli, located at the corner of Poyntz Avenue and Third Street, closed its business last Thursday. The national corporation declared bankruptcy last fall.

The closing of Schlotzsky's Deli at the corner of Poyntz Avenue and Third Street last week was foreshadowed last month at a public meeting to consider proposed downtown development.

The sandwich shop officially closed last Thursday with little explanation, reported the Manhattan Mercury.

Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said he was surprised with the closure and declined to comment on the possible reasons for it.

A map displayed at an Aug. 30 meeting showed a plan where the Schlotzsky's building and the area around it would be replaced with one or more new ones. Jim Harpool, president of Dial Reality of Kansas City, based in Overland Park, Kan., said a movie theater and parking garage were being considered for the space.

Allen Raynor, Manhattan Town Center manager, confirmed the mall's owners had a strong interest in building a movie theater, but declined to comment further.

Schlotzsky's Inc., the national corporation, declared bankruptcy last fall after announcing a loss of $86.8 million for 2004's second quarter, the company's Web site said. Substantially all of the business's assets were later bought by Bobby Cox Companies, of Fort Worth, Texas, for $28.5 million.

The franchise's owner, Robert Tackett, could not be reached for comment.

K-State gets first student IABC chapter in Kansas, open to all

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The only International Association of Business Communicators student chapter in Kansas had their first meeting Monday night in the K-State Student Union.

IABC is a world-wide organization that helps all professionals communicate better in the professional world.

K-State is the only Kansas university offering a student chapter.

"It is necessary for students to have networking contacts before graduation," said Erin Spalding, senior in public relations and club president. "Students don't have to be in the dark about their future careers. They need to know that they have resources on campus."

IABC offers students opportunities to network with others throughout campus, in the educational community and professional world. The organization is available to all students.

"It's an organization that brings students together to collaborate," Linda Harvey, public relations instructor, said. "Communication is very big and very important."

The professional IABC chapter in Topeka sponsors the K-State student chapter.

The members of the Topeka chapter said they plan on being involved by sending speakers and funding activities. They are also planning to offer a $300 scholarship to be awarded next semester to a K-State student.

As members of IABC, students have access to a monthly e-newsletter, the IABC Communication World magazine, a job center with internship opportunities and the IABC online content library. There is also an accreditation program where professionals can be recognized by becoming Accredited Business Communicators.

The K-State chapter invited three members from the professional chapter to their meeting: Kevin Duel, Marlou Wegener and Anita Fry. The members said the Topeka chapter is excited to be a part of the forming of the first student chapter.

"It's a great opportunity for networking, and I know people that have made careers because of the people they have met in IABC," Duel, Topeka chapter president, said. "You can learn so much more from IABC and use that strategy in your first job."

The K-State chapter members said they plan on spending the semester developing the organization and offering networking possibilities and internship opportunities.

Meetings will be at 6 p.m. every other Monday in the Union.

and it is growing in popularity.

This year, 220 teams are participating in five different divisions. These divisions include fraternity, independent, residence hall, women and co-rec. All of these account for more than 2,000 total participants.

"I think what makes flag football so popular here is the competition," Rempe said. "Everyone wants to win, so that increases participation."

Nick Corbett, freshman in civil engineering and member of the Tau Kappa Epsilon team "Woody's," is not surprised flag football is so popular at K-State.

"We all love football," Corbett said. "The intramural program gives us an opportunity to get together and be competitive, which is something we all need."

As the regular season comes to a close in the coming weeks, flag football remains everyone's favorite sport, regardless of the rules.

"With the rules the way they are, the ball can go from one side of the field to the other quickly," Corbett said. "It's great, because it gives everyone the chance to be a player."

Military jury convicts England on 6 counts

By T.A. Badger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT HOOD, Texas – Army Pfc. Lynndie England, whose smiling poses in photos of detainee abuse at Baghdad's Abu Ghraib prison made her the face of the scandal, was convicted Monday by a military jury on six of seven counts.

England, 22, was found guilty of one count of conspiracy, four counts of maltreating detainees and one count of committing an indecent act. She was acquitted on a second conspiracy count.

The jury of five male Army officers took about two hours to reach its verdict. Her case now moves into the sentencing phase, which will be determined by the same jury. She faces a maximum of 10 years in prison.

England's trial is the last for a group of nine Army reservists charged with mistreating prisoners at Abu Ghraib in Iraq. Two others were convicted in trials and the remaining six made plea deals. Several of those soldiers testified at England's trial.

Prosecutors used graphic photos of England to support their contention that she was a key figure in the abuse conspiracy. One photo shows England holding a naked detainee on a leash. In others, she smiles and points to prisoners in humiliating poses.

They also pointed to her statement to Army investigators in January 2004 that the mistreatment was done to amuse the U.S. guards at Abu Ghraib.

"The accused knew what she was doing," said Capt. Chris Graveline, the lead prosecutor. "She was laughing and joking. ... She is enjoying, she is participating, all for her own sick humor."

Capt. Jonathan Crisp, England's lawyer, countered that England was only trying to please her soldier boyfriend, then-Cpl. Charles Graner Jr., labeled the abuse ringleader by prosecutors.

"She was a follower, she was an individual who was smitten with Graner," Crisp said. "She just did whatever he wanted her to do."

England has said that Graner, now serving a 10-year sentence, fathered her young son.

The defense argued that England suffered from depression and that she has an overly compliant personality, making her a heedless participant in the abuse.

Google offers prime-time Internet video streamcasts

By Anick Jesdanun
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Search engine leader Google Inc. is delving deeper into an unconventional business, offering an Internet streamcast of last week's television premiere of Chris Rock's new comedy.

Other online outlets have made network prime-time shows available before, but "Everybody Hates Chris" marks Google's most high-profile video offering so far.

It comes as Google increasingly ventures beyond its search roots as it battles the likes of Yahoo Inc. and Microsoft Corp.

The series premiere, 21 minutes long after removing commercials, is being offered through Google's servers Monday through Thursday, when the episode broadcasts on UPN.

To prevent further distribution, the video is available as an on-demand stream rather than a download, which could be stored on a computer and copied.

For UPN, the offering is an opportunity to reach viewers, particularly younger ones, who might have missed the premiere on broadcast TV.

For Google, it is a chance to demonstrate that its Google Video service, still in a "beta" test phase, is more than a collection of home videos, which users are encouraged to upload.

"We're constantly exploring new ideas on how to deliver content to users," said Peter Chane, senior business product manager for Google Video.

He described the Chris Rock offering as a test of "how many users want to watch the show on the Internet if they didn't watch it on television."

Through Google Video, professionals and amateurs alike may submit video that is indexed and then displayed through a browser-based video player. All the currently available videos are free, but Google hopes to eventually charge for some of the material in partnership with the content providers.

Google also has been recording television shows off the air, but largely because of copyright restrictions it is displaying only still images and portions of transcripts from those shows.

In the case of "Everybody Hates Chris," a comedy based on Rock's childhood in Brooklyn with a penny-pinching dad and tough but loving mom, Google had a deal with UPN.

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

Running back Clayton charged with misdemeanor

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State running back Thomas Clayton is ready to move on.

Clayton was charged Tuesday with battery, a class B misdemeanor, the result of the Riley County Attorney's Office's investigation of Clayton's run-in with a university parking official on Sept. 16.

"I'd just like to say on my behalf, that there was obviously a mistake, and I do know that's being taken care of in the process as far as, in the legal system, it's being taken care of," Clayton said Tuesday at K-State's weekly press conference.

"I've had unlimited support from everyone around me, as far as the coaching staff, players and so forth. I feel really good about that."

Coach Bill Snyder said he was supportive of the junior from Alexandria, Va.

"I am confident that there was no intent on Thomas' part do to any type of harm; bring harm to anyone," Snyder said. "(He) made a bad choice, a bad decision about leaving when he did. There was no jurisdiction for him to have to stay there, but nevertheless, out of courtesy and respect, that's what he should have done."

Clayton's charge was reduced from aggravated battery to a misdemeanor after information about the incident became clear, County Attorney Barry Wilkerson said in a press release.

Inside, Page 6
Offensive lineman Matt Boss is doubtful for Saturday's game at Oklahoma

"There have been many rumors and some false information being circulated regarding this incident," Wilkerson said. "We carefully reviewed the evidence and made our decision in light of the Kansas statutes and the interpretive decisions of the Kansas appellate courts."

No specific evidence has been released about what took place during the incident, and Wilkerson said no further comment would be made until after Clayton's court date, which has not been set.

Clayton, who is averaging 164.5 yards per game through two contests, was benched during Saturday's home game against North Texas. In his place, redshirt-freshman Parrish Fisher produced the best game by a K-State freshman running back, rushing for a freshman school-record 169 yards to help K-State win 54-7.

Snyder said Clayton would play Saturday against Oklahoma, but a decision on who will start will not be made until later in the week.

Clayton said he wanted to move on and concentrate on football.

"It's already been put behind," Clayton said. "Right now, my focus, as well as the team's focus, is on OU and how to beat them."

Date auction earns $3,500, benefits Katrina victims

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christina Pacheco is worth $250. At least that is how much Ryan McDonald paid for the waitress at a charity date auction Tuesday night at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon in Aggieville. At press time, the auction had raised $3,500 to help victims of Hurricane Katrina, owner Pete Anderson said.

"I definitely think it's awesome that he would want to, and be willing to spend that much for a good cause," said Pacheco.

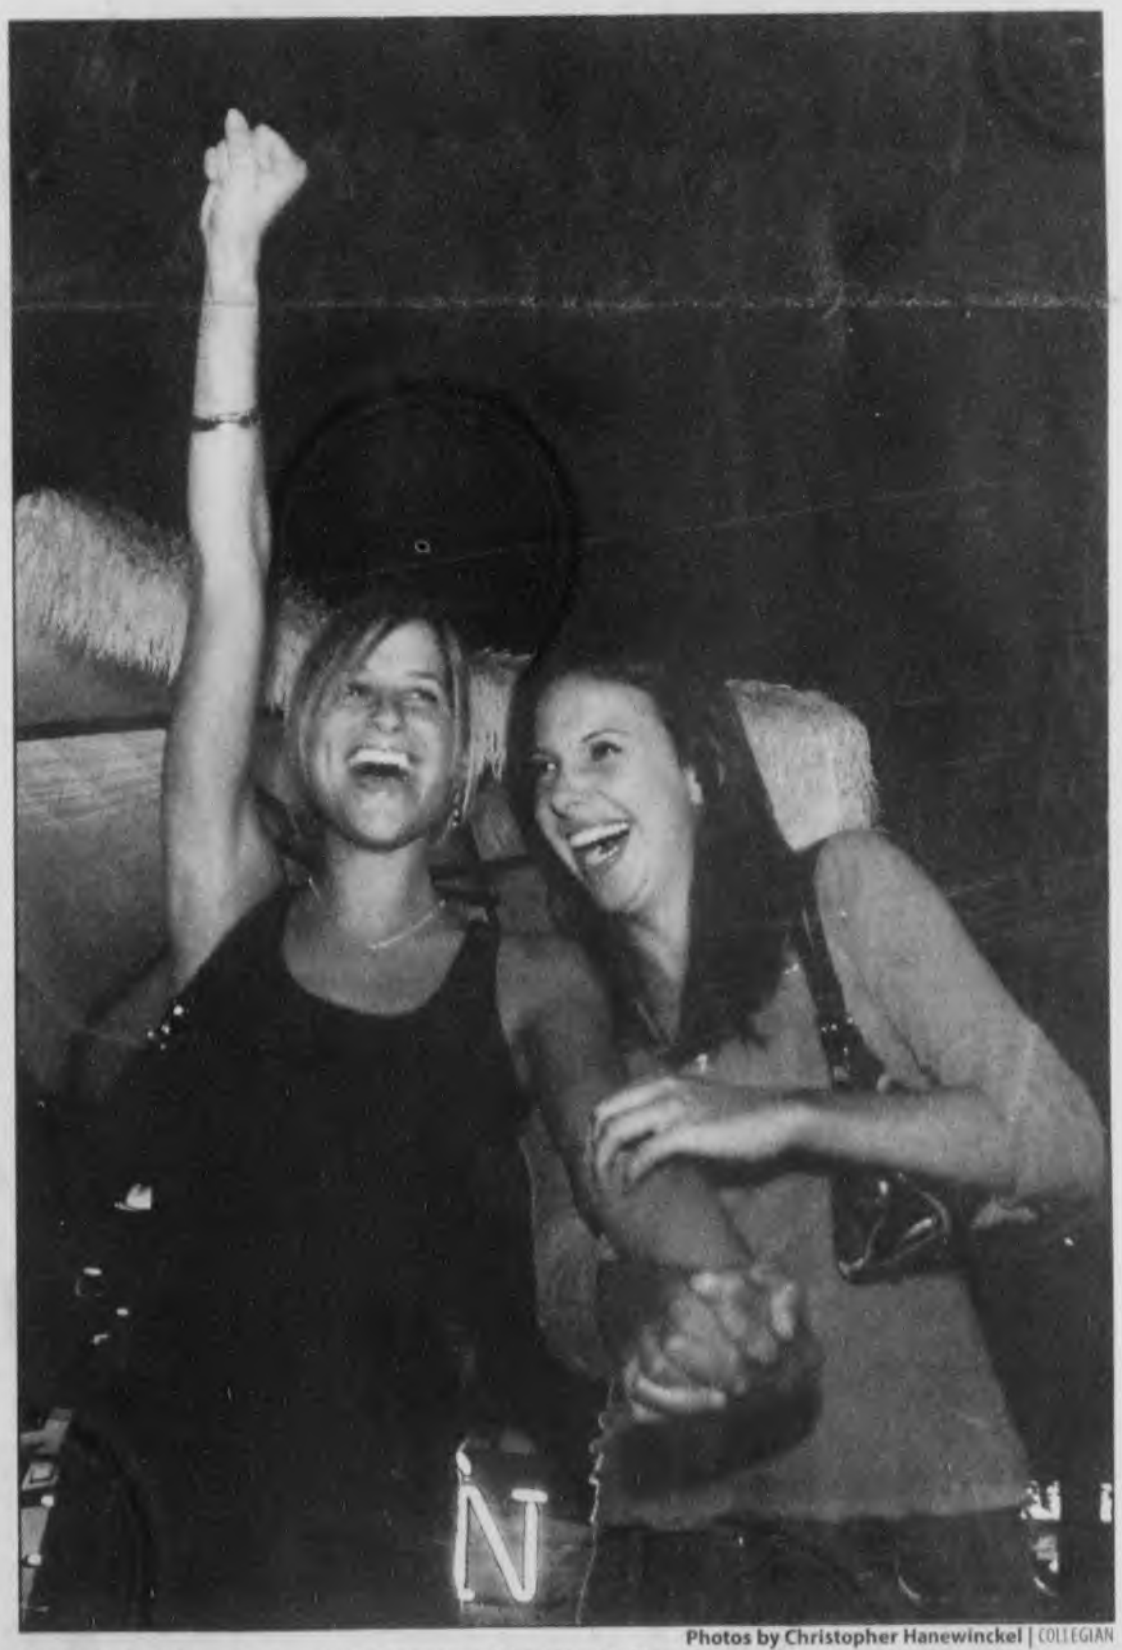
McDonald actually wound up winning the date twice. Initially, he won the date for $100, but the auction was reopened when a competitor offered to bid more and he had to reclaim his victory with the higher sum, much to his chagrin.

"Since when do you have to buy somebody twice?" he said.

The dates are to take place Oct. 4 at Last Chance, and strong emphasis was placed on the fact that beer was free for the dates, as well as food. Other items were auctioned off as well, such as K-State and brewery merchandise, but those items did not receive as much fanfare as the human lots.

None of the employees said they minded being sold to whoever had the money.

"I'm fine with it," waitress Tiffany Smith said while waiting her turn at the auction block. "We're already used to getting hit on."



Smith was auctioned off with fellow waitress Ulala Strömberg and went for $250, Anderson said, and waitress January Fanning also went for $250.

The highest bid at press time was the combination of Mary Potter and Ally Enderby, two employees of other Aggieville bars who volunteered to be auctioned. They brought in $400 from Anderson himself.

"I really thought we might be bringing in a lot more money so I put this in to bring it up," he said.

Anderson received exuberant hugs from both girls after his victory, and later went up for bidding himself. He said

Kemp murder suspect in court today

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The preliminary hearing for the man accused of murdering K-State student Ali Kemp will be today.

Benjamin Appleby's hearing will begin at noon in the Division Eight Courtroom at the Johnson County Courthouse in Olathe, Kan., an employee with the Johnson County District Attorney's Office said.

Kemp

Appleby was arrested Nov. 8, 2004, in Bantam, Conn., and later confessed to the murder, according to an affidavit filed by the Connecticut State Police. He had been living under an alias.

Judge Steve Leben of the Johnson County District Court rejected a request from the defense Monday to repress that statement, the Associated Press reported.

Appleby had family and a small pool-cleaning business in the Kansas City area when Kemp was killed. He is facing charges of capital murder and attempted rape.

Kemp was strangled June 18, 2002. Her father found her severely injured in the pump room of the Leawood, Kan., pool where she had been working. She later died at the hospital.

Johnson County District Attorney Paul Morrison said the trial should begin later this fall or spring next year.

Local resident kidnapped, robbed, released

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 32-year-old Manhattan man was arrested at 7:35 p.m. Monday on charges of kidnapping, aggravated robbery and offering to sell marijuana.

According to the Riley County Police Department, Tremain Thompson, 831 Leavenworth St., and an unidentified male allegedly offered a ride to a local 23-year-old male during the early morning hours of Sept. 23 from the Aggieville area.

IF YOU HAVE ANY INFORMATION
Please Contact the Riley County Police Department at (785) 537-2112

During the ride, Thompson appeared to point a handgun at the victim, held him against his will, broke his cell phone and stole cash, RCPD Lt. Hank Nelson said.

"The victim was detained in the car until they got what they wanted," Nelson said. "He managed to escape when the car was stopped."

RCPD is investigating the incident and is looking for the other male.

Thompson is currently in custody on $75,000 bond. A court date is pending.

Students celebrate hurricane with hurricanes, margaritas

COLLEGE STATION, Texas – On Friday night, Northgate was nearly empty. A few streets away, Justin Trahan, senior in agricultural development, sat in front of his house with four friends to watch the traffic on George Bush Drive whiz by, hours before Hurricane Rita was set to hit.

The hurricane was a Category 3 storm that brought winds and no rain to College Station.

Before the storm hit, Patrick Scott said that although many College Station residents appeared to panic before the storm, he didn't.

"It's easier (to have a party right before the storm) in College Station because we know we won't get hit," said Scott, senior in human resource development.

The group of friends drank beer, but said they knew of other parties where students were drinking hurricanes and margaritas – in honor of Hurricane Rita.

Houston Hailey, senior in marketing, said the prospect of the storm presented students with a good theme for their party.

Jackie Payton, a junior sports management major, explained the motivation behind students wanting to stay away from Northgate and indoors with their friends in the face of a storm.

"You don't want to be by yourself," she said. "I think everyone expected to stay at home and drink with friends."

Several vehicles drove by and honked at the party of five, and they collectively cheered.

"That's how we know we make a difference," Kaitlyn Norbury, 2005 graduate, said.

International Talk Like a Pirate Day sails into Texas A&M

COLLEGE STATION, Texas –"Saucy Tramp! Savages! Scorpion! Sea-gherkins! Sea-lice! Shipwreckers! Slubberdegullions! Sparrows! Subtropical sea-louse!," yells Captain Haddock, a famed character in Herge's "The Secret of the Unicorn," a story in which Tintin and his friends set out in search of a pirate's treasure.

Every year, Talk Like a Pirate Day is celebrated on Sept. 19. The entire concept was floated by John Baur and Mark Summers, the creators of the holiday, while playing racquetball. During the game, friendly encouragement and playful chiding led to pirate banter. As rackets were flung and shots were played, the conversation went on and at the end of the game a thought flickered to dedicate a day to pirate lingo. Seven years prior to 2002, the event was wholly a private affair among friends. This was until they met Dave Barry, a Pulitzer Prize winner. E-mails and Barry's writer's clout brought the concept out of the snowy confines of Oregon and into the rest of the world.

In Baur and Summer's opinion, silliness is the holiday's best selling point.

"Truth be told, my family is very proud that something this goofy started with guys as goofy as John and I are," Summers said. "The whole point is to have fun and they seem to get that."

International Talk Like a Pirate Day is celebrated from the beaches of Miami to the shores of Thunder Bay with millions of people every year donning their best pirate garb and mouthing a whole lot of pirate lingo ranging from the most popular "Aarrghh" to the "Yo-ho-ho."

It is fairly simple to speak the pirate language. All one needs to do is to double up adjectives to make it sound bombastic, drop the G's and V's and always use the present tense.

Sarah Lawver, right, senior in philosophy, and Hanas Cader, left, discuss how faith helps them deal with separation from others as part of the program "A Dialogue of Religion: Harmony Within Disharmony," Tuesday in the Union Courtyard. Cader, a Muslim, and Lawver, a Hellenistic Polytheist, represented two of seven religions on the panel.

Panel discusses role of faith in coping

Religious groups come together to help students with separation

By Rebecca Andrews
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In conjunction with Community Cultural Harmony Week, the K-State Committee on Religion brought together seven people of different faiths for a panel discussion on how faith has helped them deal with separation.

Tuesday's "A Dialogue of Religion: Harmony within Disharmony" featured representatives from the Christian, Jewish, Muslim, Buddhist, Baha'i, Hindu and polytheistic faiths.

Sarah Waxman, first-year vet-med student, presented the Jewish point of view. She said it was hard at first to fit into the K-State community, but with time she has found people and a campus Jewish organization, Hillel, where she can share her beliefs.

Sarah Lawver, senior in philosophy, represented the K-State Alliance for the Understanding of Religious Alternatives and the polytheistic community. She said she also found a community of believers, but it took a while.

Amy Hagedorn, campus minister for Cats for Christ, said she felt in the minority on the panel because the Christian population is the largest faith group at K-State.

"I moved here from Memphis, (Tenn.), knowing I would be helping with a campus ministry," she said. "So I was immediately surrounded by so many people who share in my beliefs and faith."

The hardest part, Hagedorn said, has been divisions between Christian denominations.

Houchang Khatamian, associate professor of horticulture, said the way he was raised in the Baha'i faith has helped to keep him from feeling isolated because of his beliefs.

Baha'i was founded in Iran 160 years ago, Khatamian said, and is based on one God and a oneness of humanity.

Mariko Price, graduate student in education, represented Buddhism. She said she has felt isolated because she is away from her home country of Japan.

But she said harmony can exist among different religions, and she knows firsthand – her husband is a Christian.

They attend each other's religious services and respect differences between the two.

The panelists said they agreed each has found communities in which to share their faiths.

Several also agreed that prayer has helped to give them a closer relationship with their god or gods and to build their religious groups.

The discussion ended with 20 seconds of silence for participants to communicate with the higher beings of their faith.

Policy to require students to get meningitis vaccine

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A policy adopted by the Kansas Board of Regents will soon require more incoming college students to obtain meningitis vaccinations.

The policy will require all incoming students who live in residence halls or other university-operated housing to obtain a meningitis vaccination or sign a waiver saying they refuse the vaccination, beginning in fall 2006.

Kip Peterson, director of government relations and communications for the Kansas Board of Regents, said it will be up to each university to implement the waiver process.

The University of Kansas became the first college in the state to adopt the policy 10 months ago. K-State currently encourages students to get the vaccine, but it is not required.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said university officials will begin developing a plan in the next couple of weeks to implement the new policy. Bosco said the officials discussing the policy include residence life staff, Lafene Health Center officials, Student Governing Association and New Student Services staff.

"Once we get the policy and procedures in place, I think it will be a smooth transition from a 'strongly encouraged' policy to 'required,'" Bosco said.

Meningitis is an inflammation of the brain and the spinal cord that is characterized by a bacterial or viral infection. According to the Centers for Disease Control, between 100 and 125 cases are reported on college campuses each year.

A Wichita State University student died from meningitis last year.

Aaron O'Neal, a linebacker for the University of Missouri, also died from viral meningitis in August.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion for Lafene, said the Centers for Disease Control recommend all freshman students living in residence halls get a meningitis vaccination.

Kennedy said while the vaccination is recommended for incoming freshman, it is only 75 percent effective against all types of meningitis.

Elizabeth Debusk, freshman in kinesiology, said she got a meningitis vaccination because her older sister and parents encouraged her to get one.

"I'd rather go through a small ounce of pain for a shot than go through the pain of actually having meningitis," she said.

TO THE POINT

Meningitis waiver should be implemented

The Kansas Board of Regents is requiring state universities to implement a policy that all incoming students who reside in university-operated housing must have a meningitis shot or sign a waiver stating they refused to receive one.

While the students will still have to pay for the meningitis shot, the policy would give more awareness to a sometimes fatal disease. Between 100 and 125 students each year are infected with meningitis on college campuses across the nation.

The University of Kansas instituted the policy 10 months ago; K-State should follow suit. Within the next couple of weeks, university officials will begin developing a plan for the vaccination.

K-State currently encourages students to receive the meningitis shot, but there is no formal policy. Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said the policy would change the procedure of getting the vaccination from strongly encouraged to required.

According to www.WebMD.com, people are more likely to get meningitis in crowded living situations. If students are required to sign a waiver, they might be more aware of how serious meningitis can be.

This policy should not only be implemented in university-operated housing, though. All students living in group situations should consider the waiver policy as well.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Minority Voice

Atheist lobbyist good for all diverse religions

JACI BOYDSTON

Godless heathens of America, rejoice!

Wait, can heathens rejoice?

Regardless, non-Christians just won two important national victories in the past few weeks. Just days after the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals declared that requiring public school children to recite the phrase "under God" in the Pledge of Allegiance violated the First Amendment, Capitol Hill said hello to Lori Lipman Brown – our first atheist lobbyist.

Brown's agenda focuses on combating policies based on religious beliefs, such as those limiting stem cell research and the availability of contraceptives, and reinforcing the wall between church and state by opposing policies that give taxpayer money to faith-based programs.

Although Brown is not likely to be very popular, successful or wealthy any time soon (she's making peanuts compared to other congressional lobbyists), her presence in Washington, D.C., is a step in the right direction.

Since President Bush's election and Sept. 11, this country has experienced a religious revival of the Christian variety – a cause for celebration for those in the religious majority, but a scary prospect for everyone else who wasn't invited to the party.

This one religion, which is no more deserving of governmental protection than any other religion, has left its mark on so many institutions that should fall on the "state" side of the wall of separation – medical research, sex education, the teaching of scientific theories in public schools and even displays in governmental buildings.

While some may argue that these are negligible infringements on minority rights, we have to be mindful of the precedent we're setting. If it's OK to display the Ten Commandments in a state capital today, will it be OK to require public school children to recite them tomorrow? And then next Thursday, can we require signed religious oaths from citizens attempting to vote?

Americans don't need faith-based initiatives and morality police; they need assurance that their freedom to worship – or not – won't be trampled by the preferences of the party in currently in political power.

That's where Brown comes in. Never mind the fact that she's likely to have very little success as one woman against the entire moral majority (remember, David needed God on his side to beat Goliath, a weapon Brown doesn't exactly have in her arsenal). Hopefully she will pave the way for many other minority lobbyists, but regardless, she will serve as a symbolic reminder that everyone, even the freaks, weirdos and – gasp – atheists, have rights that must be protected.

Although she plans to represent the rights of atheists, she's really a voice for all minority interests. Non-atheists can benefit from Brown's efforts, even if the only success she has is to make our political leaders pause for a second to realize that not everyone wants to be converted to their line of thinking.

Brown and her lobby aren't a threat to the moral fabric of America. She's not trying to convert the country to atheism, she's just doing what she can get religion out of the government and return it safely to the churches, where it belongs.

Democrats aborting political chances

GRANT REICHERT

The abortion issue has changed - Like some ugly duckling that has shed its once-hideous feathers and grown into a beautiful plate of roast duck. It's changed so much that abortion rights should now appeal to Republicans.

Why? The Roe Effect, observed by James Taranto of www.OpinionJournal.com.

This theory has two simple premises. First, Democrats are more likely to undergo abortions. It's a truism that you're more likely to do something if you support it. Second, parents usually pass their political values on to their children.

Therefore, of the more than 40 million fetuses killed since 1973, most of them had Democrat parents, and so most would've been Democrats themselves. Possibly enough to account for their razor-thin electoral losses in Ohio and Florida.

Abortion is political eugenics. Why then, would Republicans want to prohibit it, or limit the number? We need to stand up for abortion. To channel Charlton Heston, they can have our abortions when they pry them from our cold, dead fetus. Those damn, dirty apes.

Oh, don't you give me that doe-eyed, quivering lip, "but it's human life" look; that will get you nowhere.

Especially with me. And here is where I make this column all personal. I have an admission to make about the abortion issue, a skeleton in my closet. I can bear this secret shame no longer: I was once a fetus. That's right, world. There, I feel better.

But, nevertheless, I don't let my Fetal-American roots influence my thinking – being a shameless political whore, nothing influences my thinking.

When's the last time a fetus did anything for you anyway? They just lay around all day, chatting up the pancreas, taking ice cream-pickle-frappe hits from their umbilical cord hookahs.

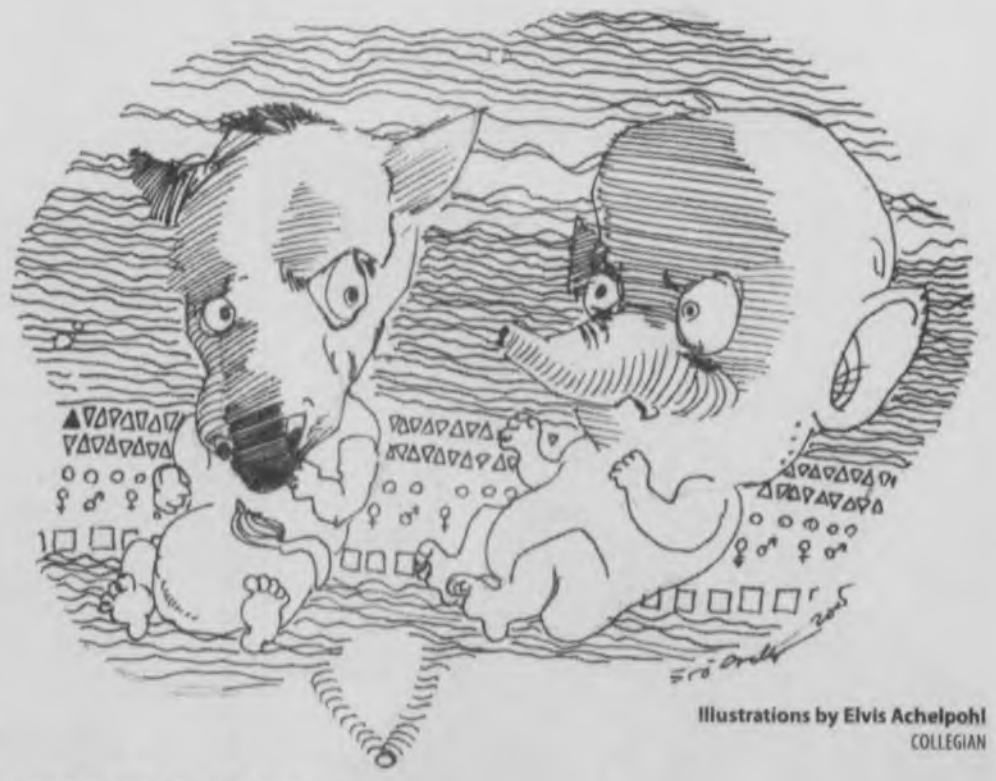
As Republicans, this lazy fetal constituency is not helping us out. They can't vote – in fact, they have no rights at all. The Supreme Court has decided on something like the "Illegal Alien" conception of rights: fetuses don't have any until they successfully cross the border.

And, even then, Fetal-Americans still don't have full rights. Don't you remember sex-ed class? As we all learned, we aren't fully human until puberty, a time of change for young men and women when they may notice rights in places they had none before.

So, just because you're "human" doesn't mean you have "rights." Just imagine if that were the case; next thing you know, the United Nations would be drawing up a Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Abortion, however, is a solid right. It's guaranteed under a right to privacy so expansive and important that our founding fathers made sure it was explicit in the Constitution.

As Republicans, we should support abortion; but, that doesn't mean we can't also support certain common-sense regulations.



For example, since abortion is legal under a right to "privacy," obviously doctors should have to perform abortions blindfolded, while humming loudly, to protect people's rights. Kind of like pin-the-tail-on-the-donkey, you know, except instead of pinning a tail on a donkey, they're tearing a human being apart with forceps.

Um...rimshot?

Lastly, of course, we've got to think about what's best for women. Living without the right to an abortion is hell. I know; I've done it for the last 21 years, my body having been so deformed by fate that I cannot undergo the operation. On the plus side, I enjoy sports, pork rinds and world conquest.

Republicans should pick up the pro-choice mantle.

If Democrats want to perform political fetucide, who are we to impose our morality on them?

"Sometimes you just have to face the music and realize, yes, you are a pothead." – my roommate. Thanks buddy.

Who the heck thinks the Collegian's mentor is George Bush? Did you read the Collegian last year during the election?

After 15 minutes of monotonous beeping right next to his ear, my roommate managed to sleep through an extra-loud round of Andrew W.K.'s masterpiece, "Party Hard." What's next?

Oh, and my roommate is King of the Snooze Button — 7 to 8:26 a.m. is by far the most worthless sleep I've had in years.

Smart students take Expos from community colleges. Pay less, get more.

Kody Cooper is a narrow-minded idiot who needs to realize morality isn't limited to the will of a supernatural parental figure ordering us about.

Do the professors have to abide by the honor code? They sure don't act like it.

I might have broke up with my boyfriend of two years to see you. But, no hard feelings, it's all right, you're a pre-ejaculator anyway, loser.

Some guy in ATO keeps calling me brother. It's creepy.

LAGUNA BEACH
THE REAL ORANGE COUNTY

High school reality show popular among students

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new episode of "Laguna Beach" airs every Monday at 9 p.m. CDT on MTV.

One of the season's popular reality television shows doesn't seem realistic at all to some viewers.

"Laguna Beach: The Real Orange County" depicts the lives of eight young people living in one of the wealthiest places in the world, Laguna Beach, Calif.

The show, which is in its second season, follows the high schools students through their soap-opera-like relationship ups and downs.

Kristin, the main character this season, is the "queen bee" of her high school.

"She has parties, bonfires, ski trips and spring break on her mind and she always knows how to have a good time," according to www.mtv.com.

Stephen, a popular character from last season, is Kristin's ex-boyfriend.

He has gone away to college, but still has feelings for Kristin, though she wants to be single.

Lauren, or L.C., lives in a large mansion, wears designer clothes and has a pool overlooking the ocean.

After attempting school in San Francisco, she has returned to Laguna, leaving her best friend and long time crush, Steven, behind.

"My favorite character is L.C. because she doesn't seem like she is stuck up even though she is rich and has a lot of stuff," Natalie Zych, junior in nutrition, said.

Then there is Talan, the surfer, quarterback and volleyball player, who is a mystery to the girls of Laguna Beach, according to the Web site.

Taylor is a typical Laguna girl who everyone, except Kristin, likes.

The latest developments have shown that both Taylor and Kristin like Talan, and he just can't seem to choose.

Jason, the resident bad-boy surfer, plays baseball and breaks hearts whenever he can. Zych said her least favorite character is Jason because he likes to play with girls' minds.

Alex M. is best friends with Taylor, and doesn't get along with Kristin's clique.

She has dated Jason, but it continues to go back and forth in the love triangle between Jessica, Jason and Alex M.

"She has an eye for fashion and an ear for music as the drama queen of Laguna Beach," according to the site.

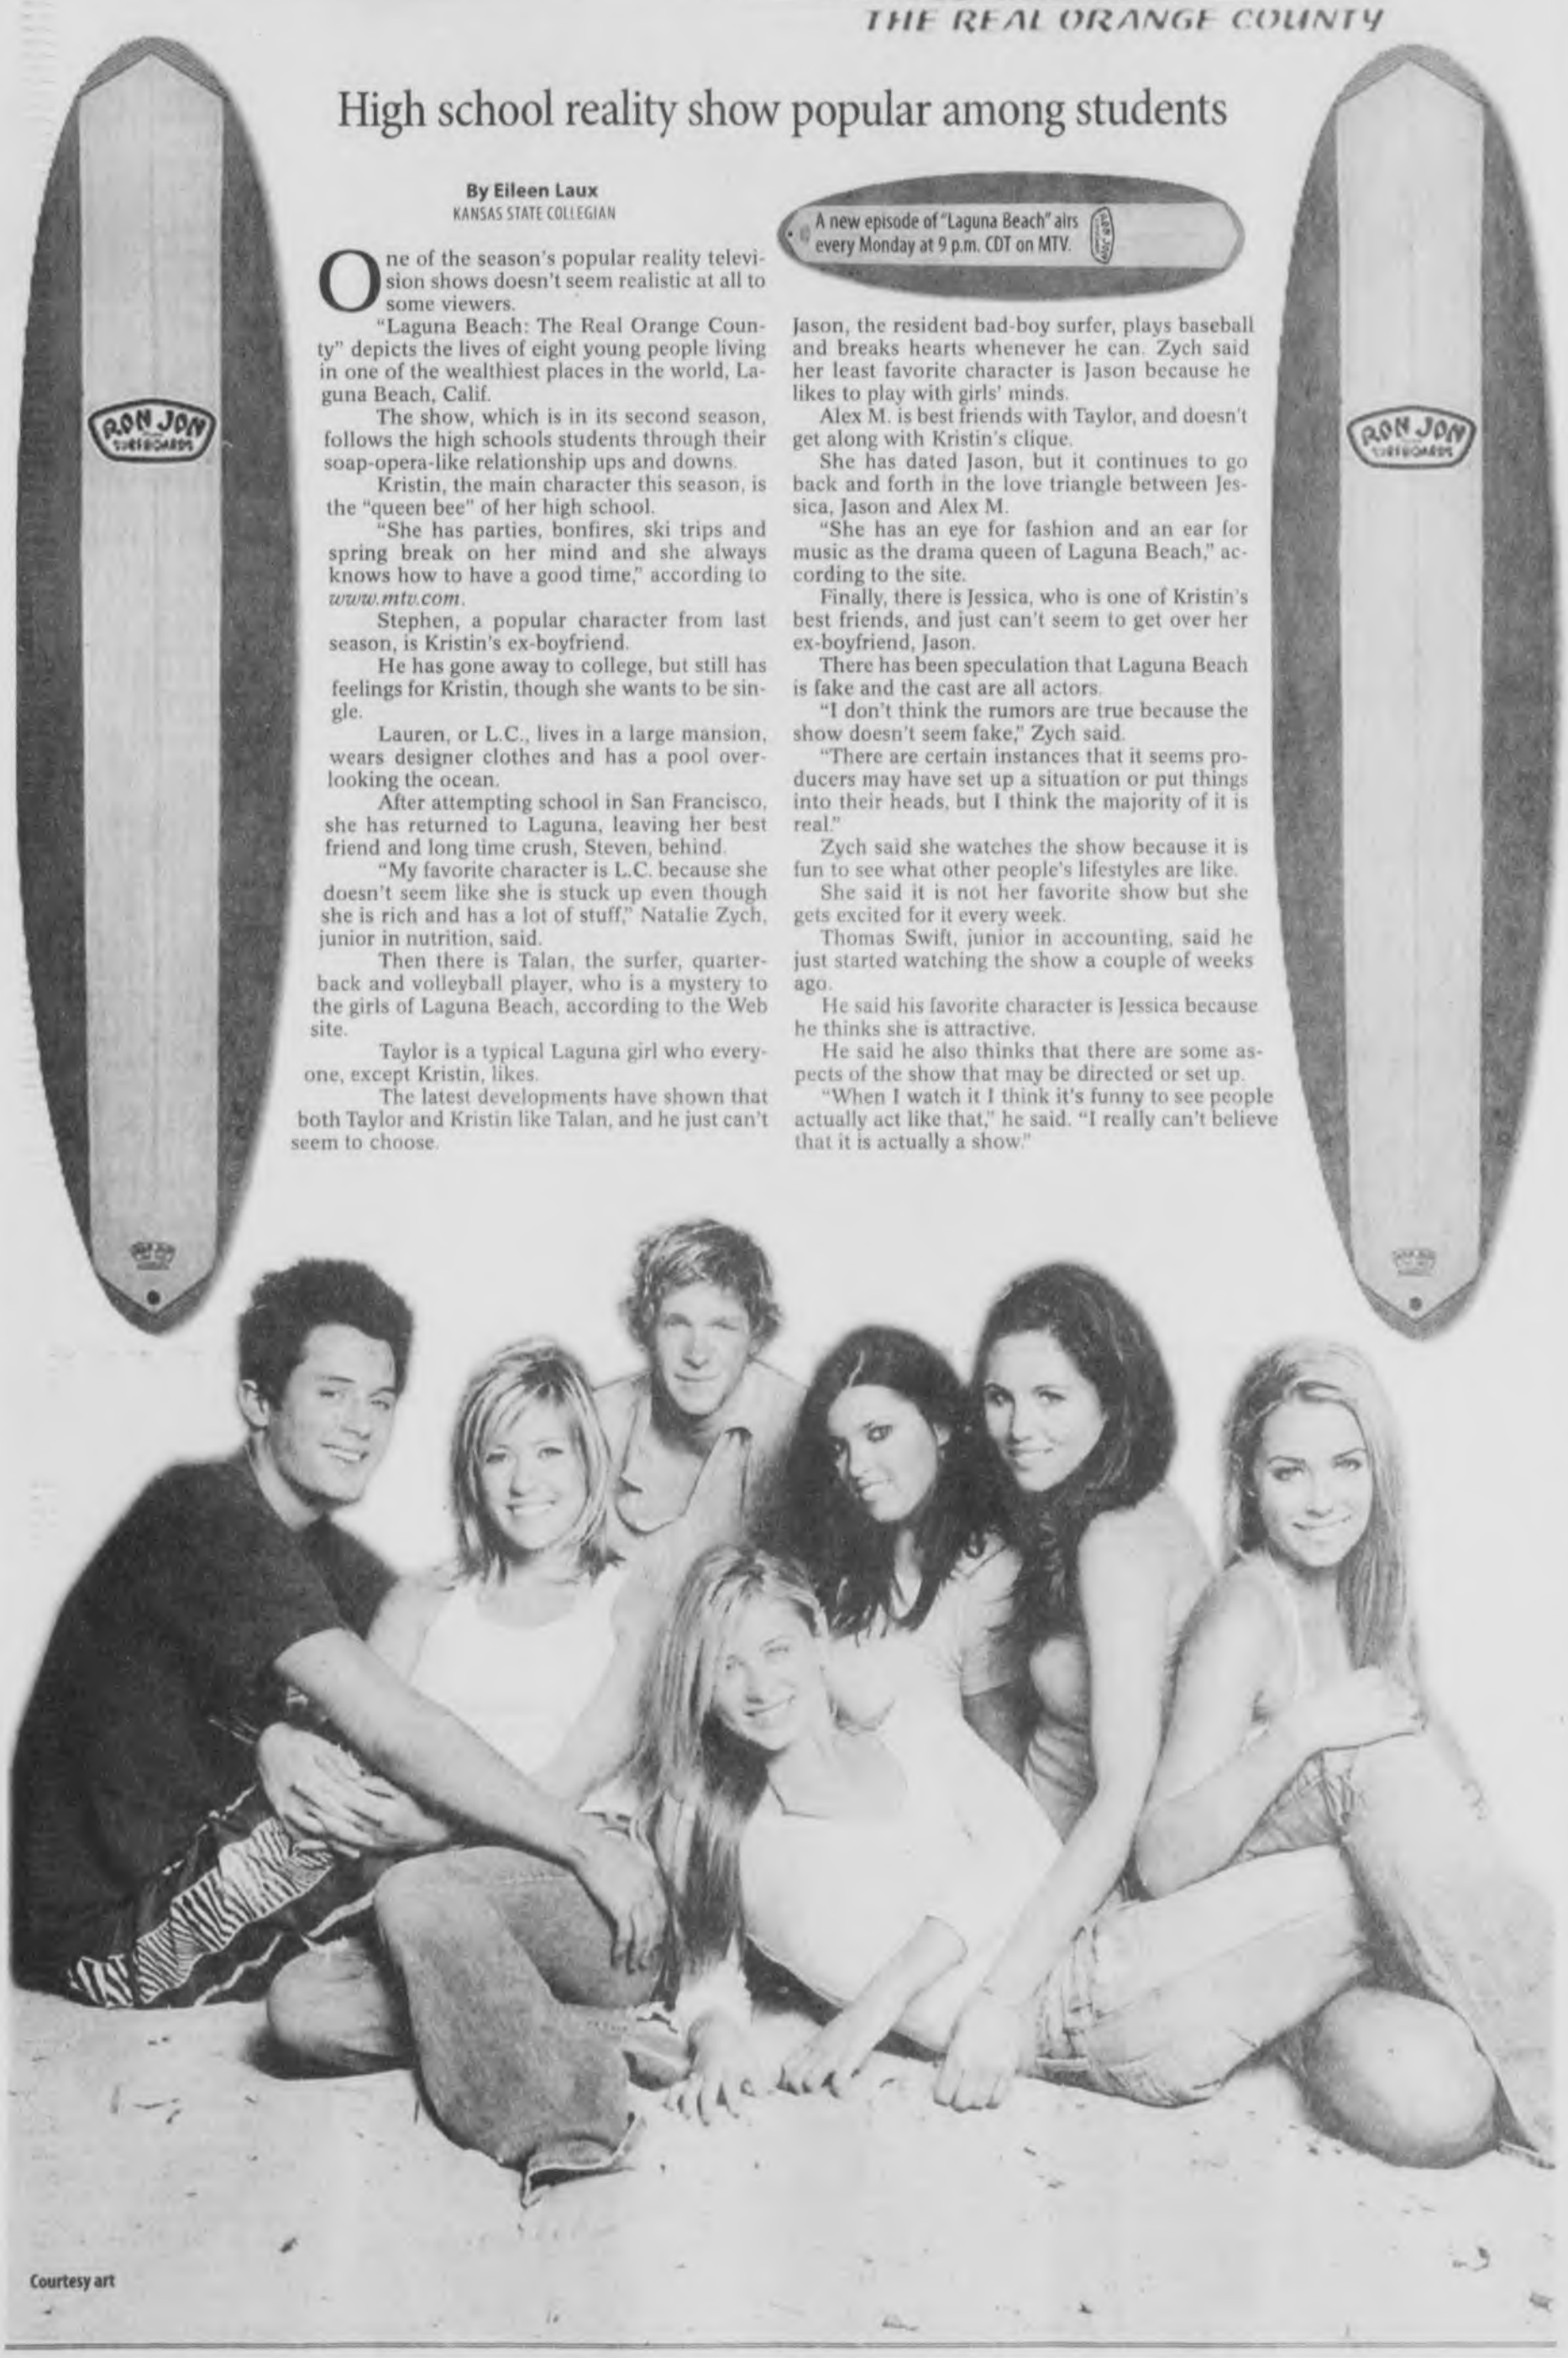
Finally, there is Jessica, who is one of Kristin's best friends, and just can't seem to get over her ex-boyfriend, Jason.

There has been speculation that Laguna Beach is fake and the cast are all actors.

"I don't think the rumors are true because the show doesn't seem fake," Zych said.

"There are certain instances that it seems producers may have set up a situation or put things into their heads, but I think the majority of it is real."

Zych said she watches the show because it is fun to see what other people's lifestyles are like.



She said it is not her favorite show but she gets excited for it every week.

Thomas Swift, junior in accounting, said he just started watching the show a couple of weeks ago.

He said his favorite character is Jessica because he thinks she is attractive.

He said he also thinks that there are some aspects of the show that may be directed or set up.

"When I watch it I think it's funny to see people actually act like that," he said. "I really can't believe that it is actually a show."

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

1991 — Miles Davis dies

Jazz trumpeter Miles Davis dies in Santa Monica, Calif., at age 65. He assembled a jazz group called the Miles Davis Quintet, which became enormously popular, releasing classic albums like Round Midnight (1956). In the 1960s, Davis became interested in rock and began fusing jazz and rock to create an innovative sound.

His 1968 album, Bitches Brew, was a major hit.

Davis continued to produce popular recordings until his 60s. He died of pneumonia and other ailments.

1978 — Class E Speed Record Set

Car & Driver Editor Don Sherman set a Class E record at the Bonneville Salt Flats in Utah on this day, driving the Mazda RX7, the standard-bearer for the rotary engine in the U.S. market, and reaching 183.9 mph.

The RX7's unique rotary engine doesn't have the standard pistons. Instead, two rounded "rotors" spin to turn the engine's flywheel.

Although the rotary engine was not a new concept, the Mazda RX7 was one of the first to conquer the reliability issues faced by earlier rotary engines.

Light and fun to drive, with 105 horse power from its 1.1 liter rotary engine, the RX7 was extremely popular.

1972 — Weekly casualty figures contain no U.S. fatalities

On this day, weekly casualty figures are released that contain no U.S. fatalities for the first time since March 1965. There were several reasons for this. President Nixon's troop withdrawal program, first initiated in the fall of 1969, had continued unabated even through the height of the fighting during the 1972 North Vietnamese "Easter Offensive."

By this time in the war, there were less than 40,000 U.S. troops left in South Vietnam. Of this total, only a small number, mostly advisers, were involved in ground combat.

1968 — "Hey Jude" breaks records

The Beatles' single "Hey Jude" hits the top of the charts. The song had debuted two weeks earlier at No. 10, the highest spot ever achieved by a new release at that time. More than seven minutes long, it remains the longest song ever to hit No. 1.

1959 — Khrushchev, Eisenhower offer views on summit meeting

One day after concluding their summit meeting in Washington, D.C., Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev and President Eisenhower reflect on the importance and meaning of their talks. Both men were optimistic that progress had been made in easing Cold War tensions.

Rapper creates excellent album before jail sentence

"The B. Coming"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

I wish rap artists could keep themselves out of trouble. I suppose in a genre that thrives on swollen egos and competition, it is only natural that tempers escalate.

Unfortunately, this often leads to stupid decisions. Beanie "Mack" Sigel, one of Jay-Z's successors on Roc-a-Fella, recorded "The B. Coming" within the time between being found guilty of federal gun charges and beginning to serve his one-year sentence.

He will face trial for attempted murder once released. This may be the last album we hear from Sigel for a while.

But what an album it is.

"The B. Coming" is an excellent testament of a man who is entering some dark days. The album enlists (mostly) second-rate producers who step up and create some of the best production to come from a mainstream rap album since "The Documentary." The album is packed with guest rappers who brought their A-games to the recording studio. Each is perfectly in sync with Sigel's dour emoting and gripping rhymes.

The most amazing aspect of "The B. Coming" is Sigel himself; he is never overshadowed by his guests sharing the mic. He deftly spins accounts of cheating women, mental breakdowns and nights sipping on cough syrup.

The album opener, "Feel it in the Air," is an understated song that rides along a wailing saxophone line. For someone who won't see the daylight for a long time, Sigel is surprisingly full of hope: "I'm still afloat/I ain't the captain of the yacht but I'm on the boat."

However, things may not be as together as Sigel admits. "I Can't Go on This Way" showcases Sigel's regrets and stresses that may lead to a breakdown.

"One Shot Kill" features Redman spitting maniacally over the track's blazing horns. Play "Gotta Have It" with caution as it very well may blow your car's subwoofer. Peedi Peedi brings his high, nasally flow and Twista brings his rapid-fire lyrical attack, arguably his best guest rap spot, to accent the pounding, urgent track.

On "Don't Stop" The Neptunes add smooth and soulful synth lines over which Snoop Dogg purrs, in his most suave tone, about what Sigel will be doing once out of prison.

"Let's toast to the man, that when he get out/He gonna do those things he was rappin' about/A true playa for real."

Sigel comes back with: "Haters, stay out my face/And know that thing still by my waist." Apparently, those gun charges won't slow him down.

"Purple Rain," arguably the best track on the album, is a laid-back, soulful chronicle of late nights sipping cough syrup and smoking.

The outstanding guest, Bun B, spins tales of his first encounter with his favorite sizzurp.

Other album highlights are the gospel-tinged "Lord Have Mercy," the worn-out exasperation of "Look at Me Now," and "Bread & Butter," a bitter kiss-off to a disloyal mistress.

Courtesy art

If this is to be Sigel's swan song, he could not have gone out on a higher note; there is nary a bland track.

The hip-hop world will wait anxiously for his return.

Victory rests on Webb's right arm

The Wildcats have a problem; they have the best tandem of running backs in the Big 12 Conference.

It's a nice problem to have.

Lets not get ahead of ourselves and say Thomas Clayton and Parrish Fisher are the best in the country, because you are going to have to go far west and two time zones away and talk about Reggie Bush and LenDale White at Southern California before you can even mention the words, "top tandem in college."

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Unfortunately for Clayton's and Fisher's stats, they're not going to be needed much this Saturday at Oklahoma in the Wildcats Big 12 opener.

Oklahoma is down this year – if you haven't already figured that out from its losing record – and one thing all three games the Sooners have played this year have in common are they are susceptible to the pass.

Not one team has broken 100 yards rushing against the Sooners defense this year, but opponents have used the passing game to dominate a Sooner defense that was ranked No. 1 in overall defense in the Big 12 last season.

Opponents are averaging 262 yards passing per game against the Sooners, and 66 percent of the first downs their defense has given up this season have been through the air.

This will be a make or break game for the Wildcats and especially quarterback Allen Webb. From the first game against Florida International to the dominating win over North Texas, Webb has improved in each game.

Against a poor North Texas team, the Wildcats did what they were supposed to – they dominated the game. That's something they did not do against Florida International and did for a while against the Thundering Herd.

Webb was in control of the offense, completing 83 percent of his passes for a career-high 256 yards in little more than a half of play. He made one mistake by throwing an interception, the result of trying to do too much, which cost the Wildcats a measly seven more points in a blowout situation.

The important thing is – Webb said after coach Bill Snyder explained the mistake to him – he learned from it and realized if he would have ran rather than try to zip the pass through two defenders, it would have been another K-State touchdown.

Webb is maturing into the quarterback K-State needs him to be with conference play here, and that's a good thing for Wildcat fans.

Saturday's game showed backup Allan Evridge is not ready to step in and take over, and if you watched Dylan Meier during pre-game warmups, you noticed he is having trouble completing a five-yard slant pattern without throwing a lollipop pass to the receiver.

Can you say "medical redshirt" for Meier? Hopefully the NCAA can grant him the opportunity, because he does not look anywhere near ready to play this season.

Meanwhile, this game is the most exposure the Wildcats will get this season. They will either be the team that put the lid on Oklahoma's coffin prior to Texas and the Red River Shootout, or they will be the team the Sooners use to save their season, building their confidence before facing the Longhorns.

Expect Snyder to take a page from his past and what has already been done against Oklahoma and pass the ball. Don't be surprised if you see a few new wrinkles on offense, too. But K-State's success depends directly on Webb.

The tandem of Fisher and Clayton will get their numbers, but the win will be directed by No. 8.

Wildcats ready for No. 22-ranked Texas

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As No. 16 K-State volleyball prepares to face No. 22 Texas at 7 tonight at home, the Wildcats aren't dwelling on the past – like the fact that the Longhorns have come away victorious in five of the last six meetings between the two squads.

"I don't think about it, and I don't think our team thinks about it either," junior outside hitter Sandy Werner said. "We're just preparing to get better each and every day and compete against them."

Only three days removed from Saturday's 3-0 loss to Missouri, the Cats (11-2, 2-1) are more concerned with correcting internal errors, coach Suzie Fritz said.

"We learned a lot about our team," Fritz said of the Missouri game. "We continue to make the same mistakes, so our focus has been on really trying to correct those mistakes that are forcing us to lose valuable points."

Werner said K-State's defense has been the most detrimental aspect of its game.

"We're just working on becoming a better defensive team, a better blocking team and minimizing our mental errors," Werner said.

Therefore, the Wildcats haven't had much time to deliberate over Texas.

"As of now, I haven't spent a lot of time talking or thinking about Texas," Fritz said Monday.

Historically, Texas has been a talented team, Werner said.

"Texas has always been a very tall team and very good team," Werner said. "They'll give us some good competition."

At home, the Cats are 4-5 against Texas. In her fourth season, Fritz is 3-5 against the Longhorns.

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende said competing against teams the caliber of Missouri and Texas bodes well for K-State.

"It's exciting to face a better team than us," Rezende said. "Especially for a young team because it helps us mature."

Because the Big 12 Conference has five ranked teams, this K-State squad will be forced to grow up fast, Rezende said.

"This conference is very hard and every game is going to be like a war for us," Rezende said. "We need to be ready to face hard teams every Wednesday and Saturday night."

Sophomore libero Angie Lastra and senior outside hitter Katie Stanzel celebrate a game point at the South Dakota State volleyball match Sept. 21 at Ahearn Field House.

VOEGELI QUESTIONABLE, BOSS DOUBTFUL

Center Jacob Voegeli will likely play Saturday, but right guard Matt Boss is doubtful. Both players were injured in the first half of the 54-7 win over North Texas.

Senior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said the loss of Boss and the questionable status of Voegeli should not cause any problems against the Sooners.

"I think (center) Jordan Bedore is capable of doing things that Voegeli is capable of, and I think that Caleb Handy is just as capable as Matt Boss," Clary said.

BOUNCING BACK FROM A BYE-WEEK

One streak will continue this Saturday in Norman – either the Sooners will push their current losing streak to two games, or they will continue their 12-game Big 12 Conference winning streak.

"Anytime you come off a loss, there is some enthusiasm to figure out why you lost and to get back on the field," coach Bill Snyder said.

DON'T GET CAUGHT UP IN THE NUMBERS

K-State has put up solid rushing numbers this year, led by Thomas Clayton, but Snyder said not to asses his performance until he matches up against tougher opponents.

"We have to get into Big 12 Conference play, and play some games against the quality of opposition that exists, before we can really define where we are where each individual might be," Snyder said.

K-State places 2nd

Consistency and the short game helped contribute to K-State's second-place finish at the Chip-N Club tournament Tuesday in Lincoln, Neb.

Overall, K-State placed 18 strokes behind the tournament winner, Nebraska.

For the Wildcats, junior Helene Robert placed fifth overall at 10-over par, tying her personal best placing. Sophomore Kali Quick finished at 12-over par, tying for sixth with Catalina Gaucaneme and Tara Goedeken, both of Wichita State. K-State had three other individual placings: Hailey Mireles (16), Michelle Regan (18) and Katy Heffel (31).

Coach Kristi Knight said she was pleased with the outcome of the tournament.

"Everybody did a really good job," she said. "It was a good tournament."

Knight said although the players found some problems with their games, there were upsides to the tournament.

"They wouldn't say they scored as well as they could have," she said. "We left some shots out on the golf course, but I think we'll get those as the season goes along. The players' attitudes were good and they competed hard."

The main focus going into the tournament after the ninth-place finish at the Badger Invitational in Wisconsin was the short game.

BBL | K.C. Monarchs shortstop Byron Johnson dies

DENVER — Byron "Mex" Johnson, who played shortstop for the Kansas City Monarchs of the Negro Leagues and for Satchel Paige's traveling team, died Saturday in Denver. He was 94.

Johnson

Johnson had prostate cancer, his daughter, Jacquelyn Benton, said Tuesday.

Johnson played for the Monarchs in 1937-38, when blacks were barred from the National and American leagues. He joined the traveling team of the legendary pitcher Satchel Paige in 1939 and stayed through 1940.

NFL | Jets, Pennington dealt another setback

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — The desperate New York Jets brought back 41-year-old Vinny Testaverde on Tuesday after starting quarterback Chad Pennington and his backup Jay Fiedler were lost for the season with shoulder injuries.

Pennington

In turning to Testaverde, who played for the Jets from 1998-2003, the team hopes he can back up untested third-stringer Brooks Bollinger, who is scheduled to start Sunday against the Baltimore Ravens.

Pennington and Fiedler were on the same flight to Alabama on Tuesday to see Dr. James Andrews, the noted orthopedist who repaired Pennington's rotator cuff in February.

MLB | Baseball players would agree to penalties

NEW YORK — Baseball players are willing to again toughen the sport's drug policy, offering to accept a 20-game penalty instead of 10 days for first-time steroid offenders along with tests for amphetamine use.

The proposal, outlined Monday in a letter from union head Donald Fehr to commissioner Bud Selig, fell short of what management wants.

In an April 25 letter to the union, Selig called for a 50-game suspension for an initial positive test, a 100-game ban for second-time offenders and a lifetime ban for a third violation.

Fehr's response said Selig's proposal was meant to quiet criticisms of baseball's current policy, not deter steroid use.

GLF | Wie to participate in men's event in Japan

TOKYO — Michelle Wie will play in a top-tier men's event in November on the Japanese golf tour.

Wie

The Hawaiian star turns 16 next month when she is expected to turn pro. Wie, of Korean heritage, has never played in Japan but has a big following there.

She will compete in the Nov. 24-27 Casio World Open, one of the richest events on Japan's men's tour, organizers said Tuesday. She will be the second woman to play in a JGTO tour event and the first since Sweden's Sophie Gustafson failed to make the cut in the 2003 Casio World Open.

CAR | Aikman, Staubach make first hire for race team

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Hall of Fame Racing made its first hire Tuesday when it tabbed Philippe Lopez to build the NASCAR team owned by former Dallas Cowboys quarterbacks Roger Staubach and Troy Aikman.

Lopez was hired as a crew chief and will be in charge of getting the Nextel Cup team ready to debut next season.

"My first priority is to get the shop up and running," Lopez said. "We are working very closely with Joe Gibbs Racing. That will give us a great advantage right from the start.

"You can't put a price on what they will be bringing to the table as this team gets ready to go Nextel Cup racing."

The team has yet to hire a driver for the car that will be sponsored by Texas Instruments.

Lopez, who was most recently working in the research and development department at Richard Childress Racing.

He was one of the first hires the late Dale Earnhardt made when he formed his Cup team.

Business Administration recognized for diversity

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is aiming for campus diversity.

The College of Business Administration was recognized recently for its diversity efforts with K-State's 2005 University Outstanding Department or Unit Award for Enhancing Diversity.

With the honor comes a $2,500 cash award.

Clyde Howard, director of affirmative action, has also been confirmed as a commissioner to the Kansas Human Rights Commission.

He said students should recognize the difference between affirmative action, non-discrimination and diversity.

"Affirmative action and non-discrimination are legal obligations at K-State," he said. "Diversity is a voluntary initiation.

"While non-discrimination is the actions that are taken to prevent people from being treated unfairly, affirmative actions are extra efforts one makes.

Diversity is creating an inclusive environment that seeks to engage several perspectives and that is taken to the classrooms."

Howard said diversity includes awareness and inclusion.

"After people are recruited, make sure they are involved, welcomed and be open to their ideas," he said.

Shannon Babcock, senior in social work, said she doesn't consider K-State a diverse campus.

"At K-State, many students were brought up in an area where we all look alike," she said. "When we move and are exposed to 'different,' we shy away from it."

She sees this as a danger.

"Many students and teachers would rather stay with what they know, and this is dangerous," Babcock said. "It's dangerous for education because students are sent out without essential life skills. The best thing I can say is educate, educate, educate."

Megan Challender, senior in political science, said K-State does not resemble the function of the real world.

"The way society works doesn't stop inside of K-State," she said. "One example is the need for gender-neutral bathrooms in order to make those who would rather not identify with a specific sex comfortable."

However, Howard said the university has tried to increase diversity.

"Over the years, K-State has made a number of efforts to enhance the student body and faculty by inviting them to interview and apply for numerous positions," he said. "Hiring a more diverse staff equals a diversifying of our campus."

New flight instructors named

Chris Hannon knew he wanted to be a flight instructor after a mission trip to Zimbabwe three years ago.

A May 2005 graduate in K-State-Salina's professional pilot program, Hannon said he became serious about flying after traveling in a private aircraft over Victoria Falls, the largest curtain of water in the world.

Hannon and 10 other K-State-Salina students are new flight instructors for the 2005-06 school year. They supplement professors and help with ground and flight training. They also serve as mentors.

"It's something I've wanted to do since I got my flight instructor license," Hannon said. "It's an awesome experience watching students go up in flight by themselves."

Eligible students must have a flight instructor rating and have a minimum 2.75 grade point average. The application process also involved an interview with the selection board.

■ Chris Hannon, May 2005 graduate in professional pilot program

Bill Gross, professor in aviation and chief flight instructor, said the interview process begins the moment students enter the school. Students are evaluated on their behavior, discipline and the way they treat equipment, he said.

"Teaching flying is a tremendous experience because students ask questions that they may not have asked when they were students," Gross said. "So they are learning as well."

Gross said flight instructors must have 1,200 hours of flying time to advance to the next level of charter work with airplanes. Teaching is a good way to help them build air time.

Students work eight to 15 hours each week as flight instructors but this work is not required to graduate in the professional pilot program.

Micah Westblade, junior in professional pilot program, said learning different teaching styles is the most challenging aspect of being a flight instructor.

"Different students learn different ways, so you have to learn different teaching styles," Westblade said. "Because of this, you are also learning more about the subject."

Nick Perkins, senior in professional pilot program, said he enjoys the small-town atmosphere of being a flight instructor.

"Everyone is willing to help you out and it's a down-to-earth place to work," he said.

Working for extra money, Elizabeth Flentie, senior in marketing, models for the crowd gathered at Rusty's Outback Tuesday night. Flentie was auctioned for $50, with all the proceeds going to the Hurricane Katrina relief fund.

three girls bought him for $310.

Jeremy Woods, a cook who earned $21 with his auction, left quite an impression on the crowd of about 150 people.

At first, he was wearing a blue robe. He removed that, and a blue kitchen apron covered part of his body. Then that came off, revealing a red thong.

Moments later he pulled a rolled up sock from his only shard of clothing and held it up for the crowd to see. Half the crowd cheered, the others groaned, but most were laughing by the time Woods finished strutting.

"What Jeremy did, that was all his own doing," Anderson said.

ments on the short game, Knight said.

"I think there were fewer three-putts than we had in Wisconsin, so that was a good thing," she said. "It was better, but there's still room for improvement."

Robert, whose previous best finish was fifth last year at the Ptarmigan/Ram Classic in Fort Collins, Colo., tied that mark at the Chip-N Club. Knight said even with the placing, Robert still had some frustrations with her game.

"She had a lot of missed birdie opportunities," Knight said. "She had a lot of opportunities, but the putts weren't falling. She did a good job of staying patient."

Quick placed sixth at the tournament. Her best placing prior to this week's Chip-N Club was a tie for fifth at last year's Sunflower Invitational, Knight said.

"She drove the ball well, but her putting held her back," she said.

The next challenge for K-State will be the Sunflower Invitational, Oct. 10-11, at Colbert Hills Golf Course.

Preparation for the Sunflower Invitational, Knight said, is about confidence.

"They will go out and need to spend as much time on the course as possible," she said. "They're going to need to really feel confident with their game."

DeLay indicted for finance conspiracy

By Larry Margasak
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON – A Texas grand jury on Wednesday charged Rep. Tom DeLay and two political associates with conspiracy in a campaign finance scheme, forcing the House majority leader to temporarily relinquish his post. A defiant DeLay insisted he was innocent and called the prosecutor a "partisan fanatic."

DeLay
FORMER HOUSE MAJORITY LEADER

"I have done nothing wrong ... I am innocent," DeLay said during a Capitol Hill news conference in which he criticized the Texas prosecutor, Ronnie Earle, repeatedly. DeLay called Earle an "unabashed partisan zealot," and "fanatic," and described the charges as "one of the weakest and most baseless indictments in American history."

The indictment accused DeLay, 58, of a conspiracy to violate Texas election law,

Administrator to testify on farmers' behalf

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas State University is being represented today in Washington, D.C., by Samuel Funk, the administrator of the Kansas Farm Management Programs at K-State.

Funk will testify on General Farm Commodities and Risk Management for the House Committee on Agriculture so farmers can have cheaper gas prices after the wake of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

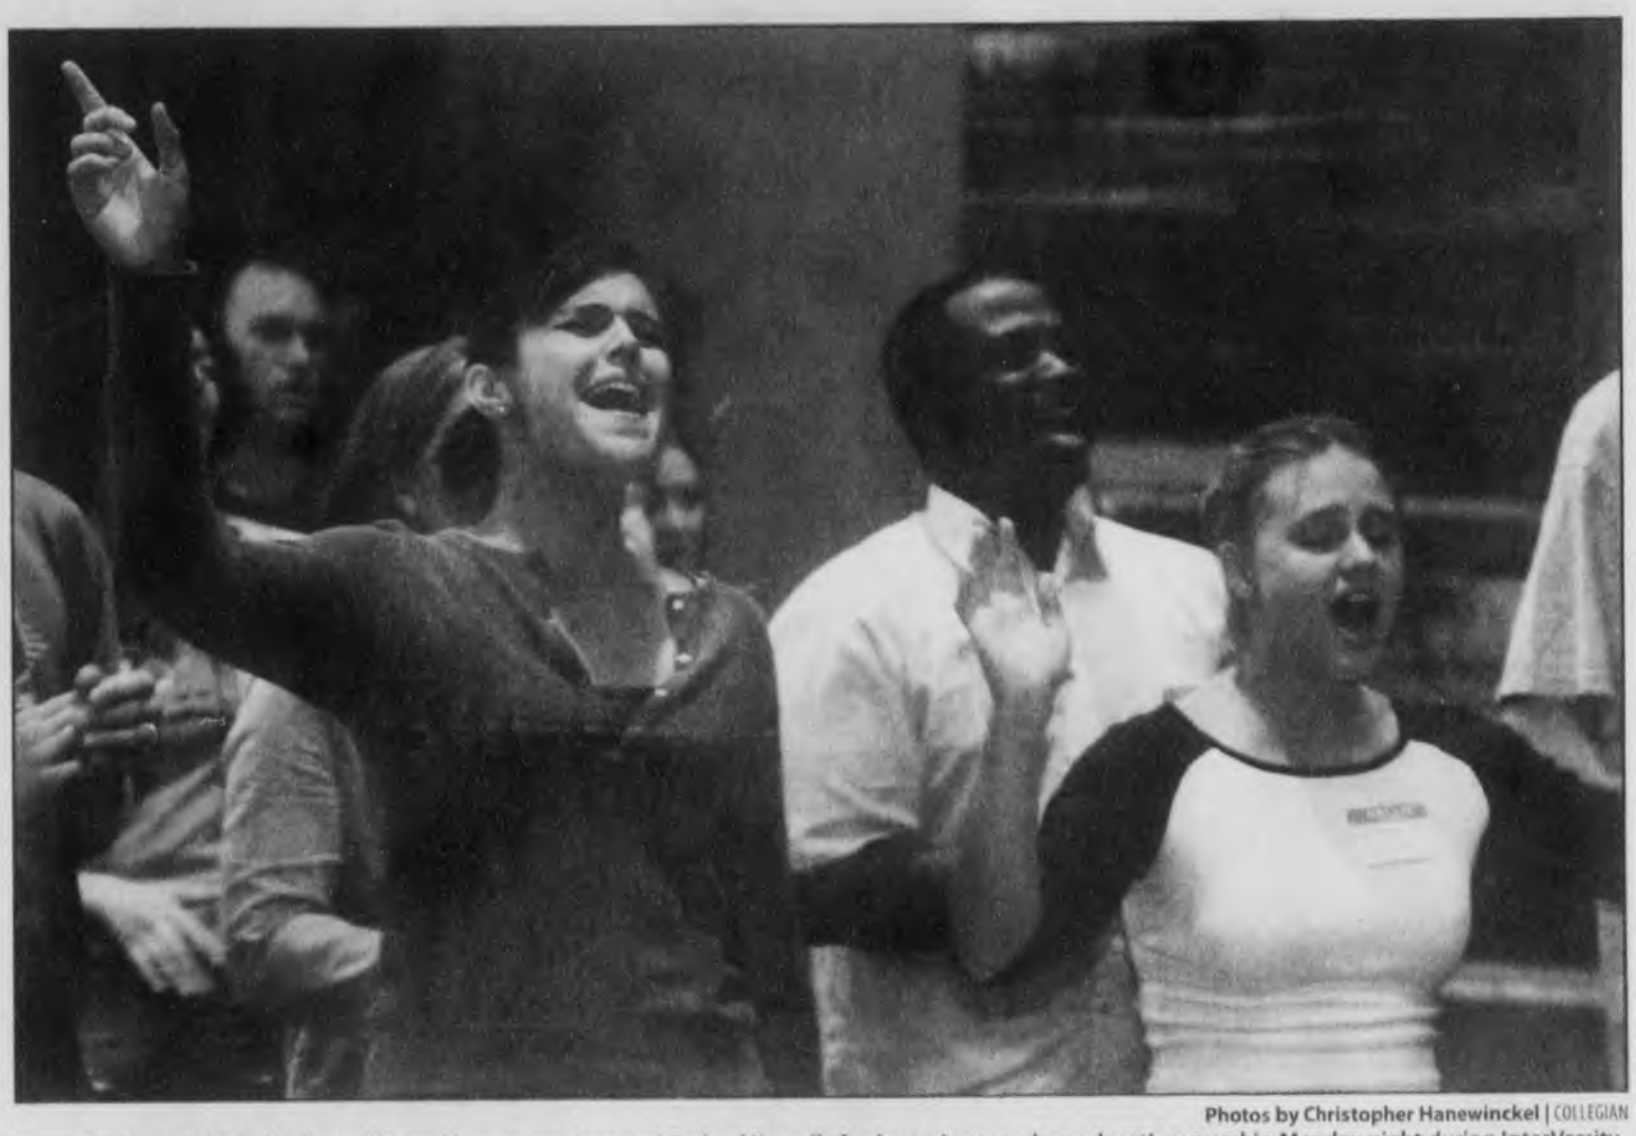
Funk
FARM MANAGEMENT ADMINISTRATOR

The report, co-authored by Funk, Kevin Dhuyvetter, professor of agricultural economics, Terry Kastens and Michael Langemeier, both professors of agricultural economics, is titled "An Assessment of the State of the Agricultural Economy in Increase Energy Prices Associated with Hurricanes Katrina and Rita."

It contains data concerning the increased costs of fuel and oil, irrigation energy and fertilizer as used by Kansas farmers.

Other states are also sending delegates to testify, Funk said.

K-State was chosen to testify in front of the committee chaired by U.S. Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., because of the expertise of the department of agricultural economics, Funk said.



"We have some of the best data available," Funk said.

Mark Sylvester, farmer in Leonardville, Kan., said he hopes the sub-committee will realize the need for domestic oil and stop relying so much on foreign oil.

He said he is concerned about next year's crop and how he is going to finance the fuel and fertilizer he needs.

Since he prepaid for his diesel fuel last spring, the price he paid was significantly less than what farmers are spending now. However, he said his supply could run out before harvest is over.

"When that's gone, that's really going to bite," Sylvester said.

FAITH ON CAMPUS

The first of a five-part series exploring the beliefs of religious groups on campus.

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Campus Christians have several options when it comes to picking a religious group to join, but InterVarsity Christian Fellowship may offer something others don't.

"I like InterVarsity Christian Fellowship because it's not as big as some other Christian organizations on campus," Mandy Gramkow, senior in agricultural communications, said. "InterVarsity has a family feel to it. These people are my closest friends, and they're just good people to be surrounded by."

The smaller size allows students to interact on a personal level, Lucas McGarity, sophomore in secondary education, said.

"The relationships you build seem more substantial and comfortable," McGarity said. "Not that the other campus groups don't do it, but we try to build lasting relationships, and I think we do a good job because we're smaller."

Members of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship participate in an ice breaker activity. After worship, the group did an activity and listened to the featured speaker's message for the night.

K-State's InterVarsity group started in 1947 when a small group of students gathered to study the Bible in an Aggieville soda shop.

The organization's program director, Wade Weber, said since then, InterVarsity has offered a place where Christian students can gather to learn and to worship.

Weber was a pre-engineering major when he first started college, but after two years of involvement

Parking garage proposal moves on to Regents

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite a thumbs down by Faculty Senate, plans for an $18.8 million parking garage south of the K-State Student Union are expected to be presented at the Kansas Board of Regents October meeting.

Tom Herald, president of Faculty Senate, said a big concern at the Faculty Senate meeting earlier this month was the proposed cost increase for parking permits.

Parking Services proposed price increases for parking permits to help pay for the garage. Starting next fall, student parking permits would increase $25 each year for three years, doubling the current $75 fee to $150 for non-garage permits. The proposed cost of student garage permits was $200. Faculty and staff permits will increase $34 each year for three years, doubling the fee to $200.

Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president division of human resources and parking, said the proposed increase isn't much different than what other schools have, such as the University of Kansas, the University of Nebraska and the University of Missouri.

"With the increases we would be pretty close to average among those schools," he said.

However, Herald said what matters to those who will be paying the increased prices is the bottom line.

"When you see it on paper it makes sense to be in that price range compared to other schools, but when you have to pay for it people aren't happy," Herald said.

Leitnaker said the Parking Council is going to look at the permit prices and try to address Faculty Senate's concerns.

Classified Senate President Paula Connors said she couldn't comment on what her organization's stance on the issue was because it has not yet been addressed since she became president Sept. 1.

"It is on our agenda of things that need to be discussed," she said.

Herald said even if the proposal moves on to regents there are still no guarantees a garage will be built.

"At any point the whole thing could fall apart," he said.

This Is what I think it means to "Own Your Life":
When you subtract out the sleeping time, commuting time, working time, and things you have to do each and every day of your life, most people don't have more than one to two hours a day to do what they would like to do-and then, would they have the money to do it?
We have discovered a way a person can learn how to "Own their life" by building a home-based business; and we have a system for doing it that is so simple anyone can do it. It doesn't require selling, and the best part is it won't take much of your time. If you are interested you can E-mail or call me and I will get you some information.

Seat belt fines protect students

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About two years ago, Kim Burkdoll, junior in accounting and Spanish, rolled her car about two and a half times.

Burkdoll's 1999 Dodge Avenger was totaled.

If she hadn't been wearing her seat belt, she would have been killed.

"Seat belts save lives. They saved my life," Burkdoll said.

Fines for not wearing seat belts could rise in the near future, state officials said on Sept. 12 at the Bicentennial Center in Salina, Kan., the Salina Journal reported.

Currently, those caught without a seat belt can be fined various amounts, depending on whether they are in the city of Manhattan, Riley County or on the K-State campus.

The fine for an adult caught without their seat belt in the city of Manhattan is currently $1, including court costs.

Court costs in Manhattan and Riley County are $59.

In Riley County, the cost is $10 plus court fees.

"I think they probably should be higher," Amy Noonen, sophomore in pre-nursing, said.

Kansas has a secondary seatbelt law, which states persons can receive a ticket for a seat belt violation only if they are cited for another infraction.

However, while seat belt violations for adults are a secondary offense, seat belt violations for children under the age of 14 are considered a primary offense, and carry a stiffer penalty, Sgt. Tim Schuck of the Riley County Police Department said.

Children younger than 4 years old are required to be in a safety seat. From the ages of four to 14, the use of a seat belt is required by Kansas law.

The fine for having an unrestrained child in the car is $20 in addition to court costs.

While Kansas has a secondary law of only $10, with no court costs for the seat belt violation, the initial primary violation may carry court costs.

K-State fines violators $10, in addition to court fees, Capt. Richard Herrman, patrol commander at the K-State Police Department said.

It is a secondary offense, as K-State is run by the State of Kansas.

Fining students for seat belt violations on campus isn't usually a regular occurrence, said Herrman.

Since the officers arrive on the scene of accidents after they occur, the people are usually already out of the vehicles, Herrman said.

He said it is also necessary to take into account the average age of the students on campus and the use of seat belts.

"I remember when I was that age, I was invincible," Herrman said.

K-State police dispatcher releases 2nd novel

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He answers phone calls to the K-State Police, but his alter ego writes romance novels.

Adam Catlin, campus police dispatcher, will be signing his two romance books next Saturday at Waldenbooks.

"You Only Live Once," Catlin's latest romance novel, portrays a small-town newspaper editor who faces a personal and professional crisis before Christmas.

The novel, set in Conway Springs, Kan., got its start as a short story when Catlin lived in Wichita seven years ago.

"I would drive down to Conway Springs whenever I got the chance," he said. "I went to soak up the atmosphere and got to know the area."

Joan Ast, junior in French and philosophy, said she and Catlin collaborated via e-mail on the novel since she is from Conway Springs.

If you go

Name of event here
What: Book signing
When: 1-3 p.m., Oct. 1
Where: Waldenbooks in Manhattan Town Center
How much: "Until August": $24.95; "You Only Live Once": $16.95
Both novels are available at Hastings, Waldenbooks and Varney's Book Store.

"A lot of the novel was already written when he contacted me," Ast said. "We mostly talked about the historic Springhouse in Conway Springs for his novel."

Catlin, a native Kansan, said his passion for writing started in the second grade.

He said he chose Kansas as the setting for his novels because it is an under-appreciated state.

"Kansas has always gotten the bum rap," Catlin said. "I wanted to put a fresh spin to tell a familiar tale in my novels."

Catlin said he worked for several days a week for three hours a day on both novels.

His first novel, "Until August," took about a year and a half to complete. "You Only Live Once" took seven years to complete.

Jason Blackburn, campus police dispatcher and Catlin's co-worker, said he enjoyed the Kansas setting of "Until August." He said K-State students would enjoy the novel as well.

"I think students should read his novels because some of the locations mentioned will provide hometown interests," Blackburn said.

Catlin said he is working on a third novel, a romantic thriller.

The projected release date is September 2006.

But his talents aren't limited to writing novels. Catlin also won the Best Original Screenplay Award from the Southwestern College Film Department in 2000.

Catlin graduated from Southwestern College in 2003 with a degree in mass communications.

He graduated from K-State with a master's in English and creative writing last spring.

Catlin said K-State students would enjoy reading his novels since they are geared toward the college age group.

"They help paint a positive picture of life here in Kansas and all that it entails," he said.

Books, electronics often-stolen items

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Computers, iPods, bikes, cameras, textbooks, cash.

When students move from home to a school residence, they bring some expensive items with them – and make a thief's dream come true.

The Independent Insurance Agents of America reported college campuses see more than 100,000 property crimes annually, with an average property loss of $1,250. And not all students are insured.

According to K-State Police statistics, there were 219 incidents of theft reported to the campus police from Sept. 26, 2004 to Sept. 26, 2005. Theft, by definition, is the wrongful taking of property without violence, threat or plunder.

Of these crimes, 192 resulted in less than $1,000 in property loss, but 19 involved the loss of $1,000 to $25,000. More than $25,000 in property was stolen in two incidents.

There were also 86 reports of criminal damage to property, according to the statistics.

In the residence halls, Jayme Uden, Moore Hall residence life coordinator, said textbooks are the most frequently stolen item.

"Especially once we get to the end of the semester, a lot of books go missing," he said. "At the end of the semester, it's going to occur a lot more."

Uden said there are not a large number of thefts in Moore, but often students don't report them. However, when they do, they call the campus police.

Campus police captain Troy Lane said when the campus police are called, officers issue a report and, if they have a description of the stolen items, they enter the property in both a national crime computer system and the department's own system. The campus police sends the report to the state level but still follows the case.

Lane said the department averages a 25 to 30 percent return rate on stolen items. He said the national average is about 15 percent.

Rachel Labrie, manager of Chase Manhattan Apartments, said there have been a few cases of theft this year. The cases are handled through the Riley County Police Department.

She said the most frequently stolen item is cash and the perpetrator is usually someone the victim knows, like an acquaintance or a roommate's friend. And many thefts occur because students leave valuable, easy-to-take items in sight, Labrie said.

"It's not like people are casing the area," she said. "It's not really random."

Chase Manhattan Apartments has taken steps to make the area safer. Labrie said the management reminds tenets to lock their doors and windows and not to leave spare keys outside the door. The apartment complex also has a courtesy officer who monitors the area from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. Wednesday through Sunday nights.

The management at Chase Manhattan Apartments also suggests its tenets purchase renter's insurance, Labrie said, but it isn't required.

Renter's insurance covers loss from theft, fire, wind, hail, water damage and smoke, said Kim Warren, office manager for Gene Warren State Farm.

She said she sees the most claims of loss from theft and then from fire. Kim Warren said the agency has a number of students with renter's policies.

The annual cost depends on if the residence is in town or in the country and how much coverage the student wants. She said $20,000 in coverage with a $500 deductible costs $120 yearly. Students can also be covered by their parents' insurance policies, up to the limit of that policy.

To avoid theft, campus police emphasize the importance of having and using locks and alarm systems, of reporting suspicious activity to the campus police or the Riley County Police Department and of engraving valuable items like stereos or televisions.

TO THE POINT

Farmers deserve fuel price break for harvest

Living in the state of Kansas means never-ending "Wizard of Oz" references and often seeing farmland all the way to the horizon.

Harvests are usually difficult to miss when driving through those farm-filled areas of the state because of the large combines raking in acres of wheat, corn, soybeans and other agricultural commodities.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

These large vehicles obviously need fuel to operate just as cars, trucks and mopeds do.

According to a K-State Media Relations and Marketing press release, crop producers will pay about $1 more per gallon of diesel fuel during this fall harvesting and planting season.

With these cost increases, farmers should be allowed to pay less for the diesel fuel used in the process of keeping the masses fed.

The House Committee on Agriculture is hearing testimony today from people from several states, including Kansas.

In the wake of the devastation after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, it is important Congress not allow another critical industry to be hampered by soaring fuel and energy costs.

It is important for the farmers who rely on that fuel to harvest crops and feed millions of people to receive the help they need.

Give these hard-working Americans the price break they desperately need.

Staying disconnected

Keep the church and state separate for safety of all

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

There have been a lot of religious discussions lately – the Ten Commandments, "under God" being in the Pledge of Allegiance and intelligent design in schools. But, lucky for those of us who don't want religion imposed on the rest of the population, there is a simple solution; the first amendment includes the establishment clause that has been interpreted to mean the separation of church and state.

I'll admit, being from a small, western Kansas town, it took me a long time to realize how keeping the religion out of politics could be such a good thing. It had always been simple; if people lived like God wanted them to, then everything would be peachy. But, when it comes to politics and religion, it seems nothing will ever be that simple.

In America, when no solution will appease everyone involved, you can't always just say majority rules. The best thing that can usually be done is to protect the minority. That is exactly what separation of church and state does.

Still think "under God" belongs in the Pledge of Allegiance? Try walking a mile in the shoes of one of the smaller religions in America and picture your children pledging one nation, under Allah.

Or would you care about posting Buddhist scriptures in public places instead of the Ten Commandments?

And sure, I may believe in intelligent design, but other religions believe in reincarnation. So, unless you are perfectly okay with having your kids come home talking about wanting to be a wolf in their next life, you shouldn't even start talking about wanting intelligent design in public schools.

But these are all only minor inconveniences when it comes to what separation of church and state really does for us. In fact, one could argue that it's the main difference between what we are today and what Osama Bin Laden wants us to be tomorrow.

This is what happened when the Islamic Emirate of Afghanistan was established by the Taliban in 1996. After that, we saw what happens when religious radicals get their hands on a government without separation of church and state. The people of Afghanistan were stoned for adultery and hands were amputated for theft. The men had to keep their beards at a certain length and women were forced to wear face-coverings.

Today, the Taliban's close connection al-Qaeda wants to impose similar laws on us. Some of the demands they have made of America are the banning of alcohol and gambling, removal of images of women in advertising, and forcible conversion of the population to Islam.

These are the true people separation of church and state protects us from.

We need to keep it as strong as possible. We can't allow something this powerful to die just because you want others to read the Ten Commandments of your church on public property.

Society overlooks white privilege

ANNETTE LAWLESS

Every morning is a ritual. I wake up, take a shower, brush my teeth and put on my makeup. And while I mask my aesthetically challenged features, I notice one thing my Abercrombie jeans and Clinique makeup cannot hide: my ethnicity, my Vietnamese-American heritage.

Ever since I was little, I had been trying to fit in, pushing myself into a Caucasian identity. Sometimes I did this by sporting a more American-style wardrobe or with my perfectly pink makeup. I knew it was a safe place, pretending to be white.

In an article titled "White Privilege: Unpacking the Invisible Knapsack," author Peggy McIntosh argued, as a white person, that society taught her about racism as something that puts others at a disadvantage but taught her not to believe it puts her at an advantage.

At an early age, American schools teach children about the growth of the United States, how we have overcome slavery and racism, war and famine. Teachers parade around, preaching that America has matured beyond an era of a divided, discriminatory country.

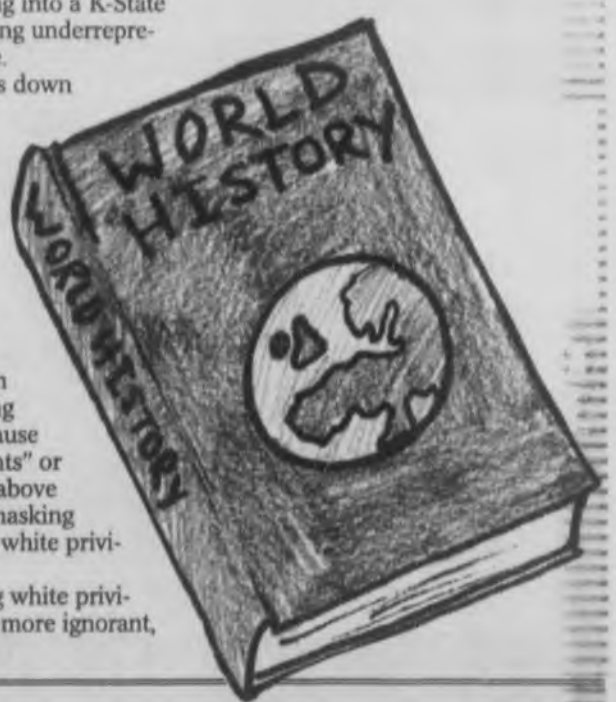
But no matter how many civil rights lectures and affirmative action speeches emerge, one thing is still true: America is not as simple as black and white. While segregation and hate crimes are less apparent today, the color of one's skin does discriminate.

True, 250 years ago, no black person could earn a higher education, let alone any education in American schools. Today, the United States gives all people the right to an education. Despite the educational progress, the Census Bureau reports black men with bachelor's degrees earn approximately $11,000 less per year than their white counterparts.

And true, the United States gives blacks, Latinos, Asians and other cultural groups official holidays to celebrate their heritage. If America is a true melting pot, why should celebrating the heritage of our nation's citizens be restricted to one single holiday?

Besides, the message of the Martin Luther King Jr., "I Have a Dream" speech should not be limited to a single day. We should take the great lessons from him, Rosa Parks and the many other men and women who have contributed to the advancement of our civil rights.

We, students at K-State, residents of Manhattan and citizens of the United States, have fallen into a trap. Society has fooled us to believing that race is an obstacle.



White students do not have to worry about walking into a K-State classroom and feeling underrepresented by their race.

Whites can dress down and wear second hand clothing without others blaming the disadvantage on their race or poor upbringing.

White pride is all around. It is not necessarily a bad thing, but when people start ignoring discrimination because "we have Civil Rights" or that "we've grown above that," we are only masking what is truly there: white privilege.

Underestimating white privilege only makes us more ignorant, overlooking what's truly there and not accepting each other for what we are worth.

Women go out in groups to protect themselves

Editor,

I come to campus two days a week, and the one day I decide to actually read a Collegian article, sadly enough it was "'Wing Women' should back off, let friends have fun." How dare you imply some women are "sex deprived chastity belts."

Women go out in groups or with their friends in order to protect ourselves from pompous, testosterone-driven men such as yourself. You imply that it is OK for men to go out with other men in order to prevent each other from having fist fights, but when women go out with other women in order to protect ourselves from rape, we are considered "sex deprived chastity belts"?

I don't know what kind of "friends" you have, or who these "girls" that you spoke to were, but maybe next time you should talk with a real woman, and not just girls.

Friends who watch other friends when they go out are not trying to "keep couples" from having sex, but are watching out for their best interests, as was requested from the initial friend.

Furthermore, I think it is sad and pathetic that you think that the only reason women drink, much less go out, is in order to "get laid."

I know that the reason I go out is in order to see people I have not seen in awhile.

Maybe it's the assumptions of people like Mr. Becker, that when a woman drinks, she clearly wants to have sex, that makes the rest of our culture afraid of the possibility of being date raped.

'New man' carries baggage

Editor,

I just finished your article in the Sept. 21 Collegian. As just one man among more than 10,000 on campus, I thought you would like another view on the "new man."

The fascination with being a metrosexual escapes me. Great skin, coordinating clothing and spending $25 on a face wash? Or $150 on a pair of jeans?

What good can possibly come of this? Or do I need to look good (according to someone else) to feel comfortable as me?

Why is it that women (such as yourself) want a man "who knows how to dress and style his hair and still embodies the idea of a rugged man in the bedroom"? Have women become as shallow as men? It seems to me the "new man" is basically a man, repackaged with all the dreadful baggage that is imposed on women.

Do you really want a man that has the same issues too many women have?

Some men have indeed become more effete in manner and dress, but believing that you can understand men by consulting Esquire or www.askmen.com is just as fallacious as me attempting to understand women by consulting Cosmo or www.oprah.com.

Yes, some men will invariably fall into those categories.

Continue to be confused if you want. Otherwise, I recommend just taking us each as individuals. Isn't that what you want for yourself?

Religious ideal still stands for freedom

Editor,

After reading Jonas Hogg's article in Tuesday's edition of the Collegian, I wondered to myself whether or not he had actually ever been to school, or, more specifically, a history class.

The people that settled this country fled from religious persecution in England and decided to stake everything on preserving their beliefs. They sailed across the Atlantic Ocean in small wooden ships with sails and oars. When they finally arrived, they endured many more hardships, but they stuck with it and survived, all for their ideal of religion.

Years later, the colonies were still being persecuted by England in the form of taxes and supplies. They rebelled against the English crown and forced it out of America. The soldiers fighting the British needed an ideal to believe in while fighting to keep morale up. The "thread and dye" Jonas so freely shuns was that ideal. It stood, and still does stand, for freedom.

The citizens of the United States are patriotic because they honor the sacrifices their ancestors made to make this country what it is. The Pledge of Allegiance was written to honor them as well. The phrase "under God" was added to the pledge because America was founded "under God" – like it or not. Quit writing articles just because you want some attention, and give your country the respect it deserves.

Roberts right choice to succeed Rehnquist

Editor,

Over Labor Day weekend, Chief Justice William Rehnquist died from thyroid cancer. President Bush nominated D.C. Circuit Judge John Roberts to succeed Rehnquist as the next Chief Justice of the United States.

Roberts was born in 1955 in Buffalo, N.Y., but grew up in Indiana with his three sisters, attending Catholic schools. Roberts graduated summa cum laude in history from Harvard in three years and magna cum laude from Harvard Law School.

He then clerked for Judge Henry Friendly and Chief Justice Rehnquist. Roberts served in the Reagan and first Bush Administrations, was a superb Supreme Court litigator (winning 25 of 39 cases), and earned a reputation as a brilliant and meticulous lawyer.

After two years as a federal judge, he was nominated to the Supreme Court (originally to succeed Justice Sandra Day O'Connor).

Roberts is expected to write thoughtful opinions, demonstrate judicial restraint and humility, and be a great chief justice. At his confirmation hearings, Roberts endorsed a right to privacy but avoided questions about abortion, affirmative action, the death penalty, and other controversies.

At 50, he would be the youngest chief justice since John Marshall, is married to a lawyer and has two young children. When the court returns in October, Roberts will ascend to the center seat, following the pronouncement "God save the United States and this honorable court."

May Roberts enjoy a long and pleasant career on the Supreme Court.

Column ill-informed

Editor,

I found it ironic that Tuesday's ill-informed diatribe by Kody Cooper was published on the same day as an article in the London Times entitled "Societies worse off 'when they have God on their side'."

This article concerned a study of the damage done to American society by religion. It found that among the societal ills, religion contributes to is higher murder, suicide and teen pregnancy rates, and "adolescent gonorrhea rates 300 times higher than in less devout democratic countries."

It is clear that religion is not the cure for society's problems and that atheists are at least as moral people as theists.

If Mr. Cooper's morals are relative to what his religion tells him they should be, rather than what is good for his neighbors then that is his right.

But he should not spout hypocrisy about loving them and nor should he try to impose those damaging morals on the rest of us.

Professor researches cystic fibrosis cure

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

John Tomich is trying to treat a currently incurable disease.

Tomich, professor of biochemistry, is researching treatments for cystic fibrosis.

According to the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, the disease is genetic and affects about 30,000 people in the United States. A defective gene causes mucus to become abnormally sticky and thick, clogging the lungs and leading to lung infections that can be life-threatening. The disease can also affect the liver, pancreas, intestines and other organs.

Since there is no cure for cystic fibrosis, the disease is treated differently depending on the individual. Treatment usually includes medications and a combination of respiratory treatments.

Tomich is working with several K-State students to develop a better treatment for the disease.

"It's been an area of interest for a long time," Tomich said. "CF affects respiratory tissues that are easy to get at in terms of drug delivery. The actual cells affected line the airway, and an inhalant (treatment) would go right to the target membranes that contain the genetic defect."

Tomich said the disease is caused by a defect in a channel protein.

"We thought we could deliver a synthetic channel to that surface," he said.

Tomich said the researchers' general hypothesis is to deliver peptide into the airway membrane affected by cystic fibrosis. The peptide would restore normal chloride transport. This is doable, he said, but there are other important issues.

"One issue is the question of safety," Tomich said. "Is it safe to give this compound for the rest of (the patient's) life? It would have to be given regularly, if not multiple times a day. However, we're not sure on the dosage yet."

Another issue is the body's response to the treatment.

"We're not sure how the body will react to repeated exposure," he said. "We would not want a negative immune reaction."

Maria De Leon-Arizpe, senior in sociology, works as an undergraduate technician in the laboratory.

"The research is a great opportunity to learn a lot," she said. "Everyone should get a feel for the research side, and see what happens when you're trying to figure out a health problem like this."

Tomich said his team is working to understand a micro dissection of the channel, what he called "the business part of the molecule." This part does the bonding of the chloride as it passes through.

"We make a long tube and analyze sections along the tube," he said.

"We're hoping that we can isolate the active components and rebuild them using organic chemicals so ultimately we don't have to administer peptide material. If we can do that, the body is less likely to reject or even react, because it is less likely with organic material."

Shawna Frazier, graduate student in biochemistry, has worked with Tomich for almost two years.

Her job is to determine the active components and then re-engineer them to create the most efficient synthetic channel drug.

"It's a channel disease," she said. "A protein forms the channel and doesn't work properly."

However, she said it is hard to draw conclusions at this point.

"Things are still preliminary," she said.

Frazier enjoys the research.

"I love my project," she said. "Not a lot of people are taking this approach in finding a treatment, and knowing that it will potentially help others is exciting."

Klimova returns from season-ending knee injury

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Olga Klimova returns a volley during practice. Klimova returned to action after injuring her ACL last January. K-State will be back in action in the Indiana Hoosier Classic this weekend.

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team received an unexpected surprise last weekend when it opened up the season at the Missouri Invitational.

Aside from defeating two Big 12 Conference opponents in head-to-head competition, the Wildcats saw the return of Olga Klimova.

Klimova, who tore her ACL in a match against BYU in January, was originally not expected to return to competition until Nov. 4, when K-State travels to Tempe, Ariz., for the ASU Thunderbird Invitational.

"She's ahead in terms of getting back on the court," coach Steve Bietau said. "Now you have to temper that a little bit in that she's playing doubles, and we do that because you don't have to run as much in doubles."

Despite a speedy recovery, Klimova is still not completely healthy. Bietau said right now, Klimova is working on conditioning and the mental awareness needed in matches.

"The running is less of a factor, and it lets her get into matches and get her competitive juices going and get her out there playing," Bietau said. "She's not ready, she's still not in good shape, but she's ahead of where we thought she might be at this point."

Klimova said she has been working on getting strength back in her leg by training her quadriceps and playing more matches to build endurance.

"I have to come back by working on fitness and playing more than usual," Klimova said.

Klimova, now a sophomore, played solid in the fall of her freshman year, notching a 7-5 singles record to go with an 8-4 doubles record.

"I was projecting at the end of last fall that she could play in the No. 3 position and do pretty well, and possibly play No. 1 doubles," Bietau said.

Klimova showed some endurance, going 4-2 in matches that reached the third set.

"She was 4-2 against a pretty good level of competition," Bietau said. "Those weren't weak players. She was doing pretty well there, but she could

INT | Deadline nears for golf tourney, wrestling

K-State students have until 5 p.m., Oct. 6, to sign up for the intramural student golf tournament and the wrestling meet at the Peters Recreation Complex.

The golf tournament will consist of 18 holes to be played at Stagg Hill Golf Course, located west of Manhattan.

Teams can enter in the fraternity division, which will play Oct. 9, or for residence hall, independent and women's divisions, to be played Oct. 16.

There will be a fee of $1.08 (including tax) per person, in addition to green fees of $20.50 per person.

The Wrestling Meet will be Oct. 10-13. Entries will be accepted for individuals or teams consisting of a maximum of 10 participants in divisions of fraternity, residence hall, independent and women. The entry fee is also $1.08 (including tax) per person.

For more information, call 532-6980, or visit the administrative office at the Rec Complex.

VBL | K-State moves Texas A&M, Iowa State matches

K-State volleyball announced Wednesday the times of its next two home volleyball matches have changed.

Saturday's match against No. 23 Texas A&M has been moved from a 7 p.m. to 1 p.m., due to the K-State vs. Oklahoma football game.

K-State has also adjusted its Oct. 8 match with Iowa State from 7 p.m. to 4 p.m. This time change is pending approval from the Big 12 Conference.

The match will be played in Bramlage Coliseum following the Sunflower Showdown between Kansas and K-State at KSU Stadium at 11 a.m.

Any fan with a football ticket stub will be allowed into Bramlage Coliseum for $1. Students will be admitted free with a valid K-State ID.

NFL | McNabb hopes to play through pain Sunday

PHILADELPHIA — Donovan McNabb tossed touchdown passes on a broken ankle and played an NFC title game with an agonizing rib injury.

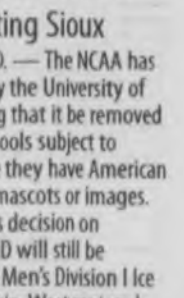
McNabb

Now, McNabb is taking his biggest health risk yet: playing with a severe abdominal strain that likely will need surgery and definitely will leave the five-time Pro Bowl quarterback in discomfort and pain all season.

Trainer Rick Burkholder said rest will not fix the problem and McNabb can play if he can handle the pain.

McNabb, who practiced Wednesday, does not have to be sidelined now for the sports hernia.

SPT | NCAA: North Dakota can't use Fighting Sioux



BISMARCK, N.D. — The NCAA has denied an appeal by the University of North Dakota asking that it be removed from a list of 18 schools subject to restrictions because they have American Indian nicknames, mascots or images.

The NCAA in its decision on Wednesday said UND will still be allowed to host the Men's Division I Ice Hockey Championship, West regional, on March 24-25, 2006 at Ralph Engelstad Arena. The NCAA said it "was not reasonable to cover up or remove all of the Native American imagery in the arena."

NCAA spokesman Bob Williams said Wednesday that the school did not have the support of the three federally recognized Sioux tribes of North Dakota to use the "Fighting Sioux" nickname and logo.

CFB | Fulmer makes the call: Clausen will start Saturday

Tennessee coach Phil Fulmer said Wednesday morning that Rick Clausen will start at quarterback against Mississippi on Saturday.

Clausen

"We're trying to stop this business," Fulmer said of rotating Clausen and Erik Ainge.

Clausen helped Tennessee rally from a big deficit against LSU and got the Volunteers back in the Southeastern Conference race.

Clausen came off the bench to replace Ainge against fourth-ranked LSU on Monday, and the senior co-captain rallied 10th-ranked Tennessee (2-1, 1-1) to a 30-27 overtime victory.

Yankees will beat Braves for World Series crown

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

With a week remaining in Major League Baseball's regular season, I thought I would give updates and predictions in the "Hunt for October."

The playoffs consist of eight teams: three division winners and one wild card from the National League and the American League.

In the American League, only one playoff spot has been determined.

The Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim (91-66) have clinched the West with a dominating 9-1 record in their last 10 games as of Tuesday.

The three remaining spots are still up for grabs.

The New York Yankees (93-65) are one game ahead of the Boston Red Sox (92-66) in the East, while the struggling Chicago White Sox (95-63) are three games ahead of the surging Cleveland Indians (92-66) in the Central.

The National League is not as complicated, but is still packed with drama.

In the Central Division, the St. Louis Cardinals (97-62) have clinched their division and home-field advantage throughout the playoffs.

The Atlanta Braves (90-69) won their 14th consecutive division title, which is an amazing feat considering the next closest streak in baseball history is the Yankees current streak of seven consecutive division titles.

The San Diego Padres (78-79) and San Francisco Giants (74-83) were battling Wednesday night for the West title. If the Padres held on to their 5-0 lead over the Giants in the sixth inning, they clinched the division.

The wild card race in the NL will come down to the Houston Astros (87-71) and the Philadelphia Phillies (85-74).

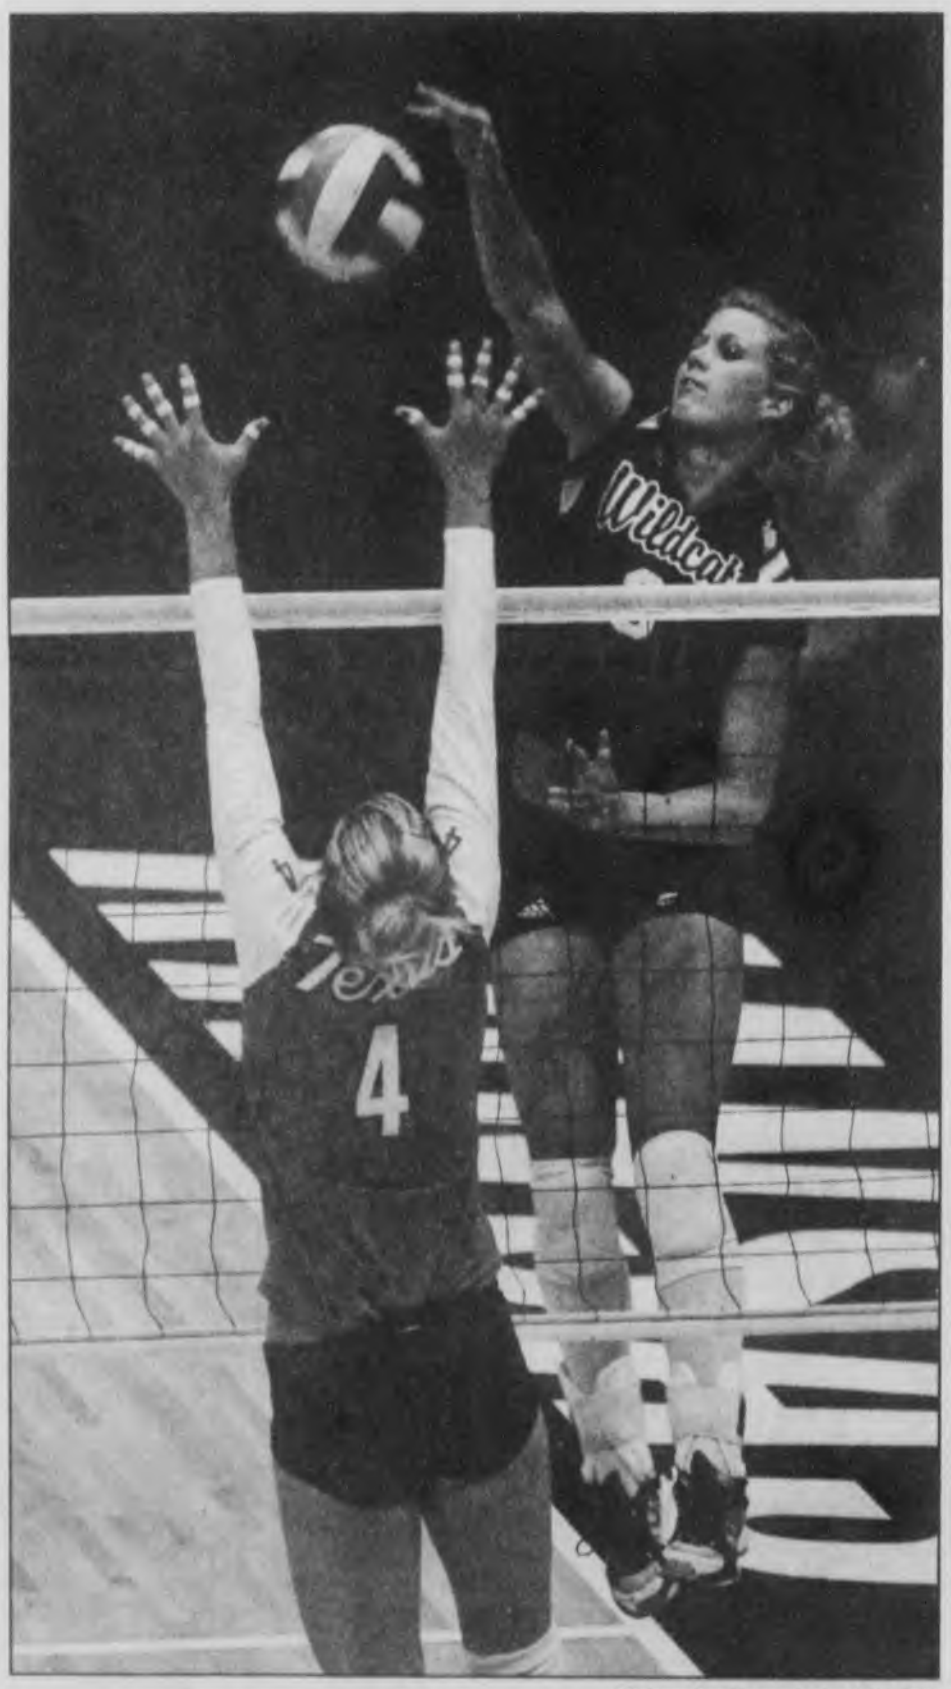
That being said, the four teams representing the American League will be the Angels (West), Red Sox (East), White Sox (Central) and Yankees (wild card).

The Red Sox play the rest of their games at home, while the Yankees' remaining games are all on the road, with the final four against Boston at Fenway Park. The Red Sox will prevail in the East, with the Yankees winning just enough to take the wild card from the Indians, who do not have enough games left to catch the White Sox.

The Cardinals (Central), Braves (East), Padres (West) and Astros (wild card) will comprise the teams vying for the chance to represent the National League in the World Series.

The Padres will barely hold on to their division and will end the season with a losing record, and the Astros' pitching will be enough to hold off the Phillies for the wild card.

The Red Sox went into the playoffs last year as the wild card and went on to win the World Series.



The Yankees will repeat that feat this year, taking out the Braves in six games.

This should make for an interesting final week of baseball.

Let the debating begin.

Conference woes

Junior outside hitter Sandy Werner spikes the ball past Texas' Michelle Moriarty during the second game Wednesday night. Werner had 11 kills, but that wasn't enough as the Wildcats lost their second straight conference match 3-0.

Texas sweeps K-State at home

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If the volleyball team's loss to Missouri on Saturday hurt, then Wednesday night's loss to Texas stung.

Texas defeated the Wildcats 3-0 (30-23, 30-23, 30-28) in front of a season-high crowd of 1,439, marking K-State's second consecutive sweep by a Big 12 Conference foe.

"It's pretty tough because we're working so hard to win games and string success, and we're not doing it," sophomore libero Angie Lastra said. "It's kind of hard to work for it and not obtain the results, but we're going to continue to work hard and try to win a couple of games."

So the question looms – what exactly is wrong with the No. 16 Cats?

"Our inability to string success is the best answer I think I can give," Fritz said. "We have to learn to play good volleyball over the course of time."

Short offensive spurts weren't the only problems. The Longhorn height was a factor, but more importantly, a slow start and lack of aggression proved problematic for the Wildcats, junior outside hitter Sandy Werner said.

"We played tentative at the start of the game and got a little better, but it was too late," Werner said. "There were a bunch of factors, like communication errors and things like that."

In a tough conference, Fritz said unforced errors are unacceptable.

"If you give them one, they're

Wildcats set for 1st combined show

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Equestrian team will ride into the unknown this weekend.

The Wildcats will host Saturday to South Dakota State at the K-State Varsity Combined Show at Manhattan's Fox Creek Stables, and coach Teresa Slough said the format will be different from any other show K-State competes in.

The team will ride in events it has not competed in before, including a trail competition for western riders and an Affiliated National Riding Commission Programmed Ride for English riders.

This is also the team's first combined show of the season, where English and western riders compete at the same time.

Slough said the combined shows are more complicated from a coaching standpoint, since riders compete outside and inside.

"I can't be at both arenas watching all of our riders compete, which complicates things," Slough said.

Along with the complications of a combined show, Slough said there are advantages and disadvantages to hosting shows.

"There is a huge advantage in riding your own horses, you know how the horses respond," Slough said, "At the same time, if you don't know what to expect from the horses, you are more focused."

Lauren Demmel, English rider, said she prefers home shows to going on the road.

"At home, we have the home-field advantage, we know the horses; that's a huge help," Demmel said, "We have some of the best horses in the region. That definitely makes it better."

However, Jenae Grossart, English rider, said she enjoys competing at away shows, because she can sit back and cheer for the team.

"I like away shows better because when we host a show here, we have to be working the whole time," Grossart said, "When you travel, the other team is in charge of doing that."

Since K-State is in charge of the event, the members of the team who are not competing have been preparing the horses for competition.

"When we're at home, we have to take care of all the horses, and make sure the barn's clean," Grossart said. "It takes a week to prepare."

Along with preparing the horses for the show, the team has been working hard to prepare as well, Demmel said.

"We've been doing a lot of hard stuff to prepare," she said. "Coach has been making us drop stirrups and do extra stuff to get in shape again."

After all of the preparation in practice, Demmel said she hopes to come out with a strong team and have a good start to the season.

Following the western team's success at the Truman Show last weekend, Slough said the team is motivated, excited and working hard to win the K-State Varsity Combined Show.

What to know about rape; how to protect yourself

By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students might think K-State is one of the safest universities in the United States, and assume they aren't at risk. While K-State and Manhattan are relatively safe places to be, rape can occur.

One of three women will be raped during their lifetime, according to www.Oprah.com.

According to www.rainn.org, the Web site for the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network, only about 40 percent of rapes and sexual assaults are reported.

This may be due, at least in part, to the fact women don't always realize they have been raped.

Rape is defined as "any penetration of the female sex organ by a finger, by the male sex organ or by any object without consent of the victim," by University Counseling Services.

Staying silent or not objecting doesn't constitute consent.

There are several ways for women to protect themselves if someone is being raped.

Students, especially females, should not walk alone at night, even if carrying a cell phone.

If a student is alone at night on campus, he or she can call the Wildcat Walk Escort Service.

Two volunteer escorts will meet students anywhere on campus and walk with him or her to their residence hall or up to six blocks off campus.

The Wildcat Walk Escort Service operates from dusk until the next morning.

The escorts can be recognized by their purple armbands and photo ID badges. More information can be found at www.k-state.edu/wildcatwalk.

Candace Delong, a former FBI special agent, is featured on Oprah's Web site with advice for women about keeping safe.

If a person is attacked, he or she should make a lot of noise. Someone could be close by who could help.

When fighting off an attacker, it's important to target the vulnerable parts of the body, which are the attacker's eyes and privates.

The opportunity to get away is when the attacker releases his victim with both hands.

The only time a person should consider not fighting back is when he or she is someplace no one can hear them, and the attacker has a knife.

Most important of all, people should not let themselves be taken to a second location.

It's likely the attacker will harm them further or even kill them.

More tips for escaping a rape can be found through the Web site's links.

K-State's University Counseling Services offers treatment for rape victims.

The first four counseling sessions are free. After that, it's $12 per session.

Feelings of shock or disbelief are common after a woman has been raped, as is being depressed or having low self-esteem, said Melinda Le, post-doctoral psychology fellow at University Counseling Services.

Trust is another issue, she said.

"A big issue with women who have been raped is being able to trust another male when they're alone," Le said.

If a student has been raped, they should seek immediate medical attention. They could have been exposed to a sexually transmitted disease. For women, pregnancy is also possible.

If a student doesn't want to report the rape, the emergency room or the women's clinic at Lafene Health Center can help in gathering evidence with a "rape kit" in case he or she wants to report the rape later.

Sexual violence is prohibited at K-State.

Sexual assault or a rape can be reported to the Dean of Student Life Office for appropriate action to be taken by the university.

Tossed together ingredients make salads for all occasions

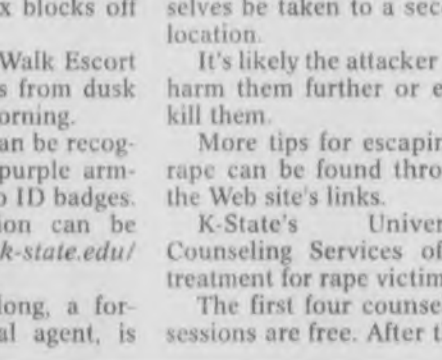
By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With Big 12 Conference football season just around the corner, everything from picnic menus to buffets can be found in the tailgater's meal plan.

Serious tailgaters split up the menu to provide a phenomenal spread for family and friends.

Don't worry about showing up empty-handed. This week's recipes feature two easy salads that go well with any picnic, barbecue or tailgater's feast. They offer a great alternative to the typical chips and dip or pre-packaged cookies.

For a twist on the usual pasta salad, substitute regular spiral noodles with vegetable spiral noodles. These add an extra splash of color, as well as an added flavor punch.



The apple salad is a fresh, crunchy salad with a snappy taste. In less than five minutes, this dish is ready to serve. If prepared ahead of time, it tastes great chilled.

Leftovers of both salads should be kept cool in a cooler until they can be refrigerated.

Quick and easy recipes

Easy pasta salad

1 12-ounce package of spiral noodles
1 tomato
1 cucumber
4 ounces of Colby Jack cheese
1 16-ounce bottle of Dorothy Lynch salad dressing

Courtesy art

Cook noodles. Drain and cool.
Chop tomato, cucumber and cheese into small cubes.
Mix together in large mixing bowl.
Add noodles and mix again. Pour salad dressing over the top and mix well.
Chill at least 30 minutes before serving.

Apple salad

4 unpeeled apples
1 16-ounce bag of miniature marshmallows
1/8 cup of chopped pecans
Vinegar
Sugar (to taste)

Mix together.
Add a taste of vinegar and one to two tablespoons of sugar.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (Jan. 21 - Feb. 18)
Excellent day to walk around wearing a white lab coat and carrying a clipboard.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20)
This might be a good time to decide what you want to be when you actually do grow up. I'm guessing that you'd be best off as either a yodeling oceanographer or possibly a bovine pathologist.

Aries (March 21 - April 19)
Beware of galoots today.

Taurus (April 20 - May 20)
Good day to sleep in. A nap would work well today, too. Try to get to bed early. Aside from that, nothing too exciting today.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)
Tiddly wink day. Make it count.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22)
You will find a strangely heavy small gold ring today, embedded in the center of an obviously volcanic rock. There is some writing, in a script unlike any you've ever seen, running around the ring, although you can't really see it unless you heat it up in a fire.

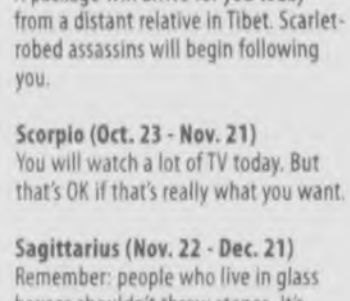
Leo (July 23 - Aug. 22)
You're about to spend a considerable amount of time with someone who personifies "dour." The kind of person who never once clapped for Tinkerbell, even as a child. Just ignore them if you can. If you can't ignore them, pretend they are a duck.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
Do not leave home without a ball of twine today. You won't actually need it, but it'll make you feel better to be prepared.

Libra (Sept. 22 - Oct. 22)
A package will arrive for you today from a distant relative in Tibet. Scarlet-robed assassins will begin following you.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
You will watch a lot of TV today. But that's OK if that's really what you want.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
Remember: people who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. It's okay to throw mashed potatoes, however.



Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)
You will have a trifle too much punch at a party this week and will amuse the other guests by flopping around on the floor an making "Ark! Ark!" sounds. But who cares? If they want to be stuffy, let 'em, I say.

Actors recreate 1st capital

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He's a lawyer by day and actor by night, but for Junction City resident Eric Stahl, the roles he plays are the roles he enjoys.

Stahl, along with 20 other Riley and Geary county residents, have been rehearsing for two years, and they will show off their acting skills in the "First Territorial Capitol Reenactment," at 7 tonight at the First Territorial Capitol in Fort Riley.

If you go
What: First Territorial Capitol Reenactment
Time: 7 tonight
Place: First Territorial Capitol in Fort Riley. For those interested in carpooling to Fort Riley, they are encouraged to meet at 6 tonight at the Riley County Historical Museum, 2309 Claflin Road.

Cheryl Collins, director of Riley County Historical Museum, said the event is to recognize the 150th anniversary of Riley and Geary counties, which were founded in Aug. 1855. Since both counties were established together, Collins said the counties have a strong history that should interest most people.

"Many historians argue that this meeting of the county was essentially what sparked the Civil War," she said. "We have put together a reenactment that is entertaining and interesting."

Gaylynn Childs, member of the board of directors of First Territorial Capital, said the event is prime for anyone interested in learning more about the county.

Collins said the evening begins with a brief presentation on laws in place during the 1850s.

The presentation will then be followed by the reenactment, which is scripted to sound like how it would be spoke during that time. Throughout the evening, Childs said actors will be dressed in period costumes.

"The reenactment lasts about 40 minutes, and, while it's not too long, it gives you a good idea of the controversies in the Bleeding Kansas situations," Childs said.

Lights provide safety

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's emergency phone call boxes have become a familiar sight to students on campus. While the blue-lighted beacons are known by most students, many don't know what all they can be used for.

"They are a direct line to the K-State Police Department," Don Stubbings, sergeant with the K-State Police, said. "They are for emergencies or even for directions."

When a person pushes the button on one of the 32 phones, they are immediately connected to a dispatcher with campus police. The dispatcher can tell where on campus the caller is located by the number of the call. The phones work like an intercom system, and a dispatcher is always available.

The phone system was first added to the K-State campus in the late 1980s, Capt. Richard Herrman, with the K-State police department, said.

"We started putting them in the remote areas, then in the core parts of campus where patrol officers couldn't see," Herrman said.

Originally, the boxes were for emergencies only, but they were eventually used to help people on campus who needed directions. A lost person pushes the button and a dispatcher will answer their questions.

Visitors unfamiliar with campus, students having car trouble or people needing an escort across campus can use the phones to get assistance.

While students and visitors are encouraged to use the phones if they are lost, most don't realize they are for more then just emergencies.

Ashley Johnson, junior in architecture, said she didn't know the phones could be used for any kind of emergency.

"I walk to my car late at night, so if I saw something suspicious, I'd probably press one," she said.

John Allison, sophomore in agricultural economics, said he didn't know he could use the phones to ask for directions. Even if he did, he said he probably wouldn't use them.

"I'm a guy. We don't ask for directions," Allison said.

On average, Herrman said the police department receives 2-3 legitimate calls a month. However, they are abused on an almost nightly basis.

"We get about 10 calls a month where we go to the phone and no one is there, someone just walked by and pushed the button," Herrman said.

Students caught using the call boxes inappropriately may be charged with giving a false alarm, Stubbing said, a penalty similar to falsely pulling a fire alarm.

"At this point, we have never really pursued that issue," Herrman said.

But, the police department will send a unit to a call box that has been pushed, unless there is a person on the other line asking for directions.

Even though the phones can be used for multiple purposes, Herrman said they are never overused.

"We would like to utilize them more," he said. "There is a monthly fee attached to them, and sometimes they sit out there doing nothing."

The call boxes cost $32.50 a month for each of the 32 phones on campus, making the monthly fee $1,040 for the services. If the phones were used five times in a month, it would cost $208 dollars per call.

Recently, the use of cell phones has replaced the call boxes for simple emergencies. Since many visitors to campus have a phone with them, they don't need the boxes to ask for directions. But the call boxes are still more useful in emergencies.

"For the students to have that availability, to hit that phone in an emergency, they don't have to remember a phone number in a panic, they just hit a button," Stubbings said. "The cell phone will not replace the convenience of the emergency phone."

While the phones are hardly used for emergencies, they are well worth the investment, Herrman said.

"The security that it offers to the public is what makes a difference," he said.

For students looking to stand out in the employment world, a solid grade point average, employment experience and extracurricular activities might not get them far, or at least far enough.

One important way to stand out, as suggested by Mary Ellen Barkley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, is with volunteer work.

"Benefits of volunteering include an opportunity to learn more," she said. "This could be a specific agency where someone is volunteering, or a certain area related to a student's major."

Nick Zimmerman, senior in information systems, said he is quite familiar with volunteering. He has been a member of Blue Key since last spring.

"Blue Key is senior honoraries," he said. "We focus not on volunteering, but our work is done in a volunteer fashion."

Zimmerman said Blue Key presents Peer Leadership Consulting to any organization on campus that would like a leadership topic addressed.

"We went through training, and I learned useful skills on presenting," he said.

Barkley said many volunteers might find a need to contribute to their local community.

"Especially when big events like Hurricane Katrina take place, it propels people, and the benefits are feeling good from helping others," she said.

Other benefits include gaining potential job references, and experience working with other people for a common purpose, Barkley said.

She also mentioned job shadowing as a form of volunteering.

"If job shadowing at a medical school or hospital, for example, you are also helping that organization," Barkley said.

There are also more long-term volunteering programs, such as a group like the American Red Cross.

"Since it is local, students have an opportunity to do that," Barkley said. "Shorter-term opportunities would be things like working at a Telefund for an evening."

Many students juggle school, jobs and other activities and might not find the time for volunteering. Barkley said the amount of time spent depends on the individual's goals and purpose.

"It depends on why you're doing it," she said, "and whatever works in your schedule."

For instance, she said for those trying to improve their resume, employers usually prefer a few hours of community service completed in several organizations versus one big organization. This could mean a few hours here and there could really make a student more appealing to future employers.

Houston FEMA caught off-guard

By Juan A. Lozano
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON – Saying they were caught off-guard by the number of people in need, FEMA officials closed a relief center early on Wednesday after some of the hundreds of hurricane victims in line began fainting in triple-digit heat.

The midday closing of the Houston disaster relief center came as officials in areas hit hardest by Hurricane Rita criticized FEMA's response to the storm, with one calling for a commission to examine the emergency response.

Across southeastern Texas, the Federal Emergency Management Agency delivered ice, water and packaged meals to residents who rode out last week's hurricane.

But the agency was not ready for the roughly 1,500 people displaced by Hurricanes Rita and Katrina who sought help at the Houston center when it reopened Wednesday.

The center initially opened for Katrina refugees. It closed last week when Houston was evacuated before Rita.

The line started forming Tuesday night, and as temperatures reached record highs, some people fainted and had to be carried off by police and other refugees.

FEMA spokesman Justin Dombrowski said the agency closed the center for the day because of the heat and the unexpectedly large crowds.

Frances Deculus, 65, of Beaumont, Texas, got in line at 3 a.m. and emerged shortly before the center shut down.

She said all she was able to do was register for FEMA assistance.

"We don't know what to do. It's frustrating. We have five small children," said Deculus, who is staying in a Houston hotel with 12 other relatives.

Local officials, including Port Arthur Mayor Oscar Ortiz and Jefferson County Judge Carl Griffith, whose county includes Beaumont, said FEMA's response has been inadequate.

Griffith said he has asked Gov. Rick Perry to set up a commission to study the emergency response to Rita.

FEMA spokesman Ross Fredenburg in Austin said communications between Austin and rural East Texas have been troubled because of power problems.

But he said FEMA had set up 27 distribution points in 27 southeastern Texas cities.

"I don't know what could have been done better since the materials were in place before the hurricane," Fredenburg said.

Along with other members, Ed Ollie Jr., associate regional director of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, sings and claps during worship Monday night. Ollie was visiting the group before returning to St. Louis Tuesday.

FAITH | InterVarsity welcomes all denominations

InterVarsity on his campus, he said he wanted to give his life to be available to students.

"I remember how it was," Weber said. "I remember the issues and tensions that were there. It's hard to put a monetary value on the role of influence."

The family-type atmosphere is evident at meetings, which are at 8 p.m. Mondays in the K-State Student Union. Members start with an icebreaker to get to know each other better, then move on to readings, speakers and singing.

The organization also has several smaller Bible study groups that meet during the week.

These are called Faith In Action Teams.

InterVarsity also takes semi-annual mission trips to Bolivia and helps other college students, health care centers and orphanages.

The group also participates in a fall conference on Oct. 14, where K-State InterVarsity members join members from Missouri in Jefferson City, Mo.

InterVarsity is not geared toward a specific denomination.

"We are a non-denominational organization and have lots of different denominations in our group," Gramkow said. "It's just a place where you can be real with each other and grow with each other spiritually."

InterVarsity provides Christian students a place to belong. Curious students can attend meetings, ask questions and learn more about the group.

"I would encourage anyone who's interested to come to one of the meetings and see if they could benefit from it," Brandon Schwabauer, freshman in architectural engineering, said. "It's a great learning experience."

Students not only learn more about God, but also learn how to cope with the everyday stress of college life, Gramkow said.

"We can't do it on our own," she said. "College especially is a hard time where we go through transitions and do a lot of growing up. InterVarsity serves as a community where we can grow to love God together grow to love each other better, and grow to love the world more."

Weber said three tag words summarize what InterVarsity does as a ministry. The words are love, learn and live. Weber said he tries to help students integrate these words and their meanings into their daily lives.

"I believe that university years are a critical time for students to influence each other," he said. "In contrast to the rest of your life, it's a relatively short period of time, and yet so many decisions are made. For me to be available to seek to influence and encourage students in their own relationships with each other and with God during those years is very valuable and necessary.

"I believe that Jesus Christ is the most compelling figure in all of human history, and it's my responsibility to provide an opportunity for students to respond to him."

Did you know?

InterVarsity's three tag words

Love: for God and others

Learn: what it means to live a life of loving God and others, to learn it takes practice and to learn to hear what God's doing around the world and between cultures because each person's story is different

Live: to want to demonstrate it in tangible ways through hospitality, service and sharing the message of Jesus with other people which prohibits use of corporate donations to advocate the election or defeat of political candidates. The alleged scheme worked in a roundabout way, with the donations going to a DeLay-founded political committee, then to the Republican National Committee and eventually to GOP candidates in Texas.

Indicted with DeLay were two of his associates, John Colyandro, former executive director of a Texas political action committee formed by DeLay, and Jim Ellis, who heads DeLay's national political committee.

In Austin, Texas, Earle told reporters, "Our job is to prosecute abuses of power and to bring those abuses to the public."

DeLay is the first House leader to be indicted while in office in at least a century, according to congressional historians.

"I have notified the speaker that I will temporarily step aside from my position as majority leader pursuant to rules of the House Republican Conference and the actions of the Travis County district attorney today," DeLay said in a statement.

The Republican rank and file met privately a few hours after the indictment was issued to consider filling the vacancy in the leadership ranks.

Several GOP officials said Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., initially intended to recommend that Rep. David Dreier of California step into the duties, with additional responsibilities going to the GOP whip, Rep. Roy Blunt of Missouri.

play significantly better than she did last fall."

Bietau said Klimova, whose sister coaches volleyball in New Jersey, responds well to competition because she comes from an athletic family.

"The things that we do that are sometimes hard to adjust to, she knows how to handle," Bietau said. "She's the kind of player that coaches love to have."

Klimova and the Wildcats return to action this weekend in Bloomington, Ind., at the Indiana Hoosier Classic.

"We don't have to be in a hurry with Olga," Bietau said. "The big picture is what kind of a team are we going to have in February and March when we're playing dual matches that decide where we go in the Big 12 tournament and decide whether we go to the NCAAs or not."

Bietau said he will be looking forward to seeing how freshman Katerina Kudlackova, who defeated the University of Arkansas' Vlatka Jovanovic last week at Missouri, does in the upcoming tournament.

"She's goes out and beats a girl that's No. 55 in the country in her first match," Bietau said. "You don't know how good she's going to be. She could end up a lot better."

Senior Jessica Simosa said the organization of the Indiana tournament will make it easier to prepare for matches.

"All the courts are at the same place, so we get to see all the people playing and compare ourselves with the other team," Simosa said.

The Wildcats will go up against Notre Dame, Indiana, Louisiana State, Murray State and Kansas. For Klimova, the court is a sight for sore eyes.

"I think I'm ready," Klimova said. "I've been working quite hard, so hopefully if I get to play, I will play good."

VOLLEYBALL | Wildcats swept by Longhorns

going to take two; they're not just going to give points away," Fritz said. "We made unforced errors at inappropriate times, and they took advantage of it."

Senior Agata Rezende, who is averaging .392 hitting this season, led K-State with 13 kills on 33 attempts for a .212 percentage.

In game one, the Cats scored the first point but quickly gave the lead to Texas at 2-1. K-State regained its lead at 9-8 and milked it with two kills each from Werner and redshirt-freshman Jenny Jantsch. However, the Longhorns took over at 14-13, went on two 4-0 runs, and the Cats were unable to recover.

Once again, K-State scored the first point of game two and appeared more explosive offensively, maintaining its lead until Texas took over 8-7. The Longhorns ran up their lead until K-State caught up at 16-15. A couple of 3-0 Texas runs pushed the lead to 23-16, safely out of the Cats' grasp.

Game three was closer, but ended with the same result. The Wildcats trailed throughout, in the last couple minutes, the Cats tied the score at 28, but were unable to capitalize.

At 11-3 overall and 2-2 in the Big 12, the only thing K-State can do is plan for the future, Fritz said.

"We just continue to focus on the same things, in my opinion," Fritz said. "We have to play with more fire and intensity, the ability to string success and serve and pass. That's where we're going to spend our time the next couple of weeks."

K-State will take on No. 23 Texas A&M at home on Saturday.

Sigma Nu potentially in violation

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Sigma Nu chapter at the University of Kansas was banned from KU's greek community earlier this month, and now the K-State chapter may be in trouble.

Spencer Holk, K-State Sigma Nu vice president, said, "We're basically in trouble because of an article," printed in the Collegian earlier this semester.

The Aug. 21 Collegian included an article about the annual slip 'n' slide event the fraternity had before classes began.

Photos accompanying the article showed students going down the water slide with beers in their hands and one student consuming a beer.

The caption identified the students as David Cotter, sophomore in business administration, and Jeremy Pukach, sophomore in construction science management. Neither was available for comment.

Travis Morrison, Sigma Nu pledge and freshman in mechanical engineering, said there was drinking at the party and the members "called all the people we knew and had them come over."

A.J. Toloza, Sigma Nu member and senior in civil engineering, said although a lot of the people at the party were invited by members of the fraternity, some just arrived.

"We always have random people come by and they come up the hill and say 'Hey, what's going on?'" he said.

And although alcohol was available at the party, Toloza said wristbands weren't distributed to identify those of legal drinking age.

It is against the Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council Substance Abuse Policy to have a party with alcohol where everyone is invited or where there is unrestricted access to the party.

At events where alcohol is present, the policy requires door monitors to distribute wristbands to those who are 21 years old or older and to check identification to make sure each person entering is a member or an invited guest.

Students irritated by parts of college life

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All over campus, K-State students are irritated by simple things that come with college life.

Bad habits at the Peters Recreation Complex can get under the skin of both users and employees.

People who talk on cell phones while exercising is one pet peeve, Denise Beneke, senior in architecture said.

Others are bothered by people who drop weights or wear sunglasses indoors.

Collin Baldwin, junior in nutrition and exercise science, doesn't like men who wear shirts with cut-off sleeves.

"The whole nipple shirt thing – it's gross," he said.

The Rec users bother employees when they try to get their attention. Some just stand at the counter, but some yell for attention or tap their ID cards on the counter, Natalie Simon, senior in elementary education and Rec employee, said.

"We know you're there. Just shut up," said Kyle Whisler, senior in business marketing and Rec Complex employee.

A lack of open computers in Hale Library is annoying, said John Rader, junior in accounting. But people who talk on their cell phones is what bothers Jonathan Henry, sophomore in finance, about Hale. He said the conversations make it loud on Hale's second floor.

People sleeping in Hale distracts some students as well.

"Sometimes it's hard to study when other people are sleeping," Amanda Thompson, sophomore in accounting, said.

Fire alarms in the residence halls irritate Bethany Asbell, freshman in business administration.

She said the fire alarms have gone off in Haymaker Hall six or seven times this semester.

"It's kind of getting ridiculous," Asbell said.

The cost of eating in the K-State Student Union annoys Victor Holt, junior in computing and information services.

"It irritates me that Chinese food is expensive," he said.

Lafene Health Center's billing practices are a pet peeve of Dusty Burwell, senior in computing and information services.

"It takes two weeks to get the bill," Burwell said. "You can't just pay right then."

Top official may come to K-State

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gen. Richard Myers, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, may be considering a position at K-State after his retirement on Sept. 30.

According to an article published by the Associated Press, Myers has been talking to university officials about a possible position at K-State's Institute for Military History and 20th Century Studies.

Associate History Professor Mark Parillo is the director of the Institute for Military History and 20th Century Studies. He said Myers' experience would be a valuable asset to the university.

Meyers
CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINTS CHIEFS OF STAFF

"Certainly as someone who's been involved in world events in a big way, particularly in the war on terror, Gen. Myers could provide important perspective and insight on these events to students," Parillo said.

In addition to his extensive knowledge, Parillo said Myers has a lot of friends and colleagues who could be great contacts for other university programs.

Jack Holl, emeritus professor of history and the Institute's former director, said it is not unusual for colleges to offer positions to government and military officials after their retirement.

"But K-State has rarely been able to get on their staff someone so renowned with so much military and government experience," he said.

Myers is the United States' highest-ranking military official. He serves as the principal military adviser to the president, secretary of defense and the National Security Council.

The Associated Press said he could play a number of roles at the university. He could secure speakers for the military program, act as a liaison between K-State's program and other institutions, or even lecture directly to students.

Officials in the department of Military Science said that they have no knowledge of Myers' future with the university, and no comment was available from the office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Born in Kansas City, Mo., Myers graduated from K-State in 1965 with a degree in mechanical engineering, before entering the United States Air Force through K-State's ROTC program.

According to Wikipedia.org, he logged more than 4,100 hours of flight time as a pilot, and has been in operational command and leadership positions in a variety of Air Force and Joint assignments.

Myers then served as vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in 2000 before becoming chairman in Oct. 2001.

Myers is a frequent visitor to K-State. He gave the 118th Landon Lecture in 2000, and has spoken at commencement and induction ceremonies, most recently at the College of Engineering in May. He will be grand marshal of the Wildcats' homecoming parade on Oct. 28.

Lecturer addresses racial profiling

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Racial profiling is the very definition of irrational fears in society, Columbian University law professor Patricia J. Williams said Thursday night at the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Williams spoke as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series and Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lectures in correspondence with Community Cultural Harmony Week.

Hurricane Katrina is a recent example of extreme profiling in society, Williams said. She said the failed levies of New Orleans are a metaphor for the restrictions of civil justice.

"We've been holding the impossible for an impossibly long time," Williams said.

In the wake of Hurricane Katrina, Williams said evacuees were sorted into groups by law officials as a calculation to lessen "acting up."

"I wonder what kind I might appear to be in a time of evacuation," she said.

Williams said racial profiling is a visual used too often in society, especially with Homeland Security.

"Stereotypes don't work," Williams said. "If we are looking for profiles of terrorists, we need to look at everyone."

Williams said Americans have an unclear understanding of the U.S. Constitution and its purpose of equality.

"The Constitution is what constitutes us," she

Kemp's father testifies

At a preliminary trial for Benjamin Appleby, 30, Roger Kemp, father of Ali Kemp, told a Johnson County judge Wednesday of how he found his 19-year-old daughter's battered body in the pump room of a neighborhood swimming pool in 2002. Appleby was arrested in November 2004 and is facing charges of capital murder and attempted rape of the K-State freshman.

Roberts appointed

John G. Roberts Jr., 50, succeeded the late William H. Rehnquist Thursday and became the nation's youngest chief justice in two centuries, winning support from more than three-fourths of the Senate after promising he would be no ideologue. The court opens a new term on Monday.

Wildfire threatens L.A.

A California wildfire doubled in size early Thursday to at least 7,000 acres, consuming at least one home as it burned across 10 miles of ridges along the line dividing Los Angeles and Ventura counties. The stench of smoke enveloped the area. The wildfire was 5 percent contained. Firefighters did not know how it began.

Mother to speak about rape, depression, suicide

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Andrea Cooper discovered her 20-year-old daughter, Kristin, dead on Dec. 31, 1995. Kristin committed suicide as a result of depression from being the victim of rape.

Cooper will tell "Kristin's Story," the story of her daughter and experiences, at 7 p.m. Oct. 4 at McCain Auditorium.

Rebecca Teel, senior in mass communications and president of Alpha Chi Omega, said Kristin was a member of Alpha Chi Omega at Baker University and Cooper is a Delta Delta Delta alumna.

Teel said Cooper travels across the country and speaks to college students.

"This is something that college students, men and women, need to hear," Teel said. "I think rape, depression and suicide affect students all over this campus."

Teel said Alpha Chi was given a grant to bring Cooper to K-State and to make the speech free for attendees. Mary Todd, Assistant Director of the Women's Center, will be there to provide a support system for students.

Cooper is a great speaker, said Kelli Burns, senior in social work and family studies and human services and vice president of chapter development for Tri-Delt.

"She puts you into other people's shoes and (you) hear a different side of things," she said

Burns also said Cooper helps students think about the best way to protect themselves, like locking their doors at night.

Burns said this is the first time Alpha Chi and Tri-Delt have collaborated.

"I heard Andrea speak last fall at a Tri-Delt Kansas State Convention and she was great," Burns said. "She spoke here about five years ago, and we wanted her back because of the current situation in Manhattan, with the rapist and everything."

Cooper will speak at about 20 colleges and universities this semester. She said Cooper moves people and will make them realize how prevalent rape, depression and suicide are.

Kelly Maze, junior in pre-nursing and life science and philanthropy chair for Tri-Delt, said the most important reason students should attend the speech is to be made aware of this issue.

"Students need to realize that this really does happen, on this campus and in every community," she said. "We all need to have knowledge on this issue."

Maze said she will attend "Kristin's Story" because she has heard Cooper is an excellent speaker, and she wants to listen to what Cooper has to offer.

"This is not only a women's issue," she said. "Men should also attend because the women on this campus are sisters and friends of these men."

Blood drive aims for 800 pints

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The American Red Cross will begin its fall blood drive Tuesday in the K-State Student Union.

In the past, the K-State blood drive has produced more than 800 pints of blood in a single drive. This fall the goal will be the same, 800 pints.

Donors each give one pint of blood, Kristi Reif, Red Cross donor recruitment representative, said.

"Across the country, blood centers are struggling to keep pace with demand," said Norma Dixon, communications manager for the American Red Cross Central Plains Region. "Nationwide, 38,000 blood donations are needed each and every day to meet the needs of accident victims, cancer patients and children with blood disorders. When a disaster strikes, this need could be even greater."

Recent hurricanes have made it more difficult for the Red Cross to collect blood in the southern states.

"We are asking all healthy individuals to donate blood for our neighbors in need," said Pam Head, CEO of the American Red Cross Central Plains Region Blood Services.

Donors must be in good health, at least 17 years old and weigh at least 110 pounds.

Additionally, donors must provide some form of official photo identification.

The blood drive runs today through Oct. 7. The Red Cross will be taking blood from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Oct. 4-6 and from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Oct. 7 in the Union.

Blood Drives

What: Donate blood to the American Red Cross
When: 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Oct. 4-6 and 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Oct. 7
Where: K-State Student Union

When: 3-8 p.m. Oct. 5 and 6 and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 7
Where: Putnam Hall

The Red Cross will also be taking blood from 3 to 8 p.m. Oct. 5 and 6, and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 7 in Putnam Hall.

Interested donors are encouraged to call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE to schedule an appointment in advance.

A free Red Cross T-shirt will be given to each participant.

"The blood needs of our country can only be met by your voluntary donation," Dixon said.

Student Senate keeps SafeRide afloat

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate assured students will continue to get safe rides home, after an emergency allocation to SafeRide Thursday night.

The bill was approved unanimously.

As of May 20, the SafeRide program hit a deficit, privilege fee chair Matt Wagner said.

"Without that funding, they will have to cut back on the number of cabs on weekends," Wagner said.

The senate bill allocated the Office of Student Activities and Services $18,221.84 to fund SafeRide for the 2005-06 fiscal year.

Currently, the SafeRide programs operates between 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Thursday through Saturday nights, SafeRide coordinator Amy Guerich, said.

Guerich said almost every night the program uses seven to eight cabs to fulfill student demands.

"These numbers compared to last year are running about the same," she said. "But we're giving more rides than what we did last year."

On an average night, SafeRide receives more than 100 calls and escorts more than 200 passengers.

While the program is successful, Guerich said, "Right now, I'm looking at other systems to put in place or ways to refine the new system."

She said she is also considering changing cab companies in May 2006.

"What I want to do is find another contractor, something that is going to serve more students."

One of the largest challenges of SafeRide is supplying cabs with the increase in gas prices. Some senators encouraged SafeRide to consider more fuel-efficient vehicles in the program.

"University of Colorado has two electric-run vehicles," she said. "The program there can only fit two people, one driver and one passenger, in a single car. I didn't feel that was a great option for K-State."

Brandon Sager, student senate operation chair, asked if the program would consider centralizing at SafeRide hot spots such as Aggieville.

Sager said a program that carpools more students would decrease the initial operation costs.

Guerich said while the concept of a transit-like cab operation might seem ideal, the current cab company does not support it.

Student Senate also allocated approximately $250,000 to Kansas State College Bowl Club, Society for Appreciation of Bharatiya Heritage and Arts, Educational Opportunity Fund and Students for Environmental Action.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Pet peeves common to everyone

Some people have a laundry list of them and some even have double-secret ones, but the bottom line is everyone has one.

That's right, we all have pet peeves.

According to www.urbandictionary.com, a peeve is something that annoys you or makes you angry, so we thought we would let everyone know what annoys the Collegian editorial staff.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Michael Ashford

Jonas Hogg
Curtis Johnson
Annette Lawless
Anthony Mendoza
Alex Peak
Catrina Rawson
Kristen Roderick
Dave Skretta

Michael Ashford – People who say they're KU basketball fans and K-State football fans. They need to pick a team.

Johanna Barnes – Pedestrians who don't use the crosswalks and then glare when drivers stop short of hitting them.

Abby Brownback – I hate it when people don't use common sense or when people finish the roll of toilet paper and don't put on a new roll.

Matthew Girard – My biggest pet peeve is when my friends and brother are totally wasted and call me from a huge party or the bars and rub it in that the Collegian is sucking the life out of me.

Matt Gorney – People who can't run spell check in e-mails or clean up after themselves. Also, people who can't accept others obsessing with sports and Student Governing Association football posers.

Jonas Hogg – People who parrot Rush Limbaugh or Al Franken without any real thought.

Curtis Johnson – John Madden using the "stating the ridiculously obvious" style of commentating during Monday Night Football. I'd rather listen to nails on a chalkboard.

Annette Lawless – Ignorance – it's not bliss, people. Those who assume aren't the greatest either. Know your stuff.

Anthony Mendoza – People who say "I don't know," when there is an obvious answer to the question that you asked.

Alex Peak – People who add an exaggerated "g" sound to the end of words like, "swimming," "things," or "walking."

Catrina Rawson – People or my roommates who leave their room and leave the light on all night and sit in the living room or other room. They waste my money.

Kristen Roderick – People who yell at me for not turning right on red. It's not my fault I can't drive.

Dave Skretta – People who think they know more than they really do. There's a reason K-State audibles every other down, people.

Bad religion

Faith should be personal decision, not forced

ADDIE LAUE

Nothing makes me roll my eyes faster than a "Jesus" bumper sticker.

That may make me sound bitter against God or religion, but truly, I'm not. I was raised Catholic, but now consider myself a much more spiritual person. I've found it hard to believe that there is one "correct" religion. I have come to the conclusion that a person's relationship with God and the way they conduct themselves when no one is looking is more important than if they attend church on Sunday, or go to temple on Friday, or pray five times a day facing Mecca.

Most of my bad experiences have been with Christians, but let me say that I know there are plenty of genuine Christians out there who don't beat the rest of the world to death with their holiness. My apprehension of organized religion may stem from a few fanatics.

One of the earliest examples is an uncle of mine. He quoted the Bible endlessly, never missed church and often had the pastor over for dinner. Just a man who believed with all his heart, right?

My problem was what I saw as an eight-year-old when the pastor wasn't there. He pinched my cousin's shoulders so hard she'd have marks for a week. If he was home, we had to play in the basement and make virtually no noise, or I knew one of my cousins was going to get it bad. He even tossed my two-year old cousin across the room by his arm on Easter Sunday. All in the name of "Jesus."

In high school, some of my friends got caught up in a Christian youth group. It seemed fun; the leaders were young, so they would try to hang out with us outside school or meetings. That's when I got a little uneasy. I didn't like going to their houses or my friends being told that they would go to hell if they kissed their dates on prom night. A simple "no, thank you" to their invitations was not enough. They would continue to call until our parents began to believe it was like a cult, at which point they focused their attention on those who already believed everything they said. This is when I lost these friends, and they became preachers in the school, trying to save the rest of us from ourselves.

I also refuse to believe my two-year-old niece or, for that matter, everyone who practices another religion around the world, is wrong and will go to hell because they are not baptized and do not practice the "correct" religion.

The bottom line is that often people misuse religion to make up for what they lack in their lives. They are not genuinely worshipping and serving God, or it wouldn't have to be so public.

I believe my uncle felt ashamed of his behavior, and used his "in your face" religion to make up for his abusiveness and to prove to the rest of the world what a good guy he was. I think my friends in high school used it to feel important, superior and like they were a part of something.

Religion is to teach us to be truly good people, to help us through trials in our lives, and to give us a way to thank God, Allah, or Buddha, for what has been given to us. These are quiet, personal things.

None of this requires us to be loud about our beliefs, judge others, assume that we are the only ones with understanding – or have a "Jesus" bumper sticker.

Sexism affects everyone

RACHEL THOMPSON

Women and men have an equal ability to do anything. One is not smarter or more able than the other, and neither deserves to be discriminated against. But, based on historical sexism, women are often unfairly thought to be inferior to men. This sexism has a harmful effect on the world, and limits the way it could work.

Although males and females are biologically different, most standards that are associated with men and woman are from the different cultures and rules we learn as children.

It is a culture-bound idea, for a child to grow up anywhere near "normal" they have to exist in the traditional family structure: one mom, one dad and children, never mind that many other cultures rely on extended families, siblings or entire villages to raise their children.

This impacts the extensive sexism that exists today, in our modern society.

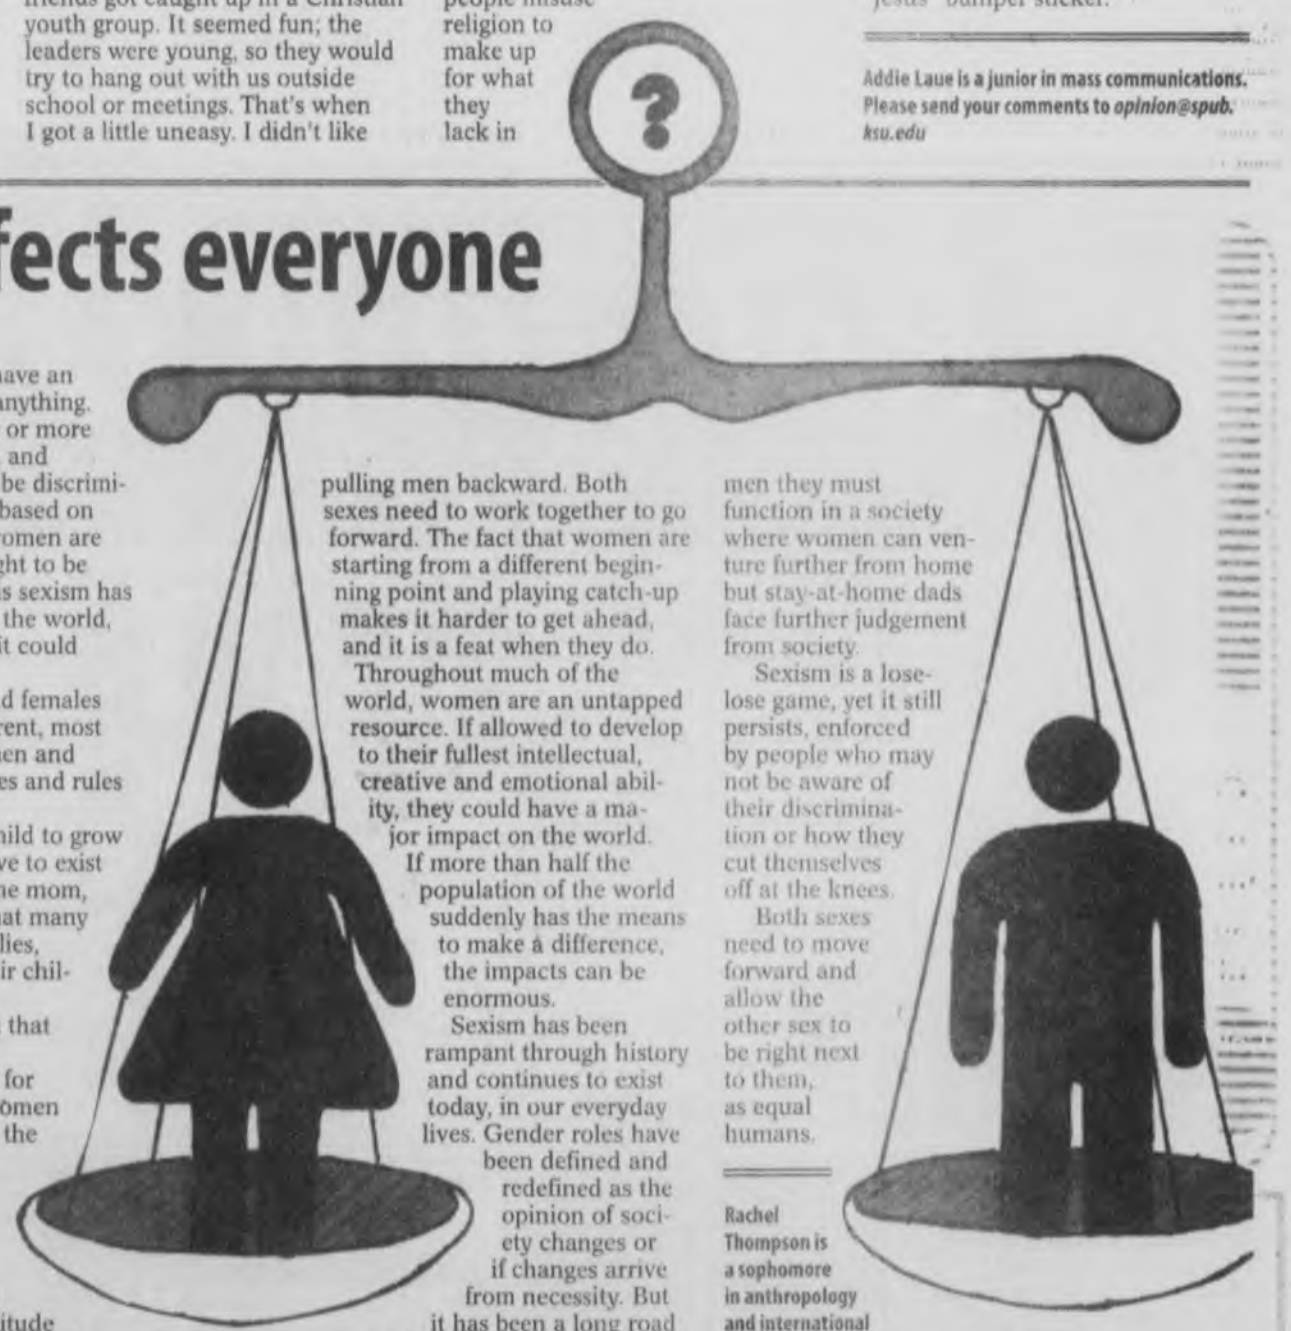
Culturally generated gender roles for men and women vastly limit what women and men could do or not do. Slowly the culture has changed to allow more versatility in these roles, which is good, but these social boundaries still exist.

American women can work, go to college, vote, enter politics, travel the world, wear pants and do a multitude of things that were taboo in the past, but why hasn't a woman even been close to reaching the presidency and why are men paid more than women for the same work?

Inversely, why are men less likely to enter stereotypically feminine roles like a nurse or an elementary school teacher, or be a permanent stay-at-home dad?

Women need to move forward, but not by pulling men backward. Both sexes need to work together to go forward. The fact that women are starting from a different beginning point and playing catch-up makes it harder to get ahead, and it is a feat when they do.

Throughout much of the world, women are an untapped resource. If allowed to develop to their fullest intellectual, creative and emotional ability, they could have a major impact on the world. If more than half the population of the world suddenly has the means to make a difference, the impacts can be enormous.



Sexism has been rampant through history and continues to exist today, in our everyday lives. Gender roles have been defined and redefined as the opinion of society changes or if changes arrive from necessity. But it has been a long road with many backslides and sidesteps.

Men are affected by sexism too. As boys, they consider it an insult to be told that they play like girls, which is a huge insult to girls as well.

Often, a boy who is more interested in reading, art, music or dance than soccer or "boy's activities" has to deal with insults and stigmatization. As boys grow older and turn into men they must function in a society where women can venture further from home but stay-at-home dads face further judgement from society.

Sexism is a lose-lose game, yet it still persists, enforced by people who may not be aware of their discrimination or how they cut themselves off at the knees.

Both sexes need to move forward and allow the other sex to be right next to them, as equal humans.

Family Day offers variety of kid-friendly activities

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Friday will launch a weekend full of family-focused activities as K-State's Family Day begins.

A complete list of activities can be found on the Family Day Web site, but here are just a few of the events being offered:

Dinner Theater
When: 7 p.m. Saturday
Where: Alumni Center ballroom
Cost: $12 students, $15 non-students

Students and family members can watch a performance while eating a salmon dinner. A troupe called Comedy City will be performing, Meghan Newman, Union Program Council Traditions co-chair, said.

"It offers a family-oriented atmosphere and a fun night out at a reasonable price," Newman said.

Tee Time
When: 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday
Where: Colbert Hills Golf Course

By stopping at the K-State Student Union and picking up a Family Day brochure at the first-floor information table, students automatically pick up a pass for a free round of golf at Colbert Hills, Emily Lehning, assistant dean of New Student Services, said.

"It's a wonderful opportunity to enjoy the par-three golf course at Colbert Hills," she said. "Students just have to take their student IDs and a Family Day brochure and can then play free of charge."

Legacy Pinning Ceremony and Brunch
When: 10 a.m. Saturday,
Where: Tadtman Boardroom, K-State Alumni Center
Cost: $10 for students, $12.50 for family members

The Legacy Pinning is a ceremony in which a K-State alumnus pins a current student and both take an oath of allegiance to the university. Pat Bosco, Dean of Student Life, will be the host of the event, Lehning said. Following the ceremony, families and students can enjoy a brunch together.

"It's a fun and sentimental evening," Lehning said. "People have the opportunity to celebrate K-State and their family ties."

Call 532-2222 to register.

For more information
For a complete Family Day Schedule, visit www.k-state.edu/familyday.

K-State University Gardens and K-State Insect Zoo
When: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday
Where: 1500 Denison Ave.

The K-State Insect Zoo and University Gardens will be open to students and families on Saturday.

"They're open for a come-and-go, self-guided tour," Lehning said. "It's free of charge, but I know they appreciate donations. They can look at all the wonderful plants and the insect exhibit, which I feel is something unique to our campus."

Chemistry Magic Show
When: 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Saturday
Where: Willard Hall 114

A chemistry magic show, hosted by Alpha Chi Sigma Honorary, will offer an entertaining event for families and students to attend.

"We're really excited about the chemistry magic show," Lehning said. "We hope a lot of people take advantage of it. Chemistry students will perform magic using chemical properties, and I've heard it's fabulous. I think it would be good for people of all ages."

Children's Carnival
When: 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Saturday
Where: Bosco Student Plaza

The children's carnival will be in Bosco Student Plaza, Lehning said. There will be a moonwalk, candy and free games for children to play. The K-State Juggling Club will present tricks to entertain.

Look-Alike Contest
When: 1 p.m. Saturday
Where: K-State Student Union Courtyard

"The Look-Alike contest is a new addition to Family Day, and we're pretty excited about it," Lehning said. "Family members will compete for the most similar pair."

Small prizes will be given and there is no cost to compete. Lehning said that registering in advance is not required, but recommended. Call 532-2222 to participate.

4th Annual Dean's Dinner
When: 5 to 6 p.m. Saturday
Where: K-State Student Union Bluemont Room
Cost: $15 for students, $25 for family members

The Dean's Dinner will allow students and their families the opportunity to meet many of the university's leaders.

"Each year, Dr. Bosco hosts a Dean's Dinner to welcome all our K-State parents and families," said Mindy Weixelman, director of development for student life at the KSU Foundation. "Families can meet with deans of colleges and interact with the leadership of the university while learning what's taking place on campus."

Reservations are required and can be made by calling 532-2222.

Part of family members' fees will go to the K-State Parents and Family Fund.

"I think it's a great opportunity for parents, families and their students to enjoy a fun evening with university leadership," Weixelman said. "It's just another way that K-State welcomes family involvement."

Hypnotist Jim Wand
When: 7 p.m. Saturday
Where: K-State Student Union Forum Hall

Jim Wand will perform acts of hypnotism free of charge.

"It's very entertaining and will be appropriate for families," Beth Bailey, Union assistant director, said. "Dr. Wand has been in this business for 20 or 30 years.

I worked with him before, and he's extremely professional and funny. I think it will be a very entreating evening."

Play tells love story of chance

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
Dianne Paukstelis and Dwight Toller look at photographs of each others' children Thursday evening at the Manhattan Arts Center during the rehearsal for the play, "Same Time, Next Year."

"Same Time, Next Year," a love story about two people who meet by chance, opens tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Written by Bernard Spade, the show is one of the most popular plays in the country and was made into a movie in 1978, director Marci Maullar said.

The two-actor play spans the late-1950s through the Vietnam War. Doris and George, played by Dianne Paukstelis and Dwight Toller respectively, are two people married to other people who meet by chance and have an affair. They decide to meet on the same day every year to renew the relationship.

Paukstelis, a veteran actress in regional theater productions and commercials, described her character as a frustrated 1950s housewife who reflects the changing attitudes of women.

Paukstelis said the play is humorous and emotional in subject matter.

"There are scenes that are very happy, but the next moment, I am sobbing," she said. "The challenging and fun aspects go together."

Paukstelis said the play tells a story of American history.

"I think it's very interesting to see the changes in people that are reflected by what's changing socially in America at the time," Paukstelis said.

Toller, K-State instructor of acting, described his character George as an insecure person lacking identity.

Toller said the most fun part of his character was filling the five-year gap between scenes.

"Many changes take place in this amount of time, both physically and emotionally," he said. "Focusing on these changes has been the most fun."

Toller said students will enjoy the love story in the play.

"It would be an interesting view to watch two individuals on a voyage to discover what love is both on an individual level and with someone else," he said.

Maullar said students and the community will enjoy the humor and relationship aspects of the play.

"At first it seems like two people having an illicit affair," she said. "It's really about a relationship changing and growing over the years."

Same Time, Next Year
When: 8 p.m. Sept. 30-Oct. 1 and Oct. 6-8, 2 p.m. Oct. 2 and Oct. 9
Where: Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave.
How much: $12 for adults, $9 for students, $5 for children and $5 for student walk-ins with ID, Oct. 2, 6 and 9 only.

K-State tries to end losing streak against Texas A&M

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin goes for a kill during the third match against Texas Wednesday night.

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin said K-State's volleyball team lacks one thing: heart.

"It hasn't been there in practice, and it hasn't been there in games," Hamlin said. "We need to dig a little deeper."

After starting the season with a record of 11-1, No. 16 K-State (11-3, 2-2) has lost its last two matches to conference opponents. The Wildcats, whose three losses came to teams in the Top 25, will play against No. 23 Texas A&M (7-5, 0-3) at 1 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team has played with heart at times, but needs to play with more to beat the Aggies.

"I think this team has heart, but we have forgotten how to use it," Fritz said. "This is a young team, and there are going to be ebbs and flows in our season. But, I think Joy is right when she says at the very least, we need to compete hard day in and day out."

Like K-State, Texas A&M has had tough luck lately, losing its last four matches. The Aggies are winless in the Big 12, but Fritz said Texas A&M is better than some might think.

"Texas A&M has probably played the most difficult conference schedule thus far, so I don't think their win-loss record is a reflection of the kind of team they are," she said. "They are very good, and at this point, we just need to play consistent volleyball from the beginning to the end."

No. 16 K-State vs. No. 23 Texas A&M
When: 1 p.m. Saturday
Where: Ahearn Field House

Texas A&M's scheduled match against Texas Tech on Sept. 24 was postponed because of the threat of Hurricane Rita.

As a result, the Aggies have not played in a week and a half, and therefore have had more time to prepare.

But, Fritz said she hopes a big crowd will help give K-State an advantage.

"It is my hope that we can get a big crowd for Saturday's

MLB | White Sox clinch first AL Central title since 2000

DETROIT — The Chicago White Sox hooted, hollered and screamed like kids as they ran down a skinny hallway toward their plastic-lined clubhouse.

Konerko

After flirting with one of the worst collapses in baseball history, the White Sox earned the right to douse each other with champagne.

Chicago got a clinch, not a collapse.

Paul Konerko homered to back Freddy Garcia and the White Sox held off Detroit for a 4-2 victory Thursday for their first AL Central title since 2000.

MLB | Rogers tells paper he's finished with Rangers

Kenny Rogers, who began battling with management before the season and has had a tumultuous year off the field, doesn't expect to wear a Rangers uniform next season.

"I'm pretty certain this is my last start here," Rogers told The Dallas Morning News his scheduled appearance Thursday.

The year began poorly as the club angered Rogers by its offseason handling of his request for a contract extension.

In June, Rogers was involved in an altercation with two TV cameramen that resulted in a 20-game suspension, reduced to 13 by an arbitrator, and a $50,000 fine.

In between, he had a 31-inning scoreless streak in April and May. At 14-7 with a 3.42 ERA in 189 1/3 innings, he leads the team in wins and innings pitched.

NFL | T.O. ring to aid Katrina victims goes for $48,000

Terrell Owens' 2004 NFC Championship ring sold for $48,200 in an online auction on Thursday.

If the winner pays up, it would be the highest price ever paid for a conference ring, according to ring expert Scott Welkowsky, owner of Out of This World Memorabilia in Mission Viejo, Calif.

This is Owens' second attempt to sell the ring, with the proceeds going to victims of Hurricane Katrina. A few weeks ago, it was posted on eBay, but when bids soared to $400,000, it was decided that the auction should be pulled and bidders should be pre-approved to prevent fraudulent bidding.

NFL | Giants, Jets agree on joint New Jersey stadium

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Giants and Jets agreed Thursday to build a stadium in the Meadowlands that would become the first NFL venue to be owned and operated by two teams.

The facility will be built near state-owned Giants Stadium, which is currently home to both teams and is among the league's oldest stadiums.

Specific details about the stadium plan are to be developed over the next several months, including its new name. The teams plan to put the naming rights up for bid.

CBB | ESPN back in the Midnight Madness business

BRISTOL, Conn. — Midnight Madness, the official start of college basketball practice, will return to ESPN after an eight-year absence.

The national cable network announced Thursday that ESPNU will televise five hours of Midnight Madness coverage on Friday, Oct. 14.

Following a one-hour season preview show at 7 p.m. EDT, five live, one-hour events will be shown from Memphis, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan State and Oregon.

Another reason to have a playoff

MATTHEW GIRARD

After K-State's 54-7 win against North Texas last Saturday, the Wildcats improved to 3-0 and received votes in the week-five USA Today Coaches' Poll and Harris Interactive College Football Poll.

On the surface, it would appear the boys in purple are gaining respect, and with a win Saturday against Oklahoma, K-State could possibly move into the Top 25.

But if you take a closer look at the coaches poll, Harris poll and the Associated Press Top 25 Poll, you'll notice something is a little screwy.

In the coaches' poll (which is one-third of the Bowl Championship Series rankings), 12 teams received more votes than the Wildcats' six, but of those 12 teams, three have one loss and three have two losses.

In the Harris poll (another third of the BCS rankings) 19 teams received more votes than the Wildcats' three. Of those 19 teams, seven have one loss, five have two losses and Idaho is 0-4, but has five votes.

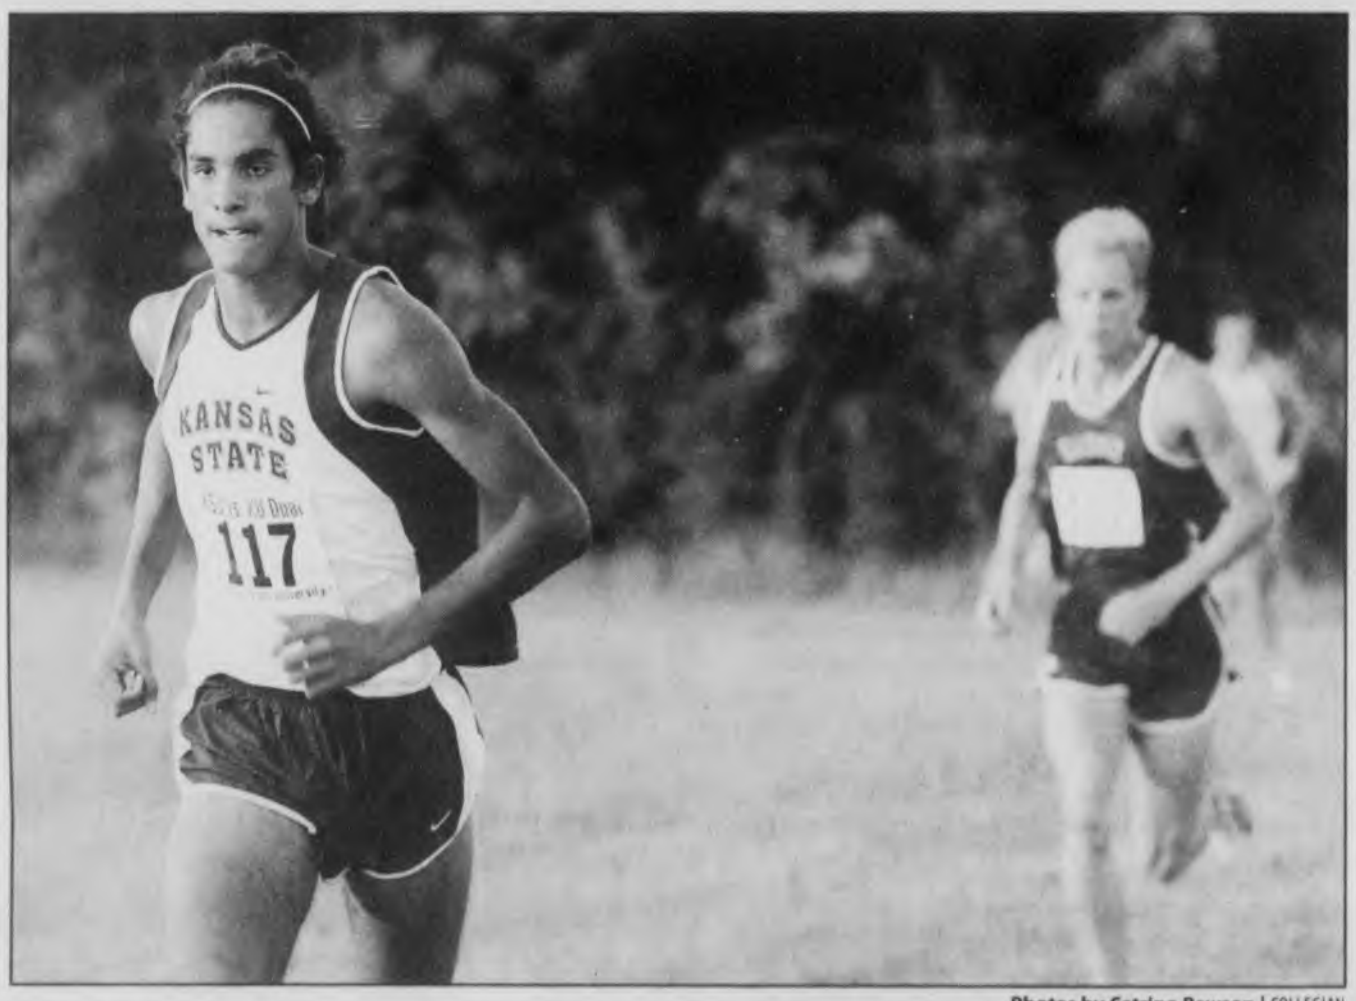
K-State didn't receive any votes in the AP Top 25, but in the "others receiving votes" category, eight teams have one loss and three teams have two losses.

I'm not advocating that K-State should have more or less votes, but how can college football fans have faith in any poll to choose the top 25, let alone the rightful national champion?

Like we've all heard before, the BCS was supposed to end the days of split national champions, but in 2003, the University of Southern California and Louisiana State shared the title. Then, last year, USC won the championship, but an undefeated Auburn team never got its shot at the Trojans.

The AP Top 25 then split with the BCS and will crown its own champion at the end of the season, giving yet another chance at a possible split championship.

To complicate the matter even more, a new poll called the Master Coaches Survey showed up on the scene Wednesday.



The poll is made up of 16 former college coaches who apparently have nothing better to do after escaping the retirement home.

Before you know it, there will be as many college football polls as there are bowl games. You will be telling your grandkids about the 'good ol' days' when there were only three national champions crowned.

Reason No. 95,247 why college football needs a playoff system.

K-State to face 68 different colleges

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The season is heating up for the K-State harriers.

After a week of rest, a greater challenge awaits the Wildcats Saturday at the Oklahoma State Cowboy Jamboree.

The Wildcats are facing top-notch Division I talent for the first time this season. The meet will feature 68 different colleges, including perennial power Arkansas. This will be the 69th running of the meet, which makes it the longest-running meet in the country.

"It's closer to a Big 12 atmosphere than the previous meets," coach Michael Smith said. "There are fewer NAIA teams, fewer junior colleges. The meet we run in is more Division I teams, so it's more competitive.

"To our kids that have run there before, they know how energized and electric it is. It's exciting to be there and fun to run there, and I think (the team members) look forward to that part of it. It's a lot of fun, and hopefully we'll rise to the challenge."

K-State is bringing a young team into a big atmosphere Saturday. The Wildcats will rely on their plethora of freshmen to anchor both teams this year, some of whom are new to the size and length of the meet.

"It's going to be an eye-opener for me," freshman Alex Umberger said. "It's going to be my first 8K race since missing out on the Lincoln (Woody Greeno) meet. I missed that one, I'm somewhat nervous, I'm excited to get back to racing. Like I said, its my first 8k race. I just hope I do well."

Freshman Jana Gwinn, who led K-State with a 19th place finish at the Woody Greeno meet, is bringing a simple strategy into the meet.

"Usually I don't set goals," she said. "I'm going to go out there, give it everything I have and do my best until I can't feel pain anymore."

Smith said the presence of so many freshman may not equal stellar results this season, but he believes the team has a solid foundation.

"The freshman that we have are either leading us or up toward the front," he said. "That normally doesn't bode well for your performance, to have too many freshman doing that, but it does bode well for the future and what could happen next year and the

Exploring local trails

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's no Rocky Mountains, but that doesn't mean Manhattan isn't equipped with sufficient trails for hiking and biking.

In fact, Manhattan boasts several popular trails throughout the city.

Weaving in and out of the Little Apple is the Linear Park Trail – a leisurely trail consisting of nine miles of scenic views along the Kansas and Big Blue rivers and Wildcat Creek.

Multiple entrances allow people to access the trail.

Trails are also available to those with handicaps from U.S. Highway 24 to Frank Anneberg Park.

Frank Gibbs, city park planner, said the trail is attractive to people who enjoy mixing up their exercise routine.

"There's quite a variety along the trail," Gibbs said.

"During good weather, we get a pretty steady flow."

Jayme Markey, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said she visits the trail about twice a week.

The main attractions are the serenity and being outdoors, she said.

"I like it because it's pretty and is a nice change of scenery," Markey said. "It's also nice because you don't have to wait for a machine."

About five miles outside of Manhattan is Tuttle Creek State Park, which offers various trails around the state park for bikers and hikers.

Trails include the Blue River Trail in Outlet Park, Spillway State Park trail, Carnahan Creek trails, Randolph State Park trails, Fancy Creek State Park trails and the River Pond Area Trail.

Joyce Dixon, administrative assistant for Tuttle Creek State Park, said the trails are well-liked by college students.

"I would say Carnahan and Randolph are the most popular (trails)," Dixon said.

However, the Spillway State Park trail has a new award-winning trail – approved by the American Disabilities Act – used only for hiking that Dixon said is easy and scenic.

"It's got great bird-watching and is not very challenging," Dixon said.

In addition to accommodating disabilities, Spillway trail is also suitable for ATVs and motorcycles.

For those who prefer more of a rush, Fancy Creek, an eight-mile hiking and biking trail, is more difficult, Dixon said.

"It's very challenging," Dixon said. "And it's the only maintained bike trail in the area."

In fact, the Manhattan Midwest Bike Patrol – the local branch of a national mountain bike patrol – worked on the Fancy Creek trails on Sept. 11 and 12, Nate Schotanus, founder and director, said.

According to the Manhattan Midwest Mountain Bike Patrol Web site, Fancy Creek trail is "definitely the best west of Perry Lake (just outside of Lawrence) all the way to Colorado."

During his weekly visit to the spillway trail at Tuttle Creek, Brent Wehmeier, junior in agriculture technology management, rides up a small hill in a muddy gully. Spillway is one of many trails in the Manhattan area where students and residents can enjoy nature.

MOVIE REVIEW

"Corpse Bride"

Movie review by Christina Hansen

Director Tim Burton is one of the most eclectic creative forces in the movie industry today.

The man behind "Edward Scissorhands," "Ed Wood" and "Big Fish" defies Hollywood norms and creates quirky fantasies that are beyond classification.

Burton has the rare ability to make dark and supernatural subject matter into a touching and whimsical story, which is exactly what he does in his latest film "Corpse Bride."

Shot in surprisingly vivid stop motion animation, the film tells the story of two shy young people.

Victor and Victoria are thrown together by an arranged marriage. Motivated by their parents' desire for social status and wealth, the wedding is less a joyous occasion and more like a business transaction.

Sensitive, socially awkward Victor (voice of Johnny Depp) is terrified of his impending wedding, until a chance meeting with his bride-to-be. Victoria (voice of Emily Watson) proves to be sweet and soft-spoken and turns Victor's dread into happiness.

A case of pre-wedding jitters, however, takes Victor to a dark and foreboding forest, where he mistakenly weds Emily, the titular corpse bride (voice of Helena Bonham-Carter).

What ensues is a sweet, quirky and often musical exploration of what happens to true love when all hell literally breaks loose.

Burton has crafted a world of eerie darkness, pervaded by haunting beauty and wonder.

The film contains the makings of a nightmare but instead comes off like an intriguing dream.

The film is darkly funny, and its best humor is found in skewering the excesses of the class-obsessed "Edwardian" society. The rigid socialites are juxtaposed with the zany dearly departed and may leave audience members wondering just who the real stiffs are.

Perhaps the only problem facing the delightfully macabre "Corpse Bride" will be finding an audience. The film is too dark for children, but bears a PG rating unattractive to many teens and adults. After the onslaught of Burton's loyal fans, will anyone else go to see the film?

If this film bombs at the box office, it's a shame. "Corpse Bride" offers humor, sentiment and a welcoming escape from reality, courtesy of Tim Burton.

Jumping from friendship to relationship doesn't work

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

Dear Fifth Year, I was making out with a girl last weekend and I was going for second base when I found the Great Wall of China blocking my way. What was this, and how can I get around it?

What you have encountered is what we call a built-in bra. Usually, a spaghetti-strap top is the culprit.

It has an extra support with a very snug layer that goes all the way around.

This is no traditional bra you can unsnap in either the front or the back, as it is one continuous piece.

If you are hell-bent on getting to second, then there is one way to get past the "Great Wall." Since you can't scale it with a ground attack, try an aerial approach. Tops with built-in bras can be breached from the top by slipping the straps over the shoulders.

Ladies, you are the first base coach and the umpire all in one.

A guy should only be trying to stretch a single into a double if you are sending him the correct signals to do so.

If you are not, don't ever be afraid to call that runner out.

Dear Fifth Year, I've recently had a close guy friend tell me he has feelings for me. Unfortunately, I don't feel the same way about him. Ever since then things have been awkward whenever we see each other. What is happening? This isn't the first time this has happened!

Don't worry, you are not alone. This seems to be a universal pattern among people our age.

The problem stems from the fact that girls have two ladders and guys only have one.

Let me explain.

Girls have a friendship ladder and a relationship ladder for guys to climb.

But guys only have a single ladder for girls to climb.

The problem occurs when a guy has gotten pretty far up on a girl's friendship ladder and then tries to jump across to the relationship ladder. Very seldom does he succeed.

What ends up happening most of the time is that he fails and knocks down both ladders in the process.

This explains the awkward situations you are having with your guy friend.

Girls, I hate to break it to you, but some heterosexual guy friend that you have is your friend because he has wanted to sleep with you since he first met you.

All you have to do is make a move on any guy friend and this theory will be confirmed.

Since us guys can't jump from one ladder to another after we've known you girls as friends for a while, I make it a point to tell girls up front that I have feelings for them.

"Oh, I could never date you, Matthew Peterworth" is what I often get in response.

But just you wait, as we become better friends, you'll see what a great guy I am, and you'll realize that you've been developing feelings for me all along.

K-STATE QUARTERBACK

K-State (3-0) at Oklahoma (1-2)

6 p.m., Saturday

History: Oklahoma leads series 67-17-4

TV: Fox Sports Net (Ch. 34); Radio: 1350AM, 101.5FM

The Wildcats made it clear this week, their focus Saturday will be on stopping Oklahoma running back Adrian Peterson. Peterson is third in the Big 12 Conference in rushing, averaging 113.7 yards per game.

No overlooking the Sooners

Wildcats not underestimating a struggling Oklahoma squad

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To those who walked by KSU Stadium at various times this week, the roar coming from inside the stadium was not an airplane doing fly-bys of the press box.

It was "crowd noise" – jet engine recordings played over the stadium sound system during K-State football practice to simulate the level of sound expected Saturday when the Wildcats visit Norman, Okla., to take on the Oklahoma Sooners.

There was also some "Boomer Sooner" – Oklahoma's fight song – mixed in for good measure.

To the players, it means one thing: be prepared for anything because it's time for conference play.

"The Big 12 is totally different," junior linebacker Maurice Mack said. "You've got fans that are fanatics. I think you're more focused because you want to keep this team from winning at home."

The Wildcats (3-0) will make the journey south to Norman for the first time since 2001 with hopes of reversing some recent bad fortune against the Sooners.

Even though the Wildcats have won once in the last five tries against Oklahoma, the Sooners appear vulnerable this year, having struggled to a 1-2 record in non-conference play. The Sooners lost 17-10 at home to TCU to open the season, and went on the road and lost 41-24 to UCLA on Sept. 17.

But while Oklahoma has a sub-.500 record for the first time since 1998, the Wildcat players and coaches insist now is not the time to take the Sooners lightly.

"I'm not sure if any other teams may be overlooking them, but I know for sure that we're not," junior quarterback Allen Webb said. "I think they're better than what their record indicates. We know they're a good football team."

The Sooners possess weapons, most notably running back Adrian Peterson, who returns after a freshman campaign in which he ran for 1,925 yards to finish second in the Heisman Trophy balloting.

Mack said stopping Peterson, who averaged 60.5 yards in Oklahoma's two losses, will be the key to stopping the Oklahoma offense.

"Peterson, he's a Heisman Trophy candidate, and we're going to have our hands full," Mack said. "As long as we get everybody to the ball and limit his runs, and hopefully keep him from getting 100 yards, I think we'll be fine."

"It would be huge, not only to be undefeated in the Big 12, but to knock off OU. That would be a great confidence-builder, and it would get us started off on the right track."

Jeromey Clary
OFFENSIVE LINEMAN

However, gone from the Oklahoma lineup is 2002 Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Jason White. His replacement, Rhett Bomar, has completed 27-of-42 passes for an average of 100.7 yards per game, thrown two interceptions and no touchdowns. All of Oklahoma's seven touchdowns this season have been on the ground, with Peterson accounting for five of the seven.

Against UCLA, Bomar completed 20-of-29 passes for 241 yards and no interceptions and ran for a score, but also fumbled once, which UCLA recovered and returned for a touchdown.

While Bomar's stats are less than eye-popping, coach Bill Snyder said he has seen Bomar improve steadily week to week.

"You can see that he plays with a great deal of confidence," Snyder said. "I think they're getting where they want to be, and it was obvious in the UCLA ballgame, as I viewed it, that they made a tremendous amount of progress. They have confidence in Bomar, and he adds a couple of dimensions that haven't been prevalent in the past."

The Wildcats will counter with a rushing attack featuring redshirt-freshman Parrish Fisher and junior Thomas Clayton, who will return to the field after sitting out the North Texas game due to disciplinary reasons stemming from his run-in with a university parking employee.

In Clayton's place, Fisher ran for a K-State freshman-record 169 yards to earn Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week.

Clayton will play Saturday, though the starter will not be made known until game time, and Clayton said he is ready to get back to playing football.

"Right now, my focus, and this team's focus, is on OU and how to beat them," Clayton said.

If the Wildcats have their way Saturday, they will roar out of Norman with their unblemished record intact and, as senior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said, a newfound sense of confidence.

"It would be huge, not only to be undefeated in the Big 12, but to knock off OU," Clary said. "That would be a great confidence-builder, and it would get us started off on the right track."

vs.

OFFENSE

The Wildcats have the most potent one-two punch at running back in the Big 12 Conference with junior Thomas Clayton and redshirt-freshman Parrish Fisher. K-State ranks No. 19 in the country in total offense, thanks to the consistent play of quarterback Allen Webb (543 passing yards, two touchdowns).

Normally, with a back as good as Adrian Peterson, the Sooners would have the edge on offense. However, quarterback Rhett Bomar has not consistently provided big plays in the passing game, and as he has not thrown a touchdown this season. The Sooners are No. 100 in the nation in total offense.

DEFENSE

Through three games, the Wildcats have shown an increased ability to pursue and tackle over last season. However, the defense has been susceptible to the pass at times, even though it ranks No. 21 in the nation against the pass, only allowing 163.3 yards per game. K-State's rush defense is solid though.

The Sooners' strength on defense happens to be K-State's strength on offense – the running game. The Wildcats run a lot, but Oklahoma doesn't give up a lot of yards on the ground (79.7 yards per game). Oklahoma has been weak against the pass, however, surrendering 786 yards and four touchdowns through the air.

SPECIAL TEAMS

With his 62-yard return against North Texas, Jermaine Moreira became the first Wildcat to return a punt for a touchdown since Darren Sproles on Oct. 25, 2003. Moreira is a threat to score every time he touches the ball. Kicker Jeff Snodgrass showed his range with a 57-yard field goal against North Texas.

Oklahoma kicker Garret Hartley has struggled this season, connecting on 3-of-5 field goals. Oklahoma is tied for last in the Big 12 in punt return yardage, averaging a paltry 6.6 yards per return. If the game is decided by special teams, Oklahoma doesn't appear to have the weapons to pull out the victory in the end.

PREDICTION

The Wildcats have not won in Norman, Okla., since 1996, when K-State walked out of Memorial Stadium with a 26-7 win over the Sooners. In 2001, Ell Roberson nearly led the Wildcats to an upset, before falling short 29-28. Since the formation of the Big 12, K-State has played well in Norman. Fast forward to Saturday where it appears to be a matchup of two teams headed in different directions. The Wildcats (3-0) appear to be putting the struggles of 2004 behind them, while Oklahoma (1-2) seems to be falling into a rut this season. K-State needs to control the run on offense and defense to win. Look for it to happen.

Sophomore wide receiver Jordy Nelson tries to pull away from two North Texas defenders last Saturday. Nelson finished with four catches for 66 yards and a score. In three games, Nelson leads the team with 11 receptions and three touchdowns.

Nelson's style all his own

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jordy Nelson and Thomas Clayton are complete opposites.

Clayton has three nicknames and as many tattoos to match. Nelson doesn't have a nickname or any semblance of a marking on his body besides the stitches on his chin fresh from the North Texas game.

Nelson is not flashy off the field, just jeans and a T-shirt, while Clayton is fresh out of the pages of Gentleman's Quarterly.

"Jordy is from Kansas; he's a local guy so his style of dress is that of relax and chill," Clayton said. "He's not trying to impress anybody. I'm not saying I am, but our style is a little different. I'd rather throw on a collar shirt, and he would rather throw on a basketball T-shirt."

The one thing the tandem does have in common, though, is they are tied for the lead in touchdowns scored this season, each with three for the Wildcats.

Nelson along with sophomore Marcus Watts made position changes during the offseason. Watts moved from wide receiver to safety and Nelson moved from his defensive position in the secondary to wide receiver.

Both have acclimated to life on the other side of the ball. Watts ranks first on the team with nine solo tackles and is second behind junior linebacker Brandon Archer in total tackles. Nelson has caught a touchdown in each game this season, and is tied with Jermaine Moreira for catches this season with 11 and leads the team with 47 yards per game receiving.

"He's been doing an excellent job," quarterback Allen Webb said. "He came in and picked up the offense. Each game he has been improving, and he's showing everybody that he will be a difference-maker and a big-time player here."

Nelson is not a prototypical receiver with his size, physical play and the speed to get down the field. At 6-foot-3, 210 pounds, he is at least 30 pounds heavier than any other receiver listed on the depth chart, yet still runs a 4.3-second 40-yard dash, making him one of the fastest players on the team.

"He pretty much has it all," senior wide receiver Davin Dennis said. "He's a big guy, a strong guy, he has speed, he basically has everything that you would want."

Lining up in the slot position with Moreira and Yamon Figurs lined up wide, Nelson finds himself in a mismatch nearly every time the ball is snapped.

Defenses that refuse to change their defensive packages and bring in an additional defensive back find themselves matching up against Nelson with either a linebacker or a safety.

Nelson found himself in that position against North Texas going for a career high four catches for 66 yards and a touchdown.

"The position of being a slot receiver gets me matched up with linebackers and safeties a lot where we can hopefully take advantage of that," Nelson said. "Hopefully we can force them to put in more nickel and dime packages in, which will open up our running game. It's just one way to create different mismatches."

Nelson creates mismatches all the time, on and off the field, and there is one that Clayton said he could solve in his wardrobe.

"I would probably throw away his tennis shoes and buy him some Diesels or Steve Maddens or something."

Stopping Peterson top priority this weekend

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State defense, ranked 13th nationally in rush defense (81.0 yards per game) and ninth in total defense (243.3 yards per game), has yet to yield 100 yards rushing in a game this season to an opponent and will look to continue that streak when they face one of the most feared running backs in all of college football.

This weekend, the Wildcats will travel to Norman, Okla., to try and stop the man who finished second last year in the Heisman voting – Oklahoma running back Adrian Peterson.

The 6-foot-2, 220-pound sophomore already has more than 2,000 yards rushing for his career along with 20 touchdowns, which include 341 yards and five touchdowns in three games this year.

"He's just a fantastic running back," coach Bill Snyder said. "He's got all of it – size, speed, athletic ability and he's the second-leading receiver on their unit, so they like to get the ball to him any way they can."

The defensive players said they do not see this as a typical game and want to prove the tradition of defense in the Bill Snyder era has returned and is ready to dominate like in years past.

"This will be a statement if we stop him from doing what he is capable of doing," sophomore defensive back Bryan Baldwin said. "This is an important game to show that the Lynch Mob is back."

Oklahoma has struggled to find offense this year, but one thing is clear: when Peterson runs well, Oklahoma wins.

In the Sooners' two losses to TCU and UCLA, Peterson rushed for an average of 60.5 yards with two total touchdowns, and in Oklahoma's lone win over Tulsa, he rushed for 220 yards and three touchdowns.

Since K-State has not allowed a 100-yard rusher this season, junior linebacker Maurice Mack said stopping the run will determine which team walks away with the win.

"We are a good, fast, physical defense, and I think if we can accomplish our goal of keeping him from scoring and rushing for a ton of yards, then we did our job, which will take the pressure off the offense so they have more opportunities to score touchdowns," Mack said.

Last year, the Wildcats kept Peterson in check in the first half, holding him to 20 yards rushing on 14 carries. Most of Peterson's yards came in the second half, when he cruised for 110 yards on 22 carries.

Junior defensive lineman Quintin Echols said he thinks the responsibility of keeping Peterson in check begins with the defensive front.

"The way our scheme is, I think it falls on the whole defense," said Echols. "But as a D-lineman, personally, if we let him get past the line of scrimmage, then it will be harder on our secondary and backers to do anything."

When asked what extra preparations they are making to get ready for Peterson, Echols said they are just practicing hard, realizing it won't be easy to contain him.

"We aren't doing anything special to get ready for him," Echols said, "but in the back of our minds we know we have to stop him because he is probably one of the best backs in the nation."

1st bilingual law office opens doors

Lawyer's services include visa processing, business compliance

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the local population continuing to expand, the demand for immigration law services has also increased. As a result, the Manhattan area's first bilingual law office, Corum Law Office, 529 Humboldt St., opened its doors in August.

"People keep telling me how desperately this area has needed these services," multilingual attorney Kimberly Corum said. "The University and Fort Riley draw people from overseas, but local attorneys were referring people to the nearest immigration practitioners they know – in Kansas City, Kan.

"My office provides cutting-edge service, and it is a lot more comfortable to have a lawyer nearby," she said.

In the past decade, Kansas has seen a rapid increase in immigration numbers, and the Manhattan area has been no exception to this trend. According to a report issued in 2000, 7 percent of Riley and Geary county residents, about 6,000 people, were foreign-born.

"Given the size of our international population and the changing demographics in Manhattan, this kind of service is absolutely essential for a number of reasons," Doug Benson, professor in modern languages, said. "First is the employment situation, and second is citizenship. Manhattan is now beginning to see the changes in demographics that Kansas has seen in the past 10 years. How could we not offer these services?"

Services provided by the Corum Law Office include visa processing, business compliance and citizenship and naturalization services.

Corum, one of the few multilingual attorneys in the state, earned her bachelor's degree in Spanish and French from K-State, as well as a master's in Spanish. She earned her law degree at the University of Kansas, where she was a Rice Scholar.

Though Corum considers Spanish to be her primary foreign language, French translations are also available at her office. If a client requires translation in another language, arrangements can be made through the office for a translator.

While the Corum Law Office caters mainly to Manhattan, Junction City and Flint Hills area residents, Corum is also available to meet needs further away.

"As the world goes global, Manhattan goes global," Corum said. "Immigration and languages aren't just for big cities on the coasts."

Marjorie Colladay, center, and Arthur Colladay, left, were married in the FarmHouse fraternity living room by officiant Mark Armstrong, right. The fraternity organized and planned the ceremony for Marjorie Colladay, who is the house cook, in less than two days.

FarmHouse puts on wedding in 48 hours

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After their house cook told them Wednesday night she was getting married that Friday afternoon, the members of FarmHouse put together a wedding in less than 48 hours.

Marjorie Colladay wed Arthur "Sparky" Colladay Sept. 2 in the FarmHouse living room. Colladay, who has been the fraternity's cook for eight years, wore a maroon dress and corsage purchased by house members. Mark Armstrong, father of FarmHouse member Chuck Armstrong, officiated the ceremony.

The men arranged a flower altar at the front of the living room and purchased refreshments for the reception. Luke Schooler and Daniel Munden played piano and guitar at the ceremony.

About 100 members, including out-of-house members and K-State graduates, attended the ceremony.

Frances Russell, house mother for FarmHouse, said she has organized weddings in the past and worked with the men to prepare the wedding.

"We all worked together and cleaned the house from top to bottom the night before the wedding," she said. "It was a real good effort to everyone."

Russell said Marjorie Colladay has been a friend to FarmHouse.

"She's been a very good friend to myself and the boys," Russell said. "Giving her a wedding was just a Christian thing for me to do."

Jake Lauer, FarmHouse president and senior in food science, said Colladay is like a family member to FarmHouse men.

"We wanted to be there for the wedding and she did too, so it made sense to have it at our house," Lauer said.

Colladay said she was shocked and brought to tears by all of the men who stayed in town over Labor Day weekend for the wedding.

"I want to thank the boys for doing this nice thing," she said. "These are a great bunch of guys."

MEET | Men's team competes as full squad for 1st time at OSU Jamboree year after that. I'm happy they're good and they're competitive now, because it's helping us, and we need them."

The Jamboree will give K-State a better indication of where they fit into the Big 12 conference picture.

The Wildcats have been somewhat plagued by the injury bug this season, and this will be the first time the full men's squad will face serious competition since the KSU/KU dual.

The women's squad is still hampered by injuries and hasn't run a full squad yet this season. Gwinn said the injuries make it tough to set expectations before the meet.

"We have a few of our signature girls out right now, so we don't have a full lineup of girls, so we really can't set any high goals for our team," she said.

Unlike the women, the men are running at full strength.

"Now we have the full squad so I feel like what you see is what you get," Smith said. "That's what we have on the men's side. I hope they're up to the challenge; it's going to be a tough meet."

match and our fans will hang in with us," Fritz said. "We need our fans here when we have an opportunity to play at home."

Redshirt freshman Megan Kroeker, from Solomon, Kan., said K-State needs to learn from its mistakes.

"We can't dwell on our mistakes," Kroeker said. "We have to shake them off and keep working hard."

Kroeker is seven kills shy of 100 for her career, and said she wants to reach the milestone Saturday.

"That can be a goal for me to strive for," Kroeker said.

said when a fraternity or sorority is accused of violating the Substance Abuse Policy, an investigation process begins to check the validity of the accusations.

During the investigation process, IFC looks at available sources such as pictures and news articles.

They also talk to participants, officers of the organization and neighbors.

"They will give notice to the chapter that there is an investigation on something," Jones said.

There are two ways to investigate an alleged offense, Jones said.

In an informal process, a representative of the chapter can work out a resolution with IFC that the chapter and IFC think is appropriate considering the alleged violation.

In a hearing process, a panel of IFC executive officers and alumni representatives will determine if a breach of policy occurred.

If so, they will determine the appropriate response.

Jones said he couldn't comment on whether or not Sigma Nu was being investigated.

"We don't make a comment ahead of time if somebody is in the midst of the process," he said.

Although Holk said Sigma Nu was "in trouble," he would not say whether the fraternity was under investigation by IFC.

"We want to lay low for now," he said.

Sigma Nu president Matt Winger said, "No comment," when asked if the fraternity was under investigation.

The KU Sigma Nu chapter's charter was revoked by national headquarters after an internal investigation found the fraternity in violation of policies dealing with the treatment of new members.

The last fraternity K-State's IFC removed from K-State was Acacia.

Acacia was removed from K-State May 9, 1999, after IFC found the fraternity guilty of two human rights violations, three substance abuse violations and four hazing violations. The Acacia fraternity was back on campus in 2001 but was not allowed to live in a house until 2002.

said. "If we don't pay for a justice system that provides equality, what then does 'justice' mean?"

Williams, a professor at Columbia University School of Law, is a recipient of the MacArthur foundation "genius" grant of $500,000.

She has authored several books, as well as articles for scholarly journals, newspapers and magazines.

John Walker, senior in food science, said Williams' lecture provided different perspectives on important issues, including race.

"It's hard to underestimate the role race plays in American life," he said.

Olivia Collins, chair of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, said Williams' message was timely and thought-provoking.

"She just really made me think," Collins said.

"It was wonderful to hear a speaker who challenged my thinking."

Shaking hands with a representative of the Chimes Junior Honorary, Victoria Luhrs, senior in education history, along with her sister Lauren, junior in human ecology and mass communications, with their mother Barbara and grandparents Virginia and Lauren Roe, receive the K-State 2005 Honorary Family award before the volleyball game Saturday.

3 generations of K-Staters celebrate family tradition

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lauren Luhrs, sophomore in human ecology and mass communications, can't remember her first trip to a K-State football game at six weeks old, but she can remember Willie the Wildcat.

"I was afraid of Willie the Wildcat when I was little," she said. "But I have definitely overcome that fear."

Her older sister, Victoria Luhrs, senior in secondary education, is currently student teaching in Kansas City, Kan. Victoria Luhrs said she remembers the cheerleaders and Willie but also the vast amount of purple that stuffed her closet.

"Our mom dressed us in purple since we were young," she said. "She used to tell people that her girls didn't need pink. We never had anything that was pink. It was all purple."

The Luhrs family, including sisters Lauren and Victoria, their mother Barbara and grandparents Virginia and Lauren Roe, was recognized with K-State's 2005 honorary family award at the beginning of the K-State women's volleyball game on Saturday.

The award, given by Chimes Junior Honorary, includes an essay contest for applicants.

"We knew the award existed because the family who won last year was friends of ours," Lauren Luhrs said.

"So when the applications came out, I was like, 'What the heck?'"

When filling out the application, she included the affiliation her family has had with the university over the years, including strong involvement with the K-State Alumni Association.

She also added her own definition of family and how important her family has been in her university experience.

"My grandparents are a big part of the K-State life," Lauren Luhrs said.

"We really value the past, present and future of K-State."

But she said she has come to see and appreciate the family of students, alumni and faculty at K-State.

"I love everything about K-State," Lauren Luhrs said. "I think when you come to it, it's a big family. It's kind of fun, because K-State's style is one big family."

Victoria Luhrs said, for her, K-State has always meant growing and learning with those she loves.

"It's always a family event," she said. "It doesn't matter what organization or event, it was all about the family.

"The people at K-State have an understanding of family. They really celebrate diversity of background and how family is involved in that."

The sisters agreed that some of their most memorable experiences included traveling to and attending football games with their family.

"The two Fiesta Bowls were probably the most fun to experience as a family and tailgating with friends," Lauren Luhrs said.

Victoria Luhrs said many of their memories stem from special trips to the K-State Student Union or just spending time together at games.

The girls laughed together as they remembered how often their mother interweaves their experiences at the university with her own.

"Mom always spices up trips to Manhattan with stories when she was here," Victoria Luhrs said. "She is always tying in things about when she was here."

Barbara Luhrs, Overland Park, Kan., said watching her daughters at K-State has been an exciting opportunity to see the tradition continue.

"It's wonderful," she said. "They do some of the things that I did when I was here, but then they also do more on top of that."

Becoming K-State's honorary family has also been an honor for Barbara Luhrs and her entire family.

"We have been lifetime supporters for K-State," she said. "My parents were always here. Most of the activities we do are in three generations."

Although her daughters will both graduate from K-State in the next few years, Barbara Luhrs said she is not worried about the family's tie to the university.

"I don't think it will ever end, even when they leave," she said. "I will still be coming here."

Oklahoma student identified in explosion

By Jeff Latzke
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. – A University of Oklahoma student with "emotional difficulties" was identified Sunday as the person who was killed when an explosive attached to his body detonated near a packed football stadium, authorities said.

The body is believed to be that of Joel Henry Hinrichs III, 21, Salvador Hernandez, Special Agent in charge of the FBI in Oklahoma, said in a news release.

"We know that he has had what I would call emotional difficulties in the past. And as I said, this is an individual death. There is certainly no evidence at this point which points to any other kind of motivation other than his personal problems," University of Oklahoma President David Boren told reporters Sunday afternoon.

Boren declined to say where Hinrichs was from, but a student telephone book lists a permanent address in Colorado Springs, Colo. He said he didn't know whether a suicide note had been found.

Hinrichs' father, Joel Henry Hinrichs Jr., said he was very surprised to hear the news about his son.

"We exchanged e-mails on an irregular basis, several in the last month, and nothing seemed out the ordinary," the father told The Associated Press.

His son was a National Merit Scholar who graduated in May 2002 from Wasson High School in Colorado Springs and began attending OU in the fall of that year with a major in mechanical engineering.

Chili's profits to benefit relief fund

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People wanting to help those left without electricity, homes or food in the wake of Hurricane Katrina can do so by eating out today.

Chili's Grill & Bar, 213 Fort Riley Blvd., will be taking part in "Dine for America" today, a national event organized by parent company Brinker International. The company will donate 100 percent of today's profits to the American Red Cross's Hurricane Katrina Relief Fund, Chili's Bartender Emily Rucker said.

Rucker said the corporation hopes to raise $1 million nationwide for the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

A press release from the corporation said that all its restaurant chains will be participating. Its restaurants also include Romano's Macaroni Grill, On the Border Mexican Grill and Cantina, Maggiano's Little Italy and Corner Bakery Cafe.

The release said other famous brands that are not a part of Brinker are also participating, including Applebee's, Olive Garden, Outback Steakhouse and Red Lobster.

Management of the local Applebee's was unable to say if they were participating.

Fashion faux pas are no longer an excuse.

Or at least that's what several Manhattan Town Center stores are trying to prevent.

This week is the Town Center's fall fashion week, showcasing the latest fashion trends from geek to chic.

The Buckle, Maurice's, Aeropostale, Hot Topic, Halloween Bootique and the Gap are among the many stores participating in fashion week from Sunday through Saturday.

Shannon Alexander, assistant manager of Aeropostale, said most stores will showcase fall and winter wardrobe.

"I'm not sure exactly what we'll be showcasing," she said. "It will probably be quite a bit of denim, corduroy jackets, pressed vests, sweaters, scarves and gloves."

Stores will display clothing on live models in area located near the customer service desk. Alexander said the format of the event is much like a runway model show.

Other stores, however, also plan to add some flair to the showcase. Cindy Kult, district manager for Buckle, said her store plans on having an in-store show, in addition to participating in the week's events.

"On Thursday night, we're having an in-store fashion show, but we're going to have live models in all of our windows," she said. "We have Tri-Delts, Chi Omega, Delta Epsilon and Pi Kappa Phi

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Senators introduce bill
Kansas Senators Pat Roberts and Sam Brownback introduced a bill Monday to keep anyone convicted of a capital offense from being buried in a national cemetery. Current law allows those sentenced to life with a chance of parole to be eligible for the military honor.

Story, Page 10

DeLay charged again
Rep. Tom DeLay was charged with money laundering Monday by a Texas grand jury. The new indictment came hours after DeLay's attorneys filed a request to dismiss the case, stating that the conspiracy charge was based on a law that was not effective until 2003, a year after the alleged money transfers.

Miers nominated
President Bush named White House counsel Harriet Miers to a Supreme Court in transition Monday. The 60-year-old former private attorney and keeper of campaign secrets "will strictly interpret our Constitution and laws. She will not legislate from the bench," Bush said.

DON'T FORGET

The American Red Cross will have a blood drive from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union.

Luis Caffarelli from the University of Texas at Austin will speak at the 17th Harry E. Valentine Lecture at 2:30 p.m. today in Throckmorton 1024.

McCain technology among Big 12's best

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After almost two years of planning and installation, McCain 324 is home to the most up-to-date technology on campus.

The room now contains 15 student workstations with Apple G5 dual processors, 20-inch flat panel displays and keyboards. There are 54 individual units for students and a state-of-the-art lectern for instructors.

"What I think is pretty cool is when you go from the last in the Big 12 to the top of the Big 12 in one small swoop," Gary Mortenson, professor of music, said.

Planning for this project began in January 2003 and installation of the software took place from January to August 2005.

The project cost totaled $181,000, which was generated from multiple sources, including the vice provost for Academic Services and Technology, Division of Facilities and the Department of Music.

"It's been a long-term project at the vice provost office to improve learning environments on campus," said Elizabeth Unger, vice provost for Academic Services and Technology and dean of the Division of Continuing Education.

"The goal is to provide an educational learning environment for our students that is highly interactive and allows professors to teach skills that students need in the work world," she said.

The new software can be used for a variety of music applications. It allows a piece of music to be composed and then played back for the composer. Future band directors can choreograph a halftime show, then put a digital band in motion and watch the show.

"The system is set up so that, with the creativity of the music faculty, there is going to be an awful lot they can do," Unger said.

It may, however, take the remainder of the semester to fully integrate the new technology.

"The finest state-of-the-art, smart classroom that exists in campus is now represented in that room," Mortenson said. "Prior to this we were kind of living in the mid '90s as far as some of the basic technology we had lying around that students could access and get their hands on."

The new technology is meant to benefit all students, not just students majoring in music.

"I'm not sure there's any other place on campus where students from every other major come into the building," Mortenson said. "Music is like this."

While attending Family Day on Oct. 1, Patricia Lee, left, Chicago, tries to hula-hoop with some of her grandchildren at the children's festival area in the Bosco Student Plaza. Lee came down for the event to visit her granddaughter, Kyana Lee, freshman in architectural engineering.

K-State entertains visitors over break

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An overcast sky covered the less-than-full parking lot of the K-State Student Union Saturday morning.

Many students left Friday for fall break, but the Union stayed busy, housing College Success Day, a time for potential students and their families to check out the university, and Family Day, when current students are encouraged to have their families and friends visit K-State.

John and Barb Karlin came to visit their daughter, Meredith, freshman in interior design, and to enjoy the Family Day events.

After attending the K-State history presentation at the K-State Alumni Center, the family wasn't really sure what to do.

"I thought there would be a lot more people here," John Karlin said.

"I didn't get anything in the mail except for something at the beginning of the year."

Adam Walker, admissions representative, said the events for the College Success Day and Family Day were planned a few months in advance.

About 30,000 brochures were sent to high schools and high school counselors across the state.

Walker said the event may have suffered slightly from the conflict in scheduling with fall break.

"It's not optimum, but because it's a lot for prospective students, it might not matter as much," he said.

College Success Day included sessions and seminars for prospective students and their families.

Tara Hanney, admissions representative, said she enjoyed seeing new and familiar faces on campus.

"I always like it when people are on campus," Hanney said. "That's a success no matter how many are here."

Most of the Family Day events centered around the Union. A children's carnival in Bosco Student Plaza provided children the opportunity to watch jugglers, play with sidewalk chalk and hula-hoops, and jump on a moonwalk.

Becky Brandsberg-Herrera, Manhattan resident and 1992 K-State graduate, said when she read about children's activities on campus, she was already packing the kids into the car.

"I saw in the Collegian that there was going to be a kids' carnival, and I knew we would be coming," Brandsberg-Herrera said.

Other Family Day activities included a chemistry magic show in Willard Hall, K-State presentations, and tours of the K-State Alumni Center, McCain Auditorium and the residence halls.

Solar car team showcases model as part of series

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A solar car built from scratch by K-State students was on display Saturday at The Electric Cat Café in Paxico, Kan., as part of the Kansas Stories series.

The students began construction on "Paragon," which means a model of excellence or perfection of a kind, in fall 2003. The car placed 14th out of 18 teams in the North American Solar Challenge this summer.

About 20 members of K-State's Solar Car Racing Team built the car, which receives its power from solar panels.

The Kansas Stories series showcases historical sites and Kansans of interest, said Linda Geffert, co-owner of The Electric Cat Café.

Geffert said the car was chosen for the series since she has always had an interest in the car's races.

"We are trying to build awareness of what's going on at K-State and the research that is being done with alternative forms of energy," she said.

The car will also be on display 1-2 p.m. Oct. 14 in the area in front of Durland Hall and Rathbone Hall.

Ruth Douglas Miller, associate professor of electrical and computer engineering and team adviser, said K-State's Solar Car Racing Team began in fall 1995 after K-State students saw the car "Sun Race" pass through Kansas.

Matthew Dickson, senior in mechanical engineering and former project manager, has been a team member since his freshman year.

Dickson said he designed the car's outer shell and coordinated team members and their duties.

"It's like running a business because the team had to raise its own money and do its own advertising," he said.

Tyler Coverdale, sophomore in mechanical engineering and current project manager, said he spent all his free time working on the car.

Coverdale said being on the solar car team helped build his resumé and gave him a different experience.

"How many students can say they built a car that raced across the country without breaking down?" he said.

Houlihan's restaurant to take over Gold Fork

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gold Fork customers have only five more months to enjoy the restaurant.

Lauren Boukas, account executive of Fishman Public Relations, said the restaurant will probably leave by March, and then Houlihan's Restaurants, Inc., one of her clients, will take over.

Houlihan's signed an agreement with Manhattan Hospitality, Inc., to open a new branch at the Ramada Inn's hotel expansion project. The expansion will reconstruct the existing Ramada Inn to a Holiday Inn Select and the Gold Fork to a Houlihan's restaurant.

Erica Hill, Gold Fork supervisor, said employees are excited about the takeover.

Boukas said the Manhattan community is the perfect demographic for the restaurant.

"The Manhattan area serves what Houlihan's is looking for in terms of restaurant and setting," she said.

The restaurant recently launched a new prototype, which features a visible kitchen with display cooking. New locations will include a modish bar at the restaurant's center and an oversized patio in an outdoor courtyard, Boukas said.

"It's more contemporary and modern," she said.

In a news release, Bob Harnett, president and CEO of Houlihan's Restaurants, Inc., said "the new campaign is getting great reviews. We have already gotten rave reviews – people love the new design. Based on the positive initial response, we will have 300 to 400 restaurants in the next 10 years that reflect the new design."

Established in 1972, Houlihan's operates 80 restaurants throughout the country, including 52 franchised locations, with four of them located in Fairway, Kan., Hutchinson, Kan., Leawood, Kan., and Overland Park, Kan.

Today, Houlihan's is owned by Houlihan's Restaurant, Inc of Leawood, Kan.

Hill said the Gold Fork looks forward to change.

"There will be new training managers to retrain our employees for the new restaurant," she said. "Most of us will stay, but all of us are really excited about it. It's all really awesome."

TO THE POINT

Updating rooms should benefit all students

Sat in a desk in Eisenhower Hall lately? Waters? Kedzie? A brief tour of some of campus' busiest halls will quickly illustrate the neglect many of our university classrooms are in.

If many classrooms are left with posture-correcting desks from the 1950s, then by what rationale are we able to install a $181,000 computer system that is useful to only a small fraction of K-State students and faculty?

Although keeping a technological edge is important for a university hoping to compete for students nationally, we should be taking into account a wider range of student needs when it comes to the dispersal of such large sums of money.

While the ability to choreograph a digital halftime show, or listen to a brand-new piece of composed music is decidedly neat, one wonders what percentage of the university this is useful for. Especially when some classrooms are bereft of such "modern technology" as an overhead projector or even the vaunted dry erase board.

While the presence of this technology will be a draw for those who can use it, the dilapidated facilities in many of our most populous colleges leave much to be desired by prospective students, desires that could potentially be filled at another university.

When the tuition money that is paid by every single student to assure a quality education is routed to speciality facilities, then it is difficult to comprehend what, exactly, the rest of us are paying for.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Ladies first

Gender, race shouldn't be qualifying factors for justices

JACI BOYDSTON

After Sandra Day O'Connor's June resignation from the Supreme Court, the seat of the first female justice has been patiently waiting for a new owner.

Since John Roberts, President Bush's initial pick, has been elevated to chief justice, President Bush expressed interest in appointing another minority to the Supreme Court, most likely a female or Hispanic judge. Monday, Bush chose Harriet Miers, a White House attorney with no prior judicial experience.

Since so little is known about Miers thus far, one can't help but think that her most attractive characteristics to Bush are her conservative politics, her Texas background and, of course, her gender.

Bush's timely interest in diversity on our highest court is either highly commendable or highly strategic – excuse me, strateger-ic. In a time when his approval rating is nearing all-time lows and celebrities are loudly proclaiming that he "doesn't care about black people," the latter explanation seems more likely, but let's give Bush the benefit of the doubt.

Diversity in a representative government is a goal we all should be striving for, just as Bush is doing with his appointment of another woman to the Supreme Court. In fact, our ideal Congress, as representatives of the general population, should be about 75 percent Caucasian, 12 percent African American, 12 percent Hispanic and comparable percentages of other races and ethnic groups. Fifty-one percent should be women, and, depending on which source one consults, two to 10 percent should be gay.

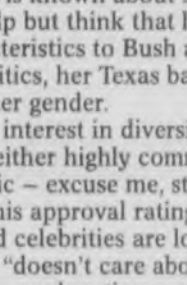
However, the Supreme Court is very different from Congress. While congressmen are elected to represent the public's interests, Supreme Court justices are called upon to interpret the laws of the land – independently from their personal views or ideas.

Diversity just isn't something we should mandate for the Supreme Court. To say we need certain demographics represented on the court is tantamount to saying that the Constitution means something different depending on one's demographic makeup.

Never mind the fact that it's professionally insulting to reduce a judge to the sum of his or her cultural background, it's also completely untrue, as justices over the years have proven.

The conservative champions of the current court, Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, vote together in 80 to 95 percent of cases (depending on which source you trust), despite the fact that one is a Catholic Italian from Brooklyn and the other is an African American from a small town in Georgia.

Take the "Minnesota twins" as well, former Chief Justice Warren Burger and former Justice Harry Blackmun – although the pair went to kindergarten together in Minnesota, their shared backgrounds and demographic characteristics didn't stop them from drifting toward opposite ends of the ideological spectrum (and, ironically, growing to hate one another).



So if race and sex don't determine how a justice will vote, what's the point of purposely choosing a justice based on those characteristics? Creating a role model for underrepresented minority groups is a nice thought, but it's not worth devoting an entire Supreme Court seat to that goal.

If Miers is the most qualified person for the job, she should be confirmed and allowed to take her seat. However, if gender has become a more important qualifying characteristic than a solid judicial record – or any judicial record at all – the Senate should reject her and force Bush to come up with a more qualified candidate.

Americans will always be 'over there'

JONAS HOGG

The years since Sept. 11 have seen an increase in the slack-jawed phenomenon of bumper-sticker patriotism.

Gigantic red, white and blue eagles look fearsome as they stare out of rear windshields as "God Bless America," "These Colors Don't Run" and "Proud to be an American" litter the grand American drive-scape.

Cutest of all, and strikingly rare, are the stickers with "Until They All Come Home" scrawled in pretty writing.

A neat sentiment of bumper sticker patriotism, but they never "All Come Home."

They may come home from "over there" only to be sent "somewhere else." At least in our current "over there," Iraq, people are being killed in a concentrated location. Too many war zones on the evening news gives one a headache.

Eventually, either by choice or rout, they will all come home from Iraq. It would be nice for them to walk off of the plane but a good many have needed carrying recently. But once they are all home it will only be a short while before another "over there" crops up.

This is the price for having a big, fancy military, the people paying for it want to see it do big, fancy things. Pictures of million-dollar planes dropping million-dollar bombs are more vote inspiring than pictures of million-dollar planes, dust-covered and cobwebby.

So we went off to do big, fancy things the world over. Sometimes, if we do them big enough, fancy enough and long enough we enjoy sticking around for a time afterwards.

We still enjoy a large military presence in Germany, even though the Nazis are gone and the communists have abandoned Eastern Europe in favor of tenured U.S. academia.

We have "over theres" in South and Central America. We are "over there" to fight the fond illusion of the war on drugs. Billions of dollars and thousands of human lives have been spent, but drugs are both cheap and plentiful inside the United States. Doubtless, we will be "over there" for quite some time.

We have "over theres" throughout Africa; where we fight the war against poverty or hunger or some other such nonsense. Billions of dollars and tons of food have rendered Africa no less poor or hungry – Africa will cease to be poor and hungry when it decides it no longer wants to be poor and hungry.

"Over there" in the former Yugoslavia we are sure that we have made peace between Serb, Croat, Muslim and Albanian. Yet, not sure enough to remove armed patrols.

"Over there" in Central Asia we find our big fancy military continually confounded by brutal weather and the supreme strategic genius of poppy farmers.

Ostensibly we are "over there" fighting, so that we have freedom "over here." This is a confusing argument. No one "over there" voted for the Patriot Act. No one "over there" incinerated a house of worship in Waco, Texas. No one "over there" pulled the trigger that killed a mother holding her baby at Ruby Ridge.

Odd that no one "over here" has had to answer for any of these breaches.

The bumper-sticker patriot maintains that we need to be "over there" to spread freedom and democracy and cotton candy plants or whatever it is that we purportedly spread. It's for the good of everyone, benefit of the world, blah, blah, blah.

"Until They All Come Home" is a touching bit of sentiment. But as long as "over there" can distract the majority from the problems "over here" then we will continue to be there.

Perhaps if we stay long enough we will be able to market "Until They All Go Away" stickers to "over there's" bumper sticker patriots.

Many students living off campus are familiar with apartment living.

This is true for Jake Schmidt, Chris Hargis and Casey Hicks. The three have lived together at Chase Manhattan Apartments for two years, having met in the residence halls.

Hargis, senior in kinesiology, said that their rent is not bad.

"It's probably the cheapest you could find," he said.

He also said their utilities bills are low. Each person pays $270 a month in rent for the three-bedroom apartment and approximately $80 a month for other bills.

The Council for Community and Economic Research's Cost of Living Index lists Manhattan as a 95.8 percent based on the 100 percent national average.

"There's just not near the competition here as there is in a city," said Hicks, senior in electrical engineering.

Hargis said he agreed, and apartment costs aren't as varied in Manhattan as in larger cities.

"It's a monopoly, like Varney's," He said. "It doesn't matter which apartment you choose, most of them are run by the same management."

Hicks, however, said he believed eventually, these prices are bound to increase.

"It's going to get more expensive for students, with Fort Riley getting more troops," said Hicks.

Schmidt, senior in marketing, said the location of their apartment is convenient.

"It's good for tailgating, we can just walk over to the game," he said.

Their three-bedroom, third floor apartment is only a short walk to the laundry and exercise rooms, office and pool area.

"It's nice to have the pool," Hargis said. "The dryers suck, and we'll go to the fitness center every once in a while. It's okay if you like machine weights."

Hargis said they also grill almost every night on their patio balcony, where they also grow tomato and pepper plants.

Despite the report, Schmidt and Hicks said they usually have people over once a week for either poker or games.

"We try to have poker nights, but it's hard with people's schedules," said Hargis. "We'll have people over to watch Chiefs games."

Other than that, these three said they don't have big parties anymore.

"Once in a blue moon we'll have a big party because the cops have cracked down on noise," said Schmidt.

They received a citation at the beginning of the year with only 15 people in their apartment, and they said they are still angry about it.

Their biggest party was the first week of living at their apartments.

"We invited fifteen people and over one hundred showed up. We had to move people outside to the breezeway. We got scared and started dumping out cups of beer just so people would leave," said Schmidt.

Several other odd things have occurred at their place as well.

"We've had random people just walk in because the numbering system here is weird," Hargis said.

Hicks said that they originally looked for a house to live in rather than an apartment.

"But it's hard to find two and three bedroom houses, it seems like one room is always tiny," he said.

"We like how we see (each other) because in bigger houses you may never see your roommates," Hargis said.

"And we all get along," said Schmidt.

They said their main concern about their apartment complex is with the safety of vehicles.

"I've witnessed a guy breaking into cars," he said. "I've had to talk to the cops three or four times because of some reason or another. My windshield was broken, and Casey's car has been broken into twice."

Several other vehicles have been broken into in the past as well.

"There's no cameras here," Schmidt said. "The cops seem to only patrol on weekends, looking for parties," said Schmidt.

However, they agreed that the management is overall okay and an important factor in their apartment life.

"You might have to remind them about fixing stuff," said Hargis.

But from what they've heard about some house landlords, they said they have it pretty good.

Agronomy teaching assistant recognized

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

She likes dirt.

DeAnn Presley, graduate student in agronomy, won the Graduate Student Teaching Award from the North American Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture for her graduate teaching assistant work instructing soil courses at K-State.

She said she enjoys learning about soil because it incorporates geology, geography, agriculture and the environment.

"It's the interface between the environment and the earth that we live on," Presley said. "It affects our daily lives."

She said she typically teaches three to six hours per week. This semester, Presley is teaching Introduction to Soils lab and Soil Genesis and Classification in addition to research work.

"You get to touch the future by teaching," she said. "It keeps you young. It's fun and I like it."

Presley was nominated for the award by Michel Ransom, professor in agronomy. She filled out an application, which she submitted with letters from administrators and past and current students.

Kristen Evans, senior in agronomy, wrote a letter on Presley's behalf. Presley taught Evans in a Soil Genesis and Classification laboratory.

"She'll sit and listen," Evans said. "Basically she makes it very easy to understand what she's talking about. You don't have to worry about asking questions."

Presley is also the assistant coach for K-State's nine-member soil judging team. She works with the new members and manages the equipment.

"I try to build confidence," she said. "They bounce questions off me and I answer them."

The team participated Thursday in the Region Five Collegiate Soil Judging Contest in South Dakota. The team won the team judging contest and placed second overall, team member Matt Meyerhoff, senior in agronomy, said.

Individually, Leah Ferdinand, sophomore in agronomy, took third; Ryan Flickner, senior in agronomy, placed fifth; Meyerhoff placed seventh; and Adam Heitman, sophomore in agronomy, took ninth, Meyerhoff said.

Meyerhoff said Presley takes care of new team members, guiding them and gradually weaning them off coaches' help.

"DeAnn really cares about the students," he said. "She'll always try a new technique until something clicks. She won't write off a student."

Presley earned a bachelor's degree in agronomy from Iowa State University and a master's degree from K-State in agronomy. She plans to finish her doctorate and graduate from K-State in fall 2006.

Redshirt freshman Jenny Jantsch returns a serve from Texas A&M during Saturday's match.

Volleyball team ends losing streak

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One losing streak ended Saturday, while another was kept intact.

The No. 16 K-State volleyball team improved to 12-3 overall, 3-2 in the Big 12 Conference, with a 3-0 sweep of Texas A&M on Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats swept No. 23 Texas A&M, 30-16, 30-21, 30-22, keeping the Aggies winless at Ahearn (0-10) while the Wildcats avoided their fourth-consecutive loss to ranked opponents.

Texas A&M (7-6, 0-4), whose last match was postponed because of the threat of Hurricane Rita, has lost its last five matches.

The Wildcats came out on fire in game one, led by redshirt freshman Jenny Jantsch.

Jantsch, an outside hitter from Kansas City, Mo., served four aces and guided K-State to a quick 8-0 lead.

Jantsch said a good start was what the Wildcats needed.

"We had been in a little bit of a slump," Jantsch said. "The last two days in practice, we picked up the intensity, and I think it showed."

K-State setter Stacey Spiegelberg and outside hitter Sandy Werner took over from there.

Spiegelberg assisted Werner to seven kills in game one for an .875 hitting percentage, as K-State cruised to a 30-16 victory.

"Stacey (Spiegelberg) set really well this afternoon, which helped our hitters out," Werner said. "Everyone hit well, which opened up holes in the block."

Games two and three were closer at the start, but K-State pulled away in each.

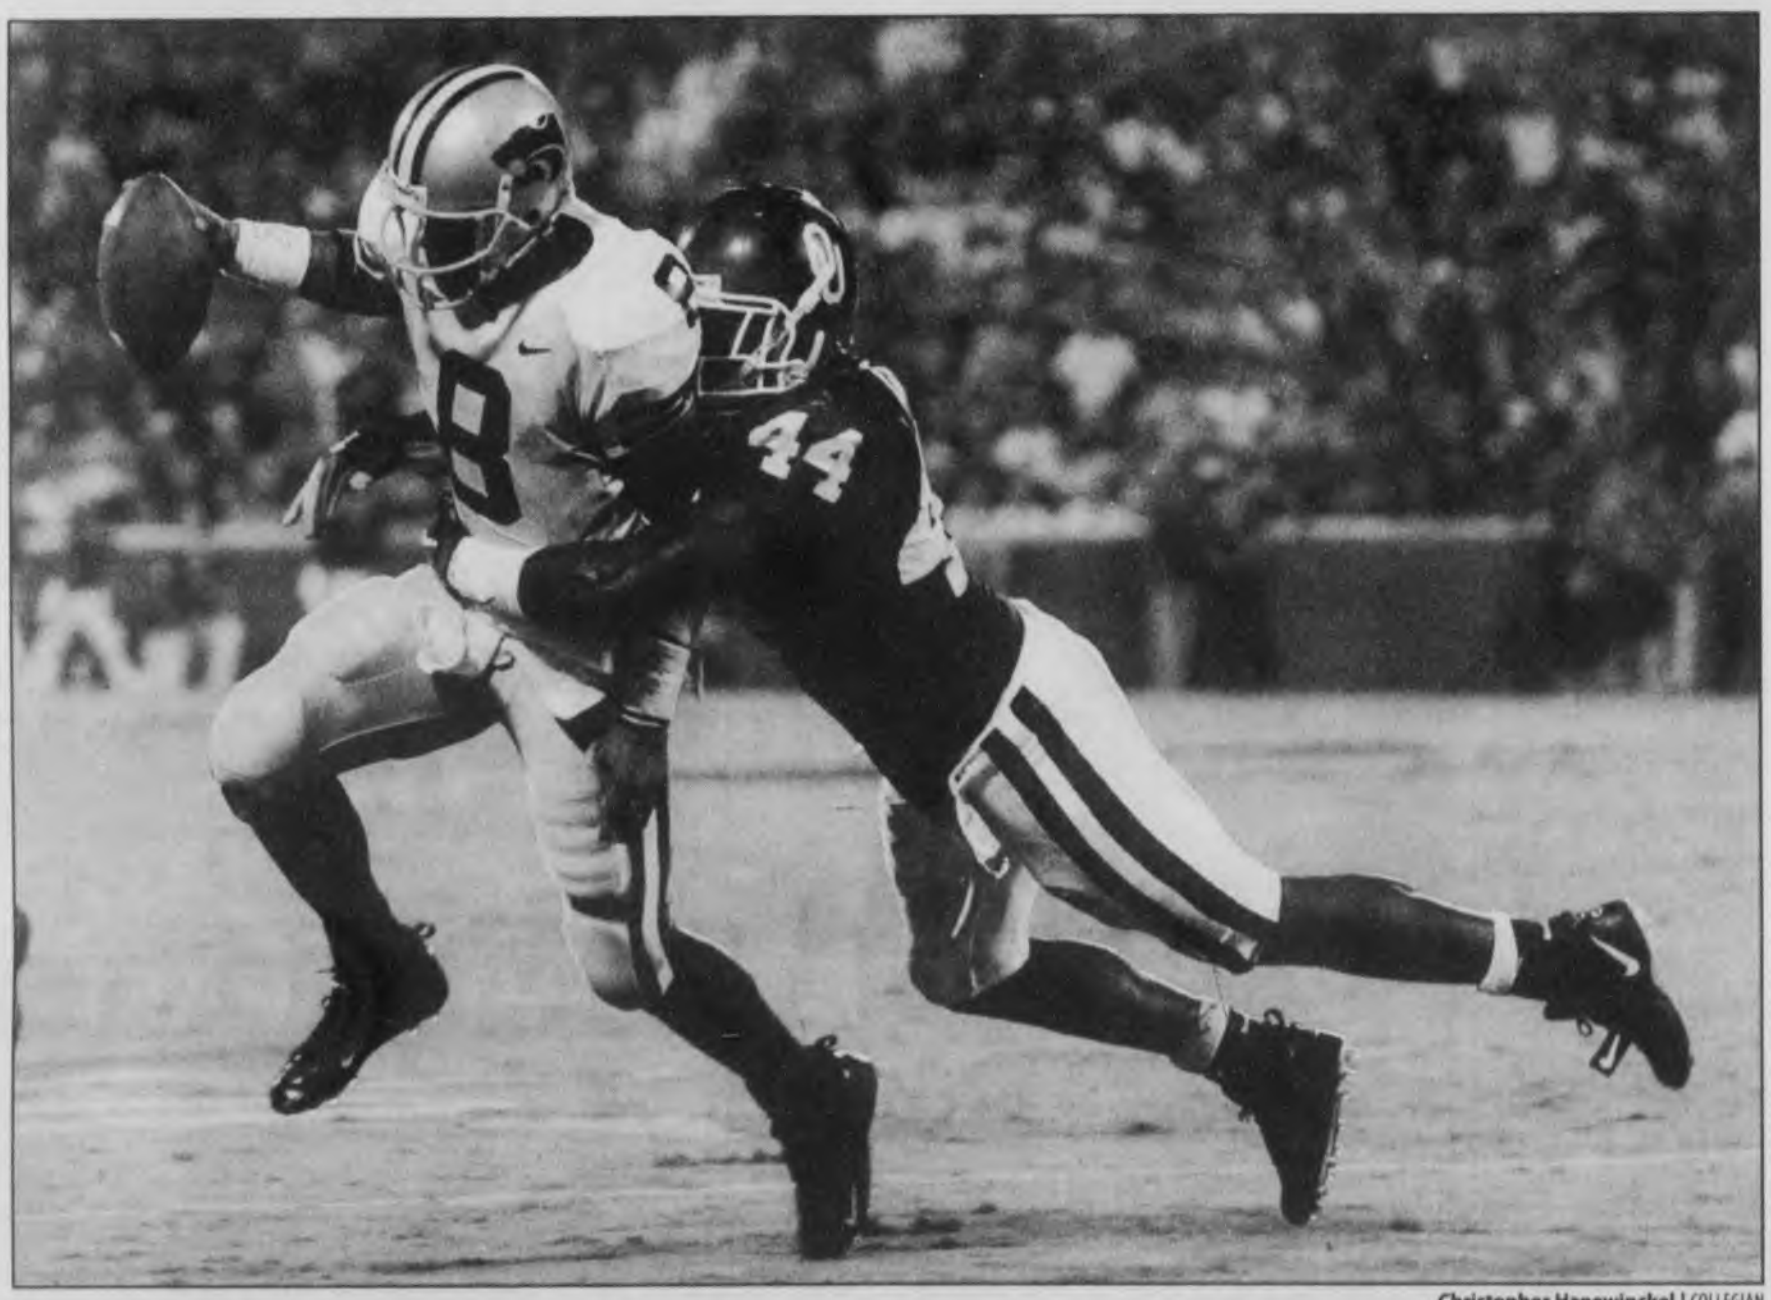
In game three, as the Wildcats finished a 14-3 run that put them ahead 23-10, the smaller-than-average student section started chanting, "Over-rated."

Werner said K-State, who posted a season-high nine service aces and held Texas A&M to zero blocks, may have played its best match of the season Saturday.

"It is always good to win, but more importantly, we played well," Werner said. "We had a lot of things clicking."

For the match, the Wildcats collected 51 kills for a .442 hitting percentage, while Texas A&M had 38 kills for a .212 hitting percentage.

Werner led K-State with 14 kills, while junior Joy Hamlin (12) and senior Agata Rezende (10) also recorded double-digit kills. Spiegelberg totaled 44 assists on the day.



Coach Suzie Fritz said she was pleased with her team's effort.

"That hitting percentage is

Wildcats suffer 1st loss of season

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

NORMAN, Okla. – K-State's first loss of the season, and the subsequent nature of how it happened, exposed questions for the Wildcats one week before K-State meets rival Kansas for the 103rd Sunflower Showdown.

"I think it was a big step back," junior quarterback Allen Webb said after the loss to the Sooners. "I think we were a little shell-shocked."

Mistakes on special teams, a nonexistent running game and penalties marred the Wildcats' performance Saturday, allowing Oklahoma (2-2) to race out to a 26-0 lead and cruise to a 43-21 victory.

K-State (3-1) gave up a safety on a punt where the punter wasn't on the field, had a punt partially blocked, gave up three turnovers while forcing none, was penalized 11 times for 85 yards and rushed for 22 net yards rushing.

The 22 yards rushing were the fewest since Oklahoma held K-State to one yard rushing last season.

"We made some major, major errors that cost us dearly in that ball game," coach Bill Snyder said on Monday. "The first half was very much unlike any performance that I can recall in our special teams and offense, they really performed out of character. There is a lot of repair work that has to take place throughout the course of the week."

The Wildcats' focus now turns to the Jayhawks (3-1), who also suffered their first loss of the season, a 30-17 setback at Texas Tech.

Following the game Saturday, Webb said the loss to the Sooners will not linger for long this week.

"You just can't let this game beat you," Webb said. "We've got to go in (Sunday) and Monday and look at the film and see what we did wrong. Then, we just have to get on KU and put this one behind us."

Few Wildcats needed reminding of the game in Lawrence last year, when the Jayhawks beat K-State 31-28 to snap the Wildcats' 11-game winning streak in the series.

"It's been on the minds and hearts of all of us as Wildcats," junior running back Thomas Clayton said. "It's something that we vowed would never happen again. We're going to bust our butts this week in practice, and see to it that it doesn't happen."

Against Oklahoma, K-State gained just 41 total yards in the first half, and after giving up 371 total yards to the Oklahoma

K-State upsets No. 1 Texas

The K-State rowing team found its rhythm over the weekend, rowing past No. 1 Texas to a first-place finish in the 500-meter sprint Sunday at the Head of the Oklahoma Centennial Regatta.

After high finishes in the weekend's previous races, the K-State varsity team raced down to the wire to beat the University of Texas in the 500-meter sprint.

In the final strokes of the sprint race, K-State beat out Texas by six-tenths of a second to claim first place.

Kaci Williams, varsity rower, said she was surprised with the team's results.

"We were pretty powerful, in sprints we were really powerful and together," Williams said. "We had really good rhythm and timing in all of the races."

K-State took three varsity boats as well as a novice boat to the regatta, and on the first day of competition, the varsity boats placed seventh, 10th and 19th in a field of 32 entries.

Oklahoma City University played host to the regatta on the Oklahoma River. K-State competed against teams from the University of Kansas, Texas, Creighton University and the University of Tulsa. The U.S. National team also competed.

Sunflower Showdown bigger rivalry than most fans might have guessed

MARK POTTER

You know the great ones: Duke vs. North Carolina, Michigan vs. Ohio State and Texas vs. Oklahoma.

These are a few of college sports' best rivalries, complete no-brainers.

In light of this weekend's Sunflower Showdown, let's consider another, yet much-less-touted college rivalry between the Kansas Jayhawks and our K-State Wildcats.

Are K-State and KU even rivals?

My friends and I have debated this question since I arrived in Manhattan four years ago, and the answer might not be as obvious as you thought.

Before I delve into what differentiates a rivalry from mere competition, let me say this: "Rivalry" is one of those overused words in sports, like "must-win" and "dynasty."

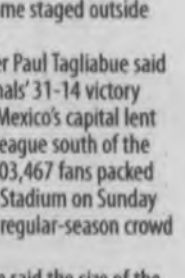
MLB | Detroit Tigers fire manager Alan Trammell

DETROIT — Manager Alan Trammell was fired Monday by the Detroit Tigers, one day after the team finished 28 games out of first place in the AL Central.



Trammell

The Tigers went 71-91 this season and compiled a 184-302 record in three seasons under Trammell, a former star shortstop for Detroit. He had one year left on his contract.

The Tigers lost an AL-record 119 games in his first season as manager, then the team took a step toward respectability with a 72-90 record last year. With a lineup and bullpen that seemed upgraded, the Tigers thought they had a chance to have a winning season in 2005 for the first time since 1993.

NFL | Vick's MRI negative, likely to start against Pats

ATLANTA — A Monday morning MRI examination revealed no structural damage to the sprained right knee of Michael Vick, and the Atlanta Falcons quarterback is expected to start in next Sunday's home game against the New England Patriots.

Vick

Two sources, one from the team and another close to Vick, confirmed the MRI results for ESPN.com. One source said the MRI was negative while another termed it "clean." The Falcons announced the results Monday afternoon.

Vick may experience some soreness in the sprained knee for a few days, but should be able to practice as the 3-1 Falcons prepare to face the defending Super Bowl champions at the Georgia Dome.

NFL | Tagliabue: A Mexican franchise a generation away

MEXICO CITY — Expansion to Mexico still is a generation away despite the success of the NFL's first regular-season game staged outside the United States.

Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said the Arizona Cardinals' 31-14 victory over the 49ers in Mexico's capital lent credibility to the league south of the border. A record 103,467 fans packed cavernous Azteca Stadium on Sunday night, the largest regular-season crowd in NFL history.

But Tagliabue said the size of the crowd wasn't the key factor.

He said the key to the future will be scheduling additional regular-season games in Mexico, and developing players in this country who can make it to the NFL and cultivate a strong fan base back home.

MLB | Braves to go with Hudson, not Smoltz first

John Smoltz has more postseason victories than any other pitcher in baseball history. He won't be starting Game 1 against the Astros' Andy Pettitte, whose 13 wins are second best, however.

Smoltz

Braves manager Bobby Cox told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution that he likely will go with Tim Hudson in Game 1 instead of Smoltz.

Smoltz has a sore shoulder and the Game 1 starter would need to pitch on short rest in Game 4 on Sunday if that game needs to be played.

The newspaper reported that Cox informed Smoltz of his decision when the team's flight returned from South Florida after a weekend series against the Marlins.

Local bands put on concert to help Hurricane Katrina victims

Pembertons drummer Matt Anderson plays during the Pembertons set Wednesday night at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque. Anderson filled in for Pemberton drummer Dave Spiker, who was out of town for the concert. Local bands played over three nights to raise $1,000 for the Hurricane Katrina relief effort.

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight bands, three bars and nights, hundreds of fans and about $1,000.

The Manhattan Music Coalition Hurricane Katrina Benefit Concert was less about numbers and more about helping victims of a tragedy, Trapper Edwards, concert organizer, said.

Eight local bands performed over three nights in three different bars for the Manhattan Music Coalition benefit concert for Hurricane Katrina. On Tuesday, Sept. 27, Placate, Villains, Jonathan and Sleepyhead played at PJ's. On Wednesday, Sept. 28, The Pembertons and 13th Step played at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque and on Thursday, Sept. 29, Shady Lane String Band and Barefoot Rebellion played at O'Malley's Alley.

"[The response] mainly was all really positive," he said. "Bands were happy do something and were eager to play."

Bands didn't receive money for playing, and the estimated $1,000 in donations, including a cover charge at PJ's Bar, all went to the Salvation Army, Edwards said.

Tattooed fans, hippies, long-haired rockers, greek hipsters and Bro Pemberton's parents, Cecil and Celia, all were there to listen to music and contribute to Katrina victims.

Pemberton, lead singer of the Pembertons, whose brother and sister-in-law Michael and Louise, evacuated New Orleans just before Katrina hit, said his parents didn't plan on attending the concert, but happened to be in town when his band played Wednesday night.

The band's main concern was losing its drummer, who was delivering donated furniture to Shreveport, La., Pemberton said.

"We found out Monday that (drummer) Dave (Spiker) was going to be out of town and Matt (Anderson) was willing to pop in," he said. "He's our old drummer, he's drummed with us before Dave did. Really, it was just kind of getting back into the groove of things, we didn't have any time to practice, or anything."

Lany Meyer, flute player for the Barefoot Rebellion, plays Thursday evening at O'Malley's Alley. The Barefoot Rebellion performed with Shady Lane String Band as a part of the Manhattan Music Coalition benefit concert.

Pemberton said he is keeping in contact with his family in Louisiana.

"I'm very personally affected by this whole situation and it's been a long haul. I've been on the phone with my brother off and on the past few weeks, and they're holding up alright," Pemberton said. "But the city's absolutely devastated. I've spent a lot of time in New Orleans and I don't see how it will ever be the same. It will never be what it was."

Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque general manager, David Latty, said the turn out for the concert was pretty good.

"Wednesday's are typically a slower night in Aggieville," Latty said. "We're very appreciative to everybody who came out and donated money, even when the T-shirts ran out. We're also appreciative to all the bands who donated their time and equipment."

There are no winners when girls compete with each other

HOLLY KRAMER

When we were younger, our girlfriends were our entire, New Kids on the Block-loving world. They'd go to the pool with us to see the cutest lifeguard and help us apply those first hideous bits of makeup. They wouldn't judge us if we conspired our way to the front of the line or cried because the entire world couldn't understand us. These days, we find ourselves conspiring against each other and in some terminal cases, still making the same cosmetic mistakes.

In the biting words of Lucy Liu's character on the lawyer drama, "Ally McBeal," when women go to a party and see a couple walk in, the women look at the girl before they check out her date. This isn't necessarily because they are attracted to the girl, they are simply checking out the competition. If it's truly a woman's world, is it one polluted by insecurity, gossip and one-upmanship?

The real problem with all the girl competition out there is that there are no real winners and no sense of how much we have in common. As someone who has been known to "forget" a few pounds when the elliptical machine at the Rec asks for my weight, I've been noticing how the competition is in full force almost every place I go. Sometimes, it's sneering at me in a bar or restaurant. Sometimes I'm glaring back when a fellow woman can run faster or effortlessly look better. Sometimes, it even infiltrates the bonds of a wonderful friendship when someone has a new boyfriend or is offered a better job. Let's face it; it can be more fun to talk about someone's outrageous slutty behavior than her wild, outrageous intelligence.

This competition may be due to the same media-obsessed culture that causes girls to place too much emphasis on looks and forget about creativity and a sense of self. Not only is this environment detrimental to self-esteem, it has been the cause of eating disorders, lower academic performance and even violence. In Mary Pipher's book, "Reviving Ophelia," she discovers that many young women tend to lose their assertiveness as they get older and tend to place high value on approval from peers.

One of my favorite quotes is, "Most girls choose to be socially accepted and split into two selves, one that is authentic and one that is culturally scripted. In public they become who they are supposed to be." This might explain why many guys see girls as catty when we gossip about someone in private but pretend to be the best of friends with them in public.

When push comes to shove, we all want to be respected, adored and adorable. When a girlfriend accomplishes a goal she has held dear, be ecstatic and supportive. When you see a group of girls who all look like beauty queens pass by, smile and think about how much you love to get dressed up and be with all your ladies. Don't lean in and tell your date how they looked fat. Above the dull roar of judgments and whispers, I think we're dangerously close to losing sight of the real perks of being the fairer sex: multiple orgasms, the ability to bring emotions out in the most reticent male and a plethora of diverse, genuine roles that range from a mother to a confidant.

This week, I hope all the ladies remember how refreshing it is to be a woman. Take a friend to dinner and tell her how much she means to you. Try not to go over to the dark side if you see a tiny, tan jogger with flawless skin and hair. And above all else, let yourself reveal the smart, exciting, capable woman that has been hiding behind all the competition.

I'll be hiding from those rude, inquisitive elliptical machines, feeling foolish about lying to gym equipment and with that, take myself out of the girl competition for good.

outstanding," Fritz said. "We always measure our team in terms of how they are statistically, and if they meet our statistical objectives, and today, we met nearly every one of them."

Fritz said her team played with more heart, intensity and focus than it did in its two losses to No. 8 Missouri and No. 22 Texas.

"We worked harder today," Fritz said. "They were in it, and they were fully present. It was great."

Texas A&M's primary contributor was All-American Laura Jones, a senior outside hitter from Arlington, Texas.

Jones, who averaged 5.72 kills per game entering Saturday, finished with 18 kills for a .316 hitting percentage.

K-State travels to Lawrence to take on Kansas (12-3, 4-2) at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

ROWING | Varsity crew upsets No. 1 Texas at Head of Oklahoma

The highest place finish on Saturday was produced by the novice team, which took first place in its race, beating Kansas by 18 seconds.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said the novice team worked well together for its first time racing.

"They dominated the other crews they were racing against, they rowed very well technically, they were very strong," Sweeney said.

Heather Hoffman, novice rower, said she never would have expected to come out of the regatta with a first-place finish.

"I guess before the race took place, that if someone would have said we were going to get first, that would have surprised me," Hoffman said. "But we knew we did pretty well by the time we finished the race."

Along with the first-place finish on Saturday, the novice boat qualified to compete in the races on Sunday.

K-State had three boats in the Sunday race, with two of the three boats competing for the Commodore Cup by placing in the top 10.

The varsity boats placed fourth and 16th, while the novice boat came in sixth place.

Because of the top-10 finishes, the novice boat, as well as the qualifying varsity boat, went on to compete in the 500-meter sprint against top-ranked University of Texas, where the varsity boat came away with the victory.

Although the team had success at the Head of the Oklahoma, Sweeney said he is never really satisfied.

"The team needs to keep improving, they are progressing in the right direction, and they need to keep it going," Sweeney said.

Hoffman said the practice leading up to the Head of the Oklahoma was worth it.

"We did really well, our hard work has finally paid off, so that was great," Hoffman said.

Riders rout Jackrabbits

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Equestrian team nearly sent South Dakota State home empty-handed Saturday by winning 10-of-12 events over the Jackrabbits at K-State's home opener, which the Wildcats won 170-88.

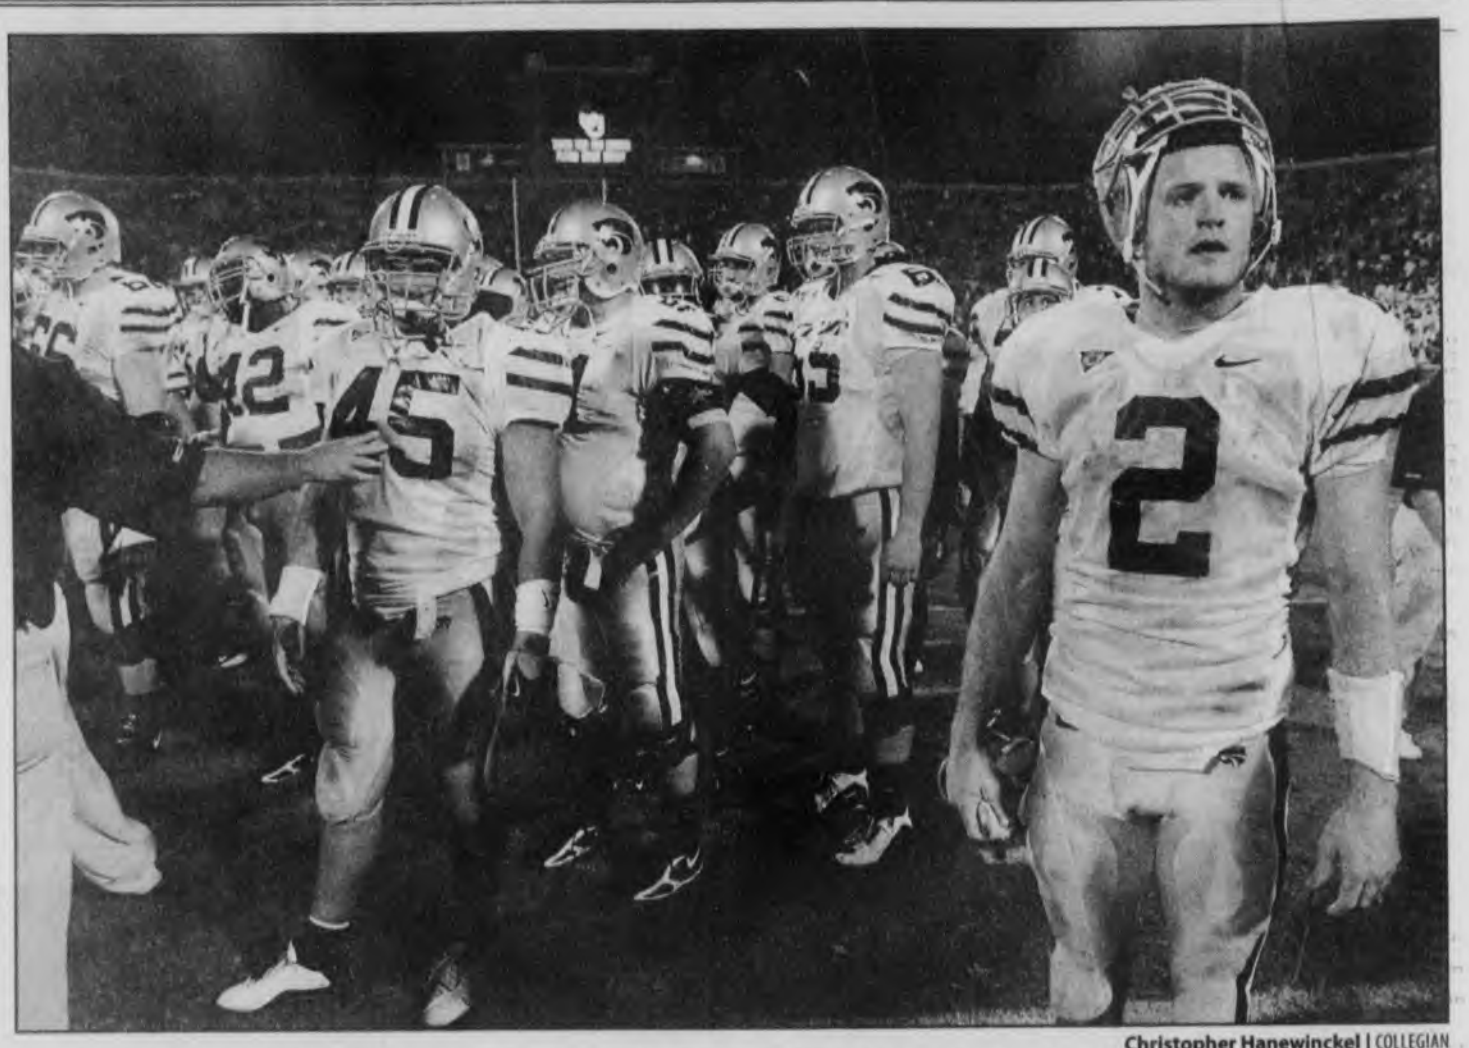
In the western division, K-State won four of six events.

Although the western riders beat South Dakota State by a final score of 72-58, they struggled with the trail competition, coach Teresa Slough said.

"The girls struggled with adjusting the horses' strides to the obstacles in the trail competition," Slough said. "South Dakota State were more experienced trail riders.

"I certainly can't be upset with anybody," Slough said.

Along with K-State's success in the western division, K-State's English division dominated as well, Slough said.



"We had a great day and placed very well in the English class," said Slough. "They pretty well dominated."

Heather Chatham, varsity rider, said she expected the team to do really well.

"The team is amazing, the new coach for English is incredible," Chatham said. "It's the strongest team I've seen since I've been at K-State."

Jenny Giraldin, freshman, said she was nervous about competing for the first time at the collegiate level, but it did not last.

"Once I got in the arena, I was ready to go and excited about what I was doing," Giraldin said.

offense for the game, Snyder said there are concerns with facing an improved Kansas team.

"The University of Kansas has developed into a good football team, and it's quite obvious that they are a good defensive football team and good against the run," Snyder said.

"We've certainly got our hands full with the University of Kansas, but even more so with trying to get our own game straightened out."

On Saturday, Clayton said the Wildcats would learn from the Oklahoma game, and put the first loss of the season behind them to focus on Kansas.

"It's rough, but we'll bounce back; we're Wildcats," Clayton said. "You guys can count on that. This is the 2005 team, and we're a completely different team from last year. You can count on us bouncing back."

COLUMN | Competitiveness not always measure of great rivalries

Today, every team seems to have multiple rivals.

If two teams from the same state play each other, they are said to be rivals. If two teams have a close, competitive history against one another, they are considered rivals. If a coach leaves one team for another, the two become, well, you get the picture.

But despite overuse and misinterpretation, rivalries are good for sports.

Rivalries provide excitement and increase the level of competition. They motivate athletes to try their hardest and play for pride. Rivalries also help fans remain interested when there is a decisive advantage and their team flat out sucks, like whenever the Kansas City Royals play the St. Louis Cardinals.

Some people say rivalries are simply based on competitiveness, but I disagree. Competition helps enhance a good rivalry, but more than that, a rivalry produces pure disgust for another team. Think of the team you'd most love to beat. That is often a primary indicator of your team's rival.

And that is why KU and K-State are rivals; because each school's players and fans can't stand losing to the other.

In fact, the only people I know who claim the Jayhawks and Wildcats aren't rivals are people who either A. Did not grow up in Kansas; B. Are not die-hard fans; or C. Grew up rooting for the Jayhawks but live in Manhattan.

To those in disbelief of the KU vs. K-State rivalry, let me clear something up.

Yes, I realize that before last year, K-State hadn't lost a football game to KU in 11 years. Yes, I know the KU men's basketball team is undefeated at K-State's Bramlage Coliseum, built in 1989. And yes, I agree KU's biggest rival is Missouri, not K-State.

But if the two schools aren't rivals, then why are K-State tickets higher commodities among Wildcat fans when the Jayhawks come to town? How come Jayhawk fans rushed the field at Kansas' Memorial Stadium to tear down the goal posts when all their football team did was beat a sub-par K-State squad last year?

Why did K-State center Tyler Hughes have a sickening look on his face when he saw someone wearing a KU jersey in the Van Zile Dining Center?

And what's your explanation for me wanting to vomit whenever I hear the "Rock Chalk" chant?

A bad season can be salvaged if a team beats its rival, which is why K-State fans will deem the upcoming basketball season a success if our team can just beat those pesky Jayhawks.

You may choose to deny it, but those are the marks of a rivalry.

New institute studies K-State professors' stem cell research

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new research institute for the study of human and animal stem cells will promote a discovery made by K-State professors.

The Midwest Institute for Comparative Stem Cell Biology was started late August to promote the discovery that stem cells can be derived from discarded umbilical cords.

"It will significantly enhance the critical mass of the research base at K-State," James Coffman, professor of clinical sciences and former provost, said.

The main purpose of the institute is to compare stem cells – both different kinds of stem cells and stem cells from different species. Umbilical cord stem cells are compared to those derived from adults or other sources of the cells and they are compared between different species.

"One thing that makes this institute unique is that other institutes established tend to look at one kind of stem cell from only one species," Duane Davis, professor in animal sciences and industry, said.

The discovery of the new source of stem cells was made by Davis, Mark Weiss, Deryl Troyer and Kathy Mitchell, all professors at K-State at the time.

"We didn't know that there were stem cells there," Davis said.

Stem cells are cells that are undifferentiated; they have not yet committed to one type of cell. Because of this, stem cells have the potential to become almost any kind of cell.

The idea for the institute, which began shortly after the new stem cell source was discovered in 2002, was to take advantage of the edge K-State had on this form of stem cells. The university has a patent pending for the research.

"I was away on sabbatical, and I was learning about stem cell biology," Weiss said. "When I came back, I looked around the country and saw that there is an initiative in California and New Jersey, and I went to the stem cell institute in Ohio and thought 'This would work well in Kansas.'"

After the discovery of the stem cells, Mitchell left K-State for the University of Kansas, where she is now a professor of pharmacology and toxicology. This move was viewed as another opportunity.

"Because stem cells may lead to new medicines and clinical treatments, we have a lot of involvement at the KU Med Center," Weiss said.

Currently, the institute is almost entirely internally funded by the university, Coffman said. He said the institute is in the process of requesting grants.

"It's easy to have these big dreams, but the tough part is rolling up the sleeves and making the institute happen, and that's where we are now," Weiss said.

Rising fuel prices hurt farmers; fertilizer, irrigation costs affected

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Farmers are feeling the pinch this harvest with high fuel prices resulting from Hurricanes Katrina and Rita.

And fuel prices are only going to get worse, said Kevin Dhuyvetter, professor in agricultural economics.

In a report presented before the House Committee on Agriculture Thursday, the costs for dryland and irrigated farms will feel an impact of an $8 to $10 increase in costs per acre due to the rising costs of fuel and fertilizer.

This report was put together by Dhuyvetter, Terry Kastens and Michael Langemeir, all professors of agricultural economics, and Samuel Funk, administrator of the Kansas Farm Management Association programs.

Funk presented the report to the House Subcommittee on General Farm Commodities and Risk Management.

This influx will be due to increases in the costs of fuel, fertilizer and irrigation energy, as stated in the report.

For irrigated land, according to the Kansas Farm Management Association, the cost per acre is expected to rise $32.89 in 2005 and an additional $15.60 in 2006.

For dry-land farms, the cost per acre is expected to increase $5.72 from 2004-05, and an additional $8.44 projected for 2006.

Natural gas prices have risen sharply from January 2004 to August 2005, Dhuyvetter said. The price has risen from approximately $2.50 millimeter per British thermal unit in 2004 to a high of $10 per mm/Btu in August 2005. The costs are projected to rise another $2-$3 in 2006.

One way for farmers to offset these costs is to pass them on to their respective landlords, Dhuyvetter said.

If, in the state of Kansas, landlords charge $36 to $40 per acre for dry-land acres, the rent would need to decrease $14.16 in 2006 from 2004.

This is almost double the decrease in rent required to offset the amount of higher fuel prices from 2005.

Landlords often charge $60 to $90 for irrigated acres, and the rent would need to decrease $48.49 in 2006.

The price of fuel is also affecting farmers and how they plant crops, Michael Burns, senior in agricultural economics, said.

"For production farmers in general it makes a tight economic situation even tighter," Burns said.

Farmers who practiced a double cropping system, in which they plant on the same ground for both spring and fall crops, are finding it difficult to manage that task, Burns said.

"Ethanol is not the answer," Burns said.

Mark Sylvester, farmer in Leonardville, Kan., said his New Holland combine burns approximately 10 gallons of fuel an hour. He and his father, Gary, cut their own crops. They haul their crops to either their farm for storage, or to an elevator three miles away. They farm 1,200 acres of cropland, and the ground they farm is dry-land.

When Sylvester trades in his equipment for new, he will probably be looking at European tractors, due to their fuel efficiency, he said.

"Cheap fuel's over," Sylvester said.

Bill to check criminal backgrounds of military burials

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. – Kansas Sens. Pat Roberts and Sam Brownback introduced a bill in the Senate on Monday to keep anyone convicted of a capital offense, including BTK, the serial killer Dennis Rader, from being buried in a national cemetery.

The senators, both Republicans, said the measure would close a loophole under current law that allows convicted murderers sentenced to life imprisonment with a chance for parole to be eligible for the military honor.

Rader, an Air Force veteran, pleaded guilty to murder earlier this year in Wichita, and was sentenced to a minimum of 175 years in prison. He is technically eligible for parole in 2180.

The bill is similar to legislation offered by Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan., and introduced in the Senate by Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., on Sept. 22.

The measure introduced Monday is more expansive than the others.

It would prohibit all military honors and color guard at funerals, and would require the Defense Department and Veterans Affairs Administration to be more proactive in checking the backgrounds of those slated for military burials.

Senate Veteran's Affairs Committee chairman Sen. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, also sponsors the bill.

participating as our models."

Kuit said models will walk out of the store window, proceed throughout the store and then walk through the mall. Models will be paired up in girl and boy couples.

"We figured it'd be fun to participate and change up things on Thursday," she said.

"Boots are fabulous this year – and we have tons of them," Kuit said.

The variety of clothes does not stop to fall fashion trends. Halloween Bootique will close fashion week on Saturday, giving people an insight to this season's hottest Halloween costumes.

No matter what people are looking for, Kuit said any person should be able to enjoy the events of the week.

"It's just a great opportunity for us to showcase our fall fashions and give people an invitation to check out the new fall looks," Kuit said.

EXPLOSION | Officials say fans at K-State-Oklahoma game were not in danger after blast

"He was a very intelligent, very private individual who somehow lost the confidence that his life would be a good one," the elder Hinrichs said. "Obviously, every parent believes their son is a good kid, and I certainly believed that about mine."

Joel Henry Hinrichs Jr. said he had not figured out whether he would travel to Norman.

Besides his parents, Hinrichs is survived by four siblings. His parents are going through a divorce, his father said.

Hinrichs was a member of the University of Oklahoma Chapter of Triangle Fraternity, a student organization of engineers, architects and scientists that promotes personal growth and professional development.

"We have no idea what happened and are as stunned as anyone else on campus," the group said in a statement. We are cooperating fully with the authorities in every way possible to allow them to uncover what happened to Joe."

Authorities haven't identified what kind of explosive device was used. Boren initially said a second explosive device was detonated by a bomb squad Saturday night but later said no other devices had been discovered.

Authorities used a "mild explosive device" to detonate a backpack found near the explosion, but it did not contain explosive materials, Boren said.

The explosion occurred around 8 p.m. Saturday while Hinrichs sat on a bench outside George Lynn Cross Hall, officials said.

Authorities cordoned off the area west of the stadium and no one was allowed to leave the facility immediately after the blast for security reasons. Spectators were allowed to go outside about 30 minutes later.

There were no other reports of injuries and Boren said spectators were never in danger.

Other than some broken windows, the building sustained minor damage, Boren said. The area remained taped off Sunday as fire crews hosed down nearby sidewalks and three buses that were parked in front of the building.

Boren said he expected the area to be opened on Monday and classes would be unaffected. Counseling will be made available to those who desire it, he said.

"My greatest concern was to make sure that all of our students were safe and that there is no ongoing threat to our students at the university, so that we could continue our classes as usual," Boren said.

The Kansas State-Oklahoma football game, which was in the second quarter at the time of the explosion, went on without interruption, and no announcement was made until the final minutes of the game. At that point, spectators were informed only to avoid the traffic circle where the explosion occurred but were not told why.

"We wanted to make sure that people were not surprised as they came out, but we didn't want to make the announcement too early because we didn't want to cause any kind of panic within the stadium because it was fully under control at that time and we were most worried about what would happen if people left the stadium," Boren said.

Meanwhile, law enforcement officers early Sunday evacuated part of the student apartment complex where Hinrichs stayed. About 40 people were told to leave and not to return for at least a day, Boren told reporters.

City officials informed other nearby residents to evacuate, Boren said.

"Obviously we're not going to let them come back into the area unless we know it's safe, and we can't have people going back into the area if it might interfere with the investigation," he said. "They're going through everything with a fine-tooth comb."

Television news footage showed investigators retrieving items from a trash bin at the complex, which is located a couple blocks east of the stadium.

Bomb squad members detonated more items Sunday night in connection with the case, but the explosions were "all planned and carefully orchestrated and posed no danger to the public," Agent Gary Johnson, an FBI spokesman, said.

Investigators have no information to suggest there is any additional threat posed by others related to the explosion, Hernandez said.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, the Joint Terrorism Task Force, OU police, Norman police and the Cleveland County Sheriff's Office also are investigating the incident.

Radiothon to benefit United Way

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President Jon Wefald wants to share a dinner with someone, and by tonight, local radio listeners may have the opportunity to take him up on his offer.

Manhattan broadcasting stations along with Cellular One, are sponsoring their seventh annual Radiothon to benefit United Way.

To participate, radio listeners can tune into select local stations from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. During those hours, all music requests will be honored after a minimum $10 donation, Maxine Coffey, executive director of the United Way of Riley County, said.

Donations are not the only feature of the Radiothon. Several items will be auctioned on-air as well, including a dinner at Harry's Uptown with Wefald.

Influenza vaccinations available

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Health Department began administering flu shots Monday morning to start preparing area residents for the looming flu season.

The department received a shipment of about 700 doses last week and made them available to those whose situation puts a priority on their need for the vaccine, health department director Charles Murphy said.

"We'll be out by the end of the week," Murphy said.

He said that 386 doses had been given as of Tuesday afternoon.

He said the guidelines set by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention were being followed in determining who may get flu shots now.

The CDC listed the following on its Web site as priorities for getting the shot: everyone 65 and older, with and without chronic health conditions; residents of long-term care facilities; anyone between the ages of 2 and 64 with chronic health conditions; children 23 months to 6 years old; pregnant women; healthcare personnel who provide direct patient care and household contacts and out-of-home caregivers of children less than six-months-old.

The shots supplied to the department came from the Sanofi Pasteur company, Kathy Dickey-Wilson, the department's clinic supervisor, said.

Dickey-Wilson said they expect another shipment to arrive close to Oct. 12, and the vaccine should be available to non-priority persons Oct. 24.

There shouldn't be a shortage this year like there was last year, when Chiron, another maker of the vaccine, failed to get its flu shots approved by the Food and Drug Administration, she said.

Dickey-Wilson said an alternative to the regular shots will also be available.

FluMist, a liquid vaccine using a live but weakened virus that is sprayed into the nostril, will likely be available from other locations in Manhattan, Dickey-Wilson said. She said the spray can only be used by persons aged five to 49 who are in good health.

Lafene Health Center is also working to obtain the vaccine for distribution. Carol Kennedy, director of Health Promotion, said the center has not received any shipments of the vaccine, but hoped to have it soon. She could not say when it would likely be available.

Saving lives

After giving blood in the K-State Student Union Ballroom, Ryan Murry, freshman in modern languages, left, raises his arm while Joanne Rayer, freshman in pre nursing, waits for her bag to fill up. The Red Cross will be in the Union again today.

Inspired by her mother's battle with breast cancer, Erin Klein donated blood for the first time Tuesday.

Klein, freshman in biology, said her mother had three blood transfusions during her illness.

"Without them, she wouldn't be here," Klein said.

So Klein overcame her fear of needles and donated at the blood drive sponsored by the American Red Cross in the K-State Student Union.

"I was really nervous," she said. "I wanted to walk out the door."

But Klein stayed and donated because it was important to her and her mother.

"It saves lives," she said.

One pint of blood saves three people, said Kristi Reif, donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross. Each pint, which is about the size of a small water bottle,

Nitrogen-filled tires may improve automobile performance

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A technology used in race cars and airplanes may improve the performance of automobiles.

Filling tires with nitrogen instead of regular air could help drivers save money on gasoline and tire wear, according to an article in The St. Petersburg Times.

"The nitrogen doesn't have any moisture in it like air does when it comes out of a compressor so it doesn't fluctuate as much," said Ron Kramer, manager of Expert Tire, 307 N. 3rd St.

If tires are 20 percent below the recommended air pressure, tire life could be reduced by as much as 50 percent and increase fuel consumption by 10 percent, according to www.gizmag.com.

Kramer said Expert Tire used to offer nitrogen for car tires about 15 years ago but stopped after about three years.

"It wasn't very popular and it was too time consuming," he said.

Finding a place to refill tires with nitrogen can be difficult and the cost can be expensive, Kramer said.

"A lot of people don't want to pay for it," he said.

The St. Petersburg Times article stated the cost of filling a tire with nitrogen could be as much as $10.

Rodger Buzzart, employee at Wamego Supply, Wamego, said he hasn't seen a local car with nitrogen tires.

"I think the only car I have seen was from out of state," he said.

The popularity of nitrogen tires is something Buzzart said he doesn't see catching on.

"It's such a rural community," Buzzart said. "I don't think it would be very cost effective around here."

Westar funds returned

Democratic Rep. Dennis Moore and Republican Reps. Jerry Moran, Todd Tiahrt and Jim Ryan are giving up campaign contributions they received from Westar Energy, Inc. executives during the 2002 elections after a settlement agreement that two former company executives and a lobbyist reached in August. Under the agreement, they agreed to pay $40,500 in fines.

Publisher to give up data

A judge ruled Tuesday that publisher McGraw-Hill must give data to government regulators about possible price manipulation in the natural gas market. U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth said the reporter's privilege in the First Amendment case to protect the confidentiality of sources is outweighed by the government's need for information.

Headlines from the nation's universities

U. Iowa males wash hands less frequently than females

IOWA CITY, Iowa – You pee. You flush. You zip. You wash your hands.

Well, maybe not the last part.

A nationwide study found men are significantly less hygienic than women when it comes to washing up after relieving themselves. And a Daily Iowan investigation discovered that Hawkeye fans were no exception.

During the Oct. 1 Homecoming football game, reporters tallied the fans who lathered with soap and water and those who didn't. Situated in the newly built restrooms at the southwest end of the stadium, reporters discovered that 62 percent of males failed to wash their hands, while only 8 percent of females fell into the same category.

Nationally, the numbers mirror the Kinnick Stadium investigation. A study by the American Society of Microbiology found that 92 percent of women make a sink stop, but only 64 percent of men do.

The reasons among men for not washing ranged from their distance from the sink to believing their hands didn't get dirty.

And maybe because they downed a few too many beers during tailgating.

"Cause I'm drunk. I don't wash them because I'm drunk," said Kyle Bogler, a 2005 University of Iowa graduate.

Drunk or not, the national study shows that cleanliness is optional for men.

Within seconds of entering the bathrooms and strategically setting up shop next to a row of urinals and sinks, three males – each decked out in what has now become Hawkeye Pink – exited without even so much as looking at the faucets.

They were the first three out of 160 that evidently deemed the step unnecessary.

"I think that's gross," said UI sophomore Christine Kenner after scrubbing. "I wash my hands every time I use a public restroom."

Most women saw no excuse for not being clean. Amid the sounds of flushing toilets and stall doors being slammed was the flow of water pulsating on and off from the five faucets in the women's restroom – a sound foreign in the men's bathroom.

VINTAGE SHOE COLLECTING SOLE DESIRE OF TEXAS A&M STUDENTS

COLLEGE STATION, Texas – After some rummaging, Rick Liang finally backs away from his closet. Grin firmly in place, he cautiously holds up a pair of black basketball sneakers. They are the original Nike Air Penny I's.

"They're starting to fall apart on me," Liang said. "The air bubbles popped. I finally got them, wore them once and then they fell apart."

Over the past few years, sneaker collecting has grown steadily from underground culture into subculture and from subculture into mainstream culture. Collectors are now expending tremendous resources, time and money just to obtain the latest Air Jordan release or, in Liang's case, to finally acquire that elusive pair of sneakers that haven't been in production for years.

"Remember Eastbay magazines?" he recalled. "Every day, somebody used to get one and bring it to school, and everybody would crowd around. They were like, 'Oh, man, I'm going to get this one, that one.' Back then, my mom used to nag a lot when I bought shoes. I used to have to hide them, keep them in the trunk or at a friend's house. But I really started collecting when I had money."

Like many collectors, Liang is now reaping the benefits of accessibility. With online services such as eBay and sneaker Web sites such as NikeTalk and Crooked Tongues, the ability to hunt down rare shoes, as well as link up with fellow enthusiasts, is literally at their fingertips.

"I go online, go on eBay," he said. "I also have friends overseas. You basically have to spend your time online looking for things that you want."

Speaker educates students on rape

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On December 31, 1995, Kristin Cooper, 20, shot herself and died on her parents living room couch.

Andrea Cooper, Kristin's mother, travels to colleges throughout the country to tell her daughter's story. "Kristin's Story: A Mother's Account of Acquaintance Rape, Depression and Suicide," was presented last night in McCain Auditorium.

Cooper said Kristin was a sophomore at Baker University and liked the small-college atmosphere.

"I still cry some times when I drive out there to give a presentation because I'm driving there to tell her story, not to see her," she said.

She said Kristin was very depressed in middle school, but it appeared to subside in high school. After graduating, she was accepted to Baker.

"I took it really hard when she left for college," she said. "Little did I know that a year and three months later, she would be dead."

Kristin told her parents she would be going to a New Year's Eve party. They went to a dinner party and were relieved to see their daughter's car in the driveway when they got home.

"When we walked in the door, I heard Alanis Morisette's song 'You Oughta Know' playing really loud," she said

Cooper said she saw her daughter on the couch and thought she was asleep, but the volume of the music was too loud. As she got closer she took Kristin's pulse and then saw the gun in her hands.

Police took a spiral notebook written by Kristen. Cooper's husband, Mike, went and got the notebook two weeks later.

Cooper said the journal started out happy and then went into entries on what it was like to be raped.

Cooper found out that it was a lifeguard Kristin had worked with. Kristin was at a friend's party, and he asked her to stay over and watch a movie, then raped her. Police said without Kristin's testimony there was nothing they could do.

"Rape is a crime of the heart for the victim and a crime of convenience for the perpetrator," she said.

Cooper said she was glad all the men came to the presentation because it showed their support for the women who go through rape.

"It breaks my heart that I was unable to help Kristin, but I hope and pray that I was able to help one of you," she said.

Katie Moldenhauer, junior in elementary education and assistant new member educator for Alpha Chi, said the speech was very informative.

"I loved it, I appreciate and admire her for being able to get up there and tell this story and educate all of us," she said. "I went to support my sisters and gain more knowledge on this subject and if I ever have a friend go through this, then I know that I can help them out the best way that I can."

Sarah Brown, freshman in open-option, said she came because of her introduction to human development class and thought it would be interesting.

"I really liked it; it is a subject that is so common that everyone needs to know and learn about," she said.

Runners to benefit emergency shelter

First Presbyterian Church to sponsor 5K race, 1.5-mile race

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Contestants will run for their money Sunday, Oct. 9 when they compete in the Freedom 5K Road Race.

This first-time event, hosted by First Presbyterian Church, benefits Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

Registration begins at 7 a.m. Sunday at the church, 801 Leavenworth St., and the race will start at 8 a.m.

People can participate in the race or a 1.5-mile fun run and walk. Kids can compete in a 1.5-mile timed race.

The entry fee is $20 for adults and $10 for kids. Families of any size can enter for $40.

Anyone can participate and can register until the start of the race.

The top three male and female finishers will receive cash prizes: $75 for first place, $50 for second and $25 for third.

The top two participants in each of several age groups will receive a medal.

Each participant will also receive a T-shirt and will be entered into a drawing for gift certificates and other sponsored prizes.

An outdoor church service and awards ceremony will follow the race.

"So far it's going really well," race director Tamera Garibay said.

"We're real happy with the results we've had. We hope to make it an annual event."

The Rev. Cam McConnell said he got the idea for the race from his daughter, a student at the University of Minnesota.

"She ran in a race in suburban Minneapolis that was sponsored by a Presbyterian church there," McConnell said.

"That's how I got sparked."

He said they hope to raise at least $2,000 for the Manhattan Emergency Shelter, which is next door to the church.

The shelter provides shelter for individuals for up to 30 days to help them get on their feet.

"We've had a long-term relationship with them," he said. "They're a great outreach to the community."

Garibay said the race will take place rain or shine, but they're hoping for good weather.

"It's supposed to be cool on Sunday, but that's good for running," she said.

TO THE POINT

Donating blood easy, life saving, mostly painless

Every two seconds, someone in the United States needs blood. That adds up to more than 38,000 people daily and about 5 million people annually.

According to the Red Cross, only about 8 million people – just 5 percent of the eligible U.S. population – donate every year.

There are many excuses used to justify not giving blood. "I'm afraid of needles," "I'm too busy" or "I'll wait until my blood is really needed" are overused.

An hour is all it takes to donate. That's the same amount of time you sit in history class or spend watching TV.

Blood is always in short supply, especially the rare and less common types.

And facing your fear of needles can help save a life, or even three.

In a time of national crisis, people can donate many things.

Money can be given to rebuild, time can be given to clean and restore, and food and clothing can be given to provide for those who have lost everything.

Most of us have enough blood to spare, but there is still a shortage.

Donating blood is safe and easy. In about the time it takes to watch the latest reality TV show, you can sit back and save a life. The prick of the needle lasts only a few seconds. Do the math and don't forget your free T-shirt and cookies.

Unholy matrimony

Family background beyond student's control, shouldn't affect education

Illustrations by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

KELSEY CHILDRESS

According to the Kansas City Star, a 14-year-old girl was expelled from a Christian school in Ontario, Calif. after the administration found her parents are a lesbian couple.

According to the Los Angeles Times, the superintendent was quoted as saying "school policy requires that at least one parent may not engage in practices 'immoral or inconsistent with a positive Christian lifestyle, such as cohabitating without marriage or in a homosexual relationship so therefore the family did not fit the requirements of admission.

Since this a private Christian school, the directors have a right to expel whomever they want, but they have refused to consider the child's well being.

When you are 14 years old, the last thing you want to think about is switching schools. This girl should not be punished for growing up in circumstances she cannot control. Family history should not be allowed to be a deciding factor for admission to any school.

The private school claims that the parents of the students should lead a "positive Christian lifestyle," but who decides that? Did the board of directors sit around one afternoon and create a list of criteria of what makes a "good Christian?"

What's really bothersome is that many homophobes quote the Bible to justify homosexuality as being morally wrong; however, it seems unlikely that the apostles intended scripture to be used to condemn other human beings. Christians should know that it isn't anyone's right to judge another. That is up to God alone. We have the free will to make whatever choices we want in life.

It is hard to believe in an age where Americans preach and preach about all the basic freedoms every person should be privy to, but we think its okay to justify discriminating against someone because of their sexuality. There are so many levels of wrong with denying someone their rights only because of their private lifestyle or family background.

Whatever happened to separation of church and state? We need to take care of welfare, poverty, social security, unemployment, and the national debt before focusing all our attention on trying to ban something just because we don't agree with it. As appalling as it may be to some, not everyone believes in the Bible. Not everyone is a Christian.

There is middle ground to this issue.

Being a good Christian includes loving everyone, even if you don't agree with their lifestyle. It's their life, and judging people based on their sexual decisions isn't going to earn you an express trip to heaven.

Learning to love someone for who they are, their character, their personality, is what makes you a good person. Going to K-State has made me realize that not everyone is the same. Some people are racist, lost, happy, bitter, depressed, bigoted, wonderful, smart, insecure, amazing, beautiful, gay, distracted, average, jaded, confident, creepy and straight. Having tolerance for each other's differences, whether it is sexuality or personality, is what is important.

Honestly, I love all my gay friends, and I love God. It can go hand in hand.

'True love' shouldn't be restricted

KODY COOPER

I am the latest victim of discrimination from the tyrannical state of Kansas. The supposed "marriage amendment" has thwarted all my hopes of happiness.

An elongated drought of women in my life has precipitated a protracted rainy season of singleness. Whether women are turned away by my uber-conservatism or flippant chauvinism, I can't say.

So, I've given up on women. I realized that I've been looking for love in the wrong place. No, not the wrong gender, I've been looking amongst the wrong species. When I first met Lassie the black Labrador, I knew I'd found my soul mate.

Lassie is everything a man could want in a wife. She doesn't shed, she cleans my plate, and she doesn't talk back – in fact, she only speaks on command. Best of all, she stays securely on my short leash.

It wasn't long before I hit one knee and asked for her paw in holy matrimony. She barked yes. A true love story.

Still, I was distressed about the social taboo of an interracial relationship (after all, she is black). Then, I realized the real problem: the bigoted, close-minded majority opposed to "bestiality" (such an ugly word to describe true love).

These Bible-banging belligerent boobs, in a collusive conspiracy with Webster's dictionary, have gone so far as to pass an amendment to the Kansas Constitution defining marriage between "one man and one woman". Who will stand up to this sexual prejudice?

I dare not believe that the gallant gay activists offer any saving grace. Their risible re-definition of marriage proposed in California is actually a discriminatory narrow-minded institution between "any two people". "People?" That's not very tolerant. What about loving monogamous couples like Lassie and I?

Why should homosexuals enjoy exclusive "re-definer rights"? Why should marriage be limited to "any two people"? Who are they to deny Lassie and I our God-given nuptial rights? I can't help it; I was born a zoophiliac. Plus, we love each other. This is blatant bestialitophobia.

I thought America was the land of progress and tolerance. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and stop discriminating on basis of philia. I dream of an America where unnatural sex and "love" qualify any couple for marriage.

Therefore, my fiancé Lassie and I do hereby ordain and establish the lobbyist fellowship Love-Only Open-Nuptial Yearners. The LOONY mission statement is open-mindedness and tolerance for all – regardless of philia.

Are you a tree-lovin' dendrophiliac, corpse-lovin' necrophiliac or Kerry-lovin' andromemitophiliac? No matter. We progressive LOONYs recognize that true love is not restricted to just a "man and a woman".

LOONYs reject the traditional heterophile definition of marriage. Yet, we aren't like the hypocritical homophiles. The LOONY definition of marriage is a tolerant institution between "any two entities."

Once marriage is redefined, it won't what your philia is. Just remember the LOONY motto: "whatever your philia, we feel ya".

Lassie and I have set a spring wedding date. Hopefully America will see the light soon. We really need those marriage tax benefits. Kibble-n-Bits is expensive.

Pottery, metals sold by student artists

By Lindsey Jones
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cups, saucers, vases and bowls decorated Bosco Student Plaza Tuesday as the KSU Potter's Guild displayed pottery for sale.

Cheryl Hammons, junior in ceramics, said the Potter's Guild sponsors three sales each year – in October, December and April.

"The funds go toward the Guild to help buy equipment," she said. "Most of it goes to sending us to a ceramics conference in March in Portland, Ore."

The pieces for sale ranged in price from $4 to $100.

"They're all handmade by students and are created with different firing techniques," Hammons said.

The KSU Metalsmithing Society also sold its products in Bosco Student Plaza, but had items for sale in the Union Courtyard, too.

"The ring sale is a fundraiser," said Lynnette Ratzlaff, junior in metalsmithing and ceramics and president of the Metalsmithing Society. "We take a trip to Memphis, (Tenn.), once a year and bring in speakers a couple times a year."

Ratzlaff said the Metalsmithing Society has non-student members as well.

"It's a student-based organization," she said, "but it's open to anyone. We have a few members in the community."

Both groups will have items for sale today and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Bridges, roads under construction

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riley County engineers began new bridge improvements within Manhattan this week.

Rod Meredith, Riley County assistant director of public works, said there are several major construction zones that residents should avoid.

MCDOWELL CREEK BRIDGE REPLACEMENT

Construction to replace a bridge on McDowell Creek Road began Monday. Meredith said the bridge is unstable and a liability for the area.

"Actually one of its wooden support tiers has rotted, so the integrity of the bridge is in question," he said.

The reconstruction of the McDowell Creek Bridge will take about eight months.

According to the Riley County Web site, "The new bridge will include a pedestrian walkway that will serve as the Linear Trail route."

Signs are placed at the Pecan Circle and Temple Lane entrances to indicate closure of the South Manhattan Avenue entrance to Linear Trail. The trail will continue to remain open to the public.

SOUTH MANHATTAN AVENUE BRIDGE

Meredith said construction to replace the bridge over Wildcat Creek on South Manhattan Avenue began on Monday as well.

By Oct. 10, traffic will be reduced to one lane and will remain one-lane until the project is complete.

Reconstruction of the South Manhattan Avenue Bridge will take about 12 months, according to a Riley County Public Works press release.

City engineers are continuing to work on construction projects for Manhattan as well. Robert Ott, city engineer, said there are other locations drivers should avoid.

FORT RILEY BOULEVARD AND SETH CHILD ROAD

The Kansas Department of Transportation is working on reconstructing the interchange at Fort Riley and Seth Child Road.

The city is in its first year on the project, Ott said, It will continue for at least another year.

"People should expect traffic congestion for the next two years," he said. "There is no simple way around it."

In regards to the changes, Ott said people should not get frustrated with the reconstruction process.

"We must be patient and just hope that things will move a little faster," he said. "The city asks that people drive slowly, obey all traffic signs and use caution in these work zones."

84 Lumber closes doors

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A large white, painted sign greeted customers at 84 Lumber in Manhattan Tuesday, as long-time patrons of the store were turned away.

The store, located at 338 N. Seth Child Road, closed Monday.

Dusty Pfannenstiel, former manager for the Manhattan store, was unable to comment on why 84 Lumber was closing its doors.

Keith Castleman, the area manager for all 84 Lumber stores, said he didn't know the exact reasons for the store's closure.

Alex Lovely, senior in family studies and human services, said that he will miss the store.

"I've been there a few times, and they tended to have products that other stores wouldn't have," he said.

84 Lumber Company operates more then 500 hardware stores throughout the United States, and was started in 1956.

At least some things went right

ANTHONY MENDOZA

There aren't many positives that can be said about a 43-21 loss, but for those fans looking for the silver lining in a blow out, or the fans still reminiscing about the last time the Wildcats beat Oklahoma, you can always find a positive in a disturbing loss such as the one K-State suffered Saturday.

JORDY NELSON HAS BECOME A PLAYMAKER?

Four games in, and Yamon Figurs is still nowhere to be found, but it is more of the emergence of sophomore Jordy Nelson than it is the inability to get the ball to Figurs that is the reason for the drop in his statistics.

Besides missing his man on the punt that led to the blocked punt, Nelson was one of the few bright spots for the Wildcats against Oklahoma. He scored a touchdown in his fourth consecutive game, this time on a 73-yard scamper that was all Nelson creating the space and out-running the Sooners' secondary.

Nelson is the best skill player that the Wildcats have on the field right now.

WE HAVE A TIGHT END ON THE TEAM?

You may not be aware of it, but Rashaad Norwood is on the team this year.

Last season, Brian Casey was under utilized, and this year, not much has changed.

Norwood had his first two catches of the season against Oklahoma, including an 11-yard touchdown catch from Allen Webb in the third quarter that capped off an 11-play, 80-yard drive.

Makes you wonder why the Wildcats waited until the second half to go to Norwood, as Webb ran in circles in the backfield trying to avoid the Redshirt-freshman and backup quarterback Allan Evridge gets shoved out of bounds by a North Texas defender. Evridge, who threw for 49 yards and a touchdown late in the game against Oklahoma, has closed the gap between himself and starter Allen Webb.

Red-shirt freshman Allan Evridge closes gap on starting position

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although he has appeared in two games as a redshirt-freshman, backup quarterback Allan Evridge has apparently shown enough poise and leadership to close the gap on starter Allen Webb.

After relieving Webb in the fourth quarter Saturday during K-State's 43-21 loss to Oklahoma, Evridge completed 3-of-6 passes for 49 yards while guiding the Wildcats to a late touchdown.

On Tuesday, coach Bill Snyder said Evridge's play against Oklahoma, coupled with his previous appearance against North Texas, was enough to pull Evridge closer to Webb.

"I think it tightened up considerably," Snyder said of the competition between Webb and Evridge. "When (Evridge) put it on the field Saturday, he wasn't perfect. He still has a ways to go, but I think there's a presence about him.

"I think he is one of those kind of guys that never gives you the impression that he is anything except into what he is doing, and has a good focus about what he is doing, as well."

Webb is listed as the starter for Saturday's game against the University of Kansas, and Snyder said he expects Webb to hold that spot come Saturday.

While Webb was not available for comment Tuesday, Evridge said he hopes he has shown the coaches enough to earn more playing time against the Jayhawks.

"I do feel like I'm improving," Evridge said. "The name of the game is reps, especially at the quarterback position in an offense like we run. With every rep, the game slows down and it becomes more and more second nature.

Evridge said the decision on whether or not he will play Saturday will come down to what the coaches want.

"It's up to Coach Snyder," he said. "It's their call. I would hope so, but we shall see."

SUNFLOWER SHOWDOWN STILL NOT A SELLOUT

Sports information director Garry Bowman announced that as of Tuesday afternoon, approximately 2,200 tickets remained for Saturday's game against Kansas.

Bowman said there are 600 tickets left in KSU Stadium's lower bowl, mainly the result of tickets the University of Kansas returned.

The remaining 1,600 tickets are for seating in the north endzone.

For ticket ordering information, contact the KSU Ticket Office at 532-7606 or (800) 221-CATS.

Wildcats travel east for 91st showdown with rival Jayhawks

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State volleyball team heads east on I-70 tonight to take on the University of Kansas, it will mark the rivals' 91st encounter.

While the No. 20 Wildcats (3-2 Big 12) historically have had the upper hand, having won 20 consecutive games against the Jayhawks (4-2 Big 12), both teams head into the 7 p.m. game with an even overall record of 12-3.

"They're just a great team all around this year," sophomore setter Stacey Spiegelberg said. "They've stepped it up in the past couple of years and continue to get better, so everything they do, we have to step up to.

"Just playing in their atmosphere will be a challenge."

Coach Ray Bechard's eight-year coaching stint at Kansas hasn't been too successful against the Wildcats, posting an 0-14 record in the series. In Lawrence, K-State is 22-9 against the Jayhawks.

At the same time, statistics don't win games, assistant coach Jeff Grove said.

"In the past couple of years, they've had a good non-conference record, and to have them be 4-2, it's showing that their program is improving," Grove said. "At home, I think they're undefeated, so it's going to be a tall order to go in there and play with them."

The Jayhawks' success this season has been fueled by senior middle blocker Josi Lima, a three-time, First Team All-Big 12 selection and, more recently, Big 12 Player of the Week on Sept. 18.

Kansas also boasts two good left hitters and a capable opposite hitter, Grove said.

"Josi Lima is a very smart player who knows where open shots are," Grove said. "That's four players with a lot of experience, playing in their environment, and they always play very emotional there."

On the Wildcat side of the ball, senior outside hitter Agata Rezende said she will be emotionally charged for tonight's match – but for different reasons.

"It's going to be a very emotional game, just because you hate to lose," Rezende said. "It's going to be a special game for me because there are three Brazilians, and I love to play against players from my country because it makes me excited and more competitive."

"Just playing in their atmosphere will be a challenge."

SOPHOMORE SETTER

The Jayhawks enter the Sunflower Showdown having won eight of their last 10 matches.

K-State, on the other hand, emerges from a 3-0 sweep Saturday of No. 23 Texas A&M that halted a two-match losing streak.

"We just had a change of attitude," Spiegelberg said. "We needed to get refocused and play like we knew we could. We love this game, and we play with our hearts and want to have fun. That's what we did this past weekend."

K-State plays at 7 tonight at Horejsi Family Athletics Center in Lawrence.

Senior Tyler Cummins, freshman Robert Streb and sophomore Kyle Yonke each had their best individual performances of the season Monday and Tuesday, as the K-State golfers took on the par-72, 7,249-yard Colonial Country Club in Memphis, Tenn.

Coming off the Wolverine Intercollegiate tournament where he tied for 13th, Cummins continued his consistent play at the Memphis Intercollegiate, as he tied for eighth after carding a total score of 8-over-par 218 (72-73-73).

As for Streb, in his first two tournaments this season, he tied for 35th. At Memphis, Streb improved on those finishes by firing a 5-over 221 (72-77-72), good enough to put him in a tie for 16th.

Sophomore Kyle Yonke tied for 22nd after shooting a 6-over 222 (75-74-73), which was his best since placing 17th at the Kansas Invitational, his first collegiate tournament.

The University of Memphis won on its home course after firing a 12-over 876, and Memphis freshman Keven Fortin-Simard took home individual honors after shooting an 8-under 208 (69-67-72).

After two consecutive rounds of 294 to start the tournament, the Wildcats found themselves in a tie for second, but shot a final round 296 to fall into a tie for fourth with Iowa and Penn State.

The team as a whole continues to struggle in final rounds this year, coach Tim Norris said.

"We are getting closer and closer to winning each tournament," Norris said. "We are very competitive but we still have a ways to go."

Senior Ben Kern and freshman Joe Kinney struggled to find their game this week.

Kern shot rounds of 75-71-78 to tie for 33rd, while Kinney tied for 64th after rounds of 80-76-78.

Kern had led the Wildcats in their previous two tournaments with second- and eighth-place finishes at the Cleveland State and Wolverine tournaments, respectively.

Fairfax, Calif., is the next stop for K-State, as it will play Monday and Tuesday in the Alister MacKenzie Invitational.

AFL | Kansas City to have Arena League franchise

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Fifteen New Orleans-based Arena Football players will play in Kansas City this winter for a new expansion franchise.

The 18-team league reached an agreement with K.C. Arena Sports and Entertainment, which has signed a two-year lease to play its games at Kemper Arena. The new team has not yet been named. It paid the league a $16 million expansion fee and will get players under contract with the New Orleans VooDoo.

The New Orleans franchise will not field a team next season because of the effects of Hurricane Katrina, but Tyler Prochnow of the Sports and Entertainment group said the Kansas City team would clearly be related to the VooDoo.

Kevin Porter, a former safety with the Kansas City Chiefs, is expected to be head coach of the new team. He had been defensive coordinator for the VooDoo, 9-7 last season under coach Mike Neu, who is expected to remain with the New Orleans franchise.

NBA | Raptors trade Alston to Rockets for James

ST. CATHARINES, Ontario — The Toronto Raptors traded temperamental point guard Rafer Alston to the Houston Rockets for guard Mike James on Tuesday.

Alston

Alston, 29, was involved in several scrapes last season. He threatened to quit the team and the NBA after a Dec. 3 game in Boston and was suspended by the Raptors for two games for conduct detrimental to the club after he walked out during a practice.

Alston averaged 14.2 points in 2004-05 with 3.5 rebounds and 6.4 assists.

NFL | Culpepper playing with sprained MCL, bursitis

Quarterback Daunte Culpepper revealed the extent of his knee troubles that may have contributed to his poor start to the season.

Culpepper

Culpepper has played nearly the entire season with a sprained medial collateral ligament and bursitis in his right knee, a condition that Culpepper admitted Monday is painful and limiting but should not force him to miss any game time, the Minneapolis Star Tribune reported.

Culpepper suffered the injury in the first quarter of the Sept. 11 season opener against Tampa Bay. The injury did not become public until the following week, but its exact nature had been unknown until Culpepper revealed it Monday.

NFL | Niners promote No. 1 pick Smith to starting QB

SAN FRANCISCO — Overall No. 1 draft pick Alex Smith was promoted to be the San Francisco 49ers' starting quarterback on Tuesday, after just four games as Tim Rattay's backup.

Smith will make his first NFL start on Sunday against Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts at Candlestick Park. The former Utah star played in two of the 49ers' first four games, mopping up in losses to Philadelphia and Arizona.

CFB | Feinstein to stay as football commentator

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Commentator John Feinstein will be back on the air for Saturday's Navy-Air Force game despite uttering an obscenity during the radio broadcast of last week's Navy game.

During the broadcast Saturday, Feinstein directed a profanity at the referees after a Duke receiver appeared to push a Navy defender so he could catch a 2-point conversion pass and tie the score 21-21 with 3 minutes, 20 seconds remaining. Navy came back to win 28-21.

Feinstein pulled himself from the rest of the broadcast and offered an on-air apology at the end of the game.

He also immediately offered his resignation, but it was rejected.

Generosity or Publicity

Do celebrities care or are they doing it for themselves?

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students and Manhattan residents banded together over the past month to aid victims of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, with grassroots efforts such as bake sales and date auctions.

Celebrities like Diddy, Jay-Z and Celine Dion are getting involved by presenting $1 million checks to the American Red Cross.

Singer Mary J. Blige gave an expensive diamond ring. She literally took it off her finger and donated it. Fashion designers Kimora Lee Simmons and Tommy Hilfiger have made donations of clothing and money from their personal accounts.

Most students said they believe the celebrities who have donated funds were doing it out of generosity and not for publicity. There have been many relief funds started by celebrities and many are donating millions of dollars toward the cause.

"I think it's a combination of donating to be seen and actually caring," Patrick Agwu, first-year graduate student in sports administration, said. "Some celebrities don't donate to charities on a regular basis but when a catastrophe, such as Hurricane Katrina, takes place, people are coming out of the woodwork to help."

Master P, a rapper whose house in New Orleans was destroyed, has formed a foundation, Team Rescue, to "save the neighborhood and rebuild our communities." The rapper was still looking last week for missing family members in the New Orleans area.

"I think that many celebrities do care because they have family that was affected by the hurricane," Devin Bailey, freshman in open option, said. "But I think the issue is President Bush did not react quickly enough and celebrities felt the need to help."

Several concerts and events have taken place in efforts for the relief fund. On Sept. 9, Black Entertainment Television presented S.O.S Saving Ourselves: The BET Relief Telethon, which featured artists and celebrities like Alicia Keys and singer Joe, as well as Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice. On Sept. 18, MTV aired ReAct Now: Music and Relief with performances from artists including the Rolling Stones, Paul McCartney, Kelly Clarkson and Kanye West.

"I don't think celebrities donated for publicity. The government didn't help out as quickly as they should have," Victor Bias, freshman in business management, said. "A lot of African-Americans that lived in New Orleans felt the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina so a lot of African-American celebrities got together to do concerts and other things to make money to help as one."

Hip-hop mogul Russell Simmons plans to release a compilation CD, with proceeds going to the Katrina victims.

The "From the Big Apple to the Big Easy" concert in Madison Square Garden took place Sept. 20 and featured celebrities like Elton John, Rod Stewart, Jimmy Buffett, Bette Midler, Lenny Kravitz and Fats Domino.

Country Music Television also presented a benefit concert Oct. 1 at Reliant Stadium in Houston with George Strait, Kenny Chesney, Alan Jackson, Willie Nelson and Martina McBride.

"I think it's part of both (to earn good publicity and to help), they have the money to donate, but it does call attention to them for donating," Nicholas Sutcliffe, junior in marketing and finance, said. "It makes them look good to donate."

Whether celebrities are donating for publicity out of the kindness of their heart, good is being done with the money, people are being helped.

"It shows their generosity. Some people might think it's for them to get publicity bit in the end as long as their helping people that's all that counts," Brandon Owston, senior in architectural engineering, said.

Kristen Daniels, senior in nutrition and exercise science said seeing what the celebrities did made her appreciate her family more.

"I think that people do take things for granted, me personally, I think I take my family for granted," she said. "I really felt bad for the Hurricane Katrina victims because families and friends got split up because they didn't know where the people they love were even at."

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

1813 - Tecumseh defeated

During the War of 1812, a combined British and Indian force is defeated by General William Harrison's American army at the Battle of the Thames near Ontario, Canada. The leader of the Indian forces was Tecumseh, the Shawnee chief who organized intertribal resistance to the encroachment of white settlers on Indian lands. He was killed in the fighting.

1877 - Chief Joseph surrenders

Chief Joseph of the Nez Perce Indians surrenders to U.S. General Nelson A. Miles in the Bear Paw mountains of Montana, declaring, "Hear me, my chiefs: My heart is sick and sad. From where the sun now stands, I will fight no more forever."

1892 - The Dalton gang performs their last robbery attempt

The Dalton gang attempts to rob two banks simultaneously in Coffeyville, Kan., but meets resistance from townspeople, who wind up killing four of the five bandits. Emmett Dalton, the sole survivor, returned to the site of the crime nearly 40 years later and offered a caution to would-be thieves: "The biggest fool on earth is the one who thinks he can beat the law, that crime can be made to pay. It never paid and it never will and that was the one big lesson of the Coffeyville raid."

1961 - "Breakfast at Tiffany's" opens

"Breakfast at Tiffany's" opens at Radio City Music Hall in New York. The film, based on Truman Capote's novel of the same title starred Audrey Hepburn as Holly Golightly, an elusive, whimsical city girl with a dark secret.

1969 - Cuban defector lands MiG in Miami

In an embarrassing breach of the United States' air-defense capability, a Cuban defector enters U.S. air space undetected and lands his Soviet-made MiG-17 at Homestead Air Force Base, south of Miami, Fla. The presidential aircraft Air Force One was at the base at the time, waiting to return President Richard M. Nixon to Washington D.C. The base was subsequently put on continuous alert, and it opened a new radar tracking facility to prevent the repetition of a similar incident in the future.

1974 - American circumnavigates the globe on foot

American David Kunst completes the first round-the-world journey on foot, taking four years and 21 pairs of shoes to complete the 14,500-mile journey across the land masses of four continents. He left his hometown of Waseca, Minn., on June 20, 1970. Near the end of his journey in 1974 he explained the reasons for his epic trek: "I was tired of Waseca, tired of my job, tired of a lot of little people who don't want to think and tired of my wife." During the long journey, he took on sponsors and helped raise money for UNICEF.

1978 - Isaac Singer wins Nobel Prize

On this day in 1978, Isaac Bashevis Singer wins the Nobel Prize for literature. Singer wrote in Yiddish about Jewish life in Poland and the United States, and translations of his work became popular in Jewish circles, as well as mainstream America.

1989 - Dalai Lama Wins Peace Prize

The Dalai Lama, the exiled religious and political leader of Tibet, is awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in recognition of his nonviolent campaign to end the Chinese domination of Tibet.

Listening to different bands can help broaden music horizon

Album review by Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Courtesy art

Since becoming Edge editor this semester, I have lost countless hours of sleep, mastered the shortcuts on Macintosh computers, dodged a bazillion flying footballs and have finally come to accept that the newsroom may as well be my permanent address. However, the greatest part, hands down, of being the Edge editor is all the free compact discs that public relations gurus send me.

In the last six weeks, I have received about 20 or so different albums. Of those, albums by The Kingsbury Manx, Jack's Mannequin and OK Go have been my favorites.

At first I was a little skeptical, as I hadn't heard of most of the bands before, but after listening to them, I realized that there's a whole world of really good music that I was missing out on by relying solely on MTV and mainstream radio for exposure.

The Kingsbury Manx released its fifth and latest compact disc, "The Fast Rise and Fall of the South," on Sept. 20. This indie rock group can be compared to Interpol and Smog. The CD offers everything from the upbeat "Ruins" to the somber "What a Shame." It's the kind of CD you could listen to while doing just about anything. It doesn't require too much of your concentration and could be enjoyed while reading or doing homework. Careful though, it might leave you with a stoned feeling if listened to for too long.

Jack's Mannequin, which features Something Corporate's Andrew McMahon, released "Everything in Transit" on Aug. 23, according to mtv.com. The band can be compared to Vendetta Red, The All-American Rejects, Jason Mraz and Taking Back Sunday. Jack's Mannequin also has its first music video on MTV, "Mixed Tape." This emo album features lots of upbeat songs. My favorites are "Bruised" and "Dark Blue." It's like experiencing teen angst again but more a buoyant and fashionable version.

OK Go released its second album "Oh No" on Aug. 30. The Chicago-based group traveled to Malmo, Sweden, for nearly a month to record the music for its latest album. They have recently made a music video (done in a band member's own backyard) for the song "A Million Ways," which is their first single for "Oh No," with synchronized dancing. The video has become extremely popular as it has been downloaded more than 500,000 times (mtv.com).

The music of OK Go is similar to the sounds of Spoon, Hot Hot Heat, Modest Mouse and The Strokes. The songs I enjoy most off "Oh No" are "Invincible," "The Lovecats," "Do What You Want," and "A Million Ways." It's a good CD to listen to while driving around or working.

I consider these three CDs by The Kingsbury Manx, Jack's Mannequin and OK Go my favorites because they don't sound like everything played on the radio. They are appealing to me because the lyrics are funny and the songs have good, catchy beats. To me, an album is considered quality if I like at least 80 percent of the songs and if each song is unique from the others.

Class rings to be sold to seniors

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For years to come, K-State class rings will identify students with the university.

The Official Kansas State University Ring program is about five years old, said Craig Menzel, Midwest and Rocky Mountain territorial manager for Balfour, the ring supplier.

The program, run by the K-State Alumni Association, was started because the ring tradition had nearly disappeared, with fewer than 100 students designing their own rings, Menzel said. Now about 250 students purchase rings with K-State's seal and crest.

"It's something that's very popular, especially in the Big 12," he said.

The rings come in white gold, yellow gold and celestrium. The top features either a purple amethyst or a metal top, both with the K-State crest encircled by "Kansas State University." An inset stone – a diamond, an amethyst or cubic zirconia – is in the bezel of the ring.

The K-State seal and the student's graduation year are on the right side of the ring. Anderson Hall, a Powercat and the degree earned are on the left side of the ring.

The College of Veterinary Medicine and K-State-Salina have their own designs that replace Anderson Hall.

"K-State alums can recognize each other," Menzel said. "It identifies the individual as a K-Stater."

Rings range in price from $199 to $708, Menzel said.

December graduates will receive their rings in about four weeks, Menzel said. Others will be presented with their rings at a ring ceremony on April 23, 2006.

Kelly Simpson, associate director of business development for the Alumni Association, said Alumni Association president Amy Button Renz, distinguished alumni and campus leaders will be at the ceremony to award students with their rings.

Students who have earned 60 credit hours at K-State or transfer students with 90 credit hours are eligible to purchase the rings.

To ensure this requirement is met, students must supply their student ID numbers when purchasing a ring.

"It protects the integrity of what the ring is supposed to represent," Menzel said.

The rings are for sale in the Union Bookstore today during the Grad Fair.

Rings can also be ordered by calling the K-State Alumni Association at 532-5067.

"It's just a huge tradition and something, along with your memories, you'll have 20 years from now," Simpson said. "You can show you're a K-Stater forever."

Public phase of campaign to begin Friday

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The public phase of K-State's Changing Lives campaign will officially begin Friday evening. Seven hundred friends of the university will gather at Ahearn Field House for a casual evening of socializing and dessert. One hundred student volunteers will act as servers for this invitation-only event.

The Changing Lives campaign has been in progress for five years. The silent phase of the campaign, headed by the KSU Foundation, began in 2000.

The goal of the campaign is to raise $500 million to benefit every area of campus within eight years.

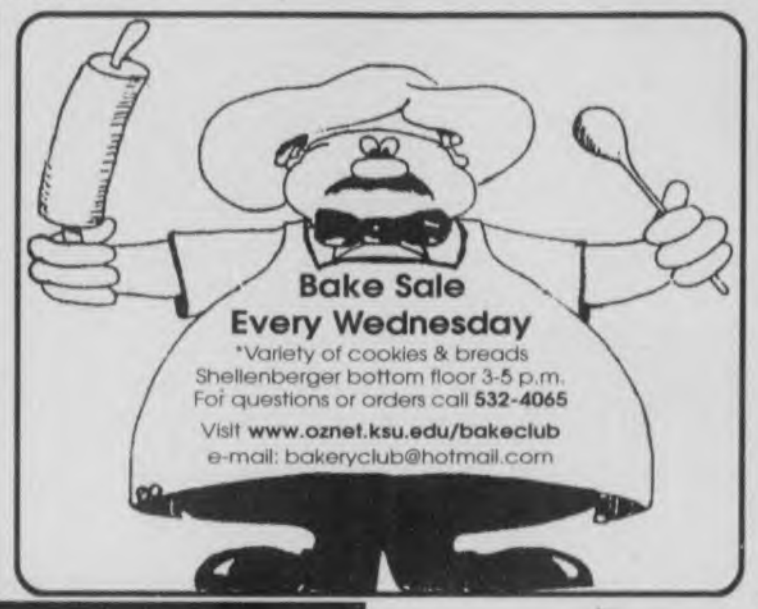
"This is a comprehensive fundraising campaign for the university," said Julie Lea, vice president of communications and development services for the foundation. "It will touch virtually every area of campus: scholarships, faculty, facility, technology, lots of individual programs. The key word is comprehensive."

The $500 million goal was set about nine years ago, when an in-depth list of campus needs was thoroughly assessed. Though the amount of money raised so far will remain undisclosed until Friday night, K-State has received more than 60 gifts of $1 million or more.

Millions of dollars raised by the campaign have already been put to use on campus. A sum of $7 million was set aside to benefit the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, and campus funding has made a large number of scholarships and faculty chairs possible.

Even though it is a large campaign, there will be opportunities for students to get involved.

"I think there will be a variety of opportunities," Lea said. "We want this to be important on campus, not just across the country."



One such opportunity is the KSU Student Foundation, a student organization that serves to bridge the gap between the KSU Foundation and the student body. This organization educates students about the importance of charitable giving and prepares them to become regular contributors to the university after graduation.

Breakdown of funds

- College of Agriculture: $100 million
- College of Architecture, Panning and Design: $6 million
- College of Arts and Sciences: $35 million
- College of Business Adminstration: $20 million
- College of Education: $10 million
- College of Engineering: $75 million
- College of Human Ecology: $17 million
- College of Technology and Aviation: $5 million
- College of Veterinary Medicine: $35 million
- K-State Alumni Association: $10 million
- K-State Athletics: $90 million
- University Priorities: $97 million

"We have an incredibly involved and engaged alumni body," Gary Hellebust, president and CEO of the KSU Foundation, said. "KSU has good friends, and that will be very apparent when we announce where we are in the campaign Friday evening."

RADIOTHON | K-State football tickets, other items to be auctioned

computer engineering, said there is one thing he'd do if he had dinner with Wefald.

"If I had dinner with him, I'd make him pay," Weckwerth said. "I've been paying for his dinner for three years."

For Chris Thompson, senior in secondary education, a dinner with Wefald is more than just a meal, he said.

"I'd ask him if he had a good-looking daughter my age," he said. "It'd be awesome if he did."

Bruce and Nancy Arnold won a dinner last year through the Radiothon. They received their prize on Tuesday evening at Gold Fork, 1641 Anderson Ave., where KMAN Morning Show anchorman Dave Lewis served them dinner

However, dinners with local celebrities aren't the only feature of Radiothon. Coffey said the station will auction several K-State Athletics items, including football tickets to the Nebraska, KU and Texas A&M football games against the Wildcats, K-State shirts, an autographed K-State football helmet, a signed football, basketball and volleyball.

K-State sports aren't the only highlights of the auction. Coffey said a dinner at Gold Fork, a stay at the Ramada Inn and a 30-person Cox Brothers barbecue are also on the auction list.

Along with the on-air fundraiser, Cellular One, 1115 Westloop Place, will host "Armchair Quarterback" throughout the day.

"Participants will vie to pass a football for prizes from a hydraulic armchair to a cardboard football player cutout, with proceeds of the contest benefiting United Way of Riley County," said Donna Logback, marketing manager at Cellular One. "Donations and song requests will also be accepted by DJs broadcasting live from the Cellular One store location in Westloop."

Last year, the Radiothon raised more than $20,000.

"That's more than what we've raised in previous years," Coffey said. "It's really good to help out these agencies."

The United Way of Riley County works with 14 local social service agencies. Every year, it contributes more than $675,000 toward these groups, affecting nearly 250,000 people in the area.

For those looking for a reason to donate to the Radiothon, Coffey said she has one piece of advice.

"I would just say that the United Way is a great agency, and if you want to help your friends and neighbors, the money is very well donated," she said.

is divided into red blood cells, platelets and plasma and distributed to three different recipients.

Tuesday, the blood drive received 159 pints of blood. The goal for the week is 675.

Reif said donations from the K-State blood drive will be distributed throughout Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

Matt Hornung, senior in mechanical engineering, said he donated for his sixth or seventh time Tuesday.

"It's the least I can do," he said. "You're saving somebody's life."

Although Reif said they had a full staff working the blood drive, there were students lining the walls from 1-3 p.m. Tuesday waiting to donate.

Blood Drive
- Where: K-State Student Union
- When: 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Friday.
- Where: Putnam Hall
- When: 3-8 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Friday.

"It's great to see so many people donating, but it's sad that they have to wait so long," Reif said.

Reif said the most popular time to donate is mid-day, so she recommended students come in the morning or late afternoon to avoid a long wait.

Before giving blood, there are two important things to remember so it can be successful, Reif said.

"First have lots to eat and lots of fluids before, and second, don't be nervous," she said.

oncoming Oklahoma rush.

CONTROVERSY AT THE QUARTERBACK SPOT?

Dylan Meier may not be back this season, but someone else is challenging Webb for his spot as the starter. That person is redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge. His snaps may have come in what is equal to garbage time in basketball, but he showed poise and confidence in the pocket that Webb lacked all game.

Coach Bill Snyder has always said consistency is problem that has plagued Webb throughout spring and into the beginning of the season, and he picked a bad time to show his ugly side.

Snyder will not admit there is a competition looming, but it has to be nice for the fans to know the Wildcats have a suitable backup in case Webb gets injured or yanked out of the game.

SPECIAL TEAMS A REOCCURRING NIGHTMARE?

If something can be said in a positive light about the special teams, it is that at least K-State had enough players on the field on the ensuing punt after Tim Reyer was standing on the sidelines.

The only problem was K-State had too many men on the field, and were penalized for having 12 men breaking the huddle.

See, there are always positives that can be taken from every game; you just sometimes have to look real hard to find them.

Unfortunately, this game was televised nationally and that is the bad impression the Wildcats left.

Ebony Theatre produces grad student's play dealing with race misconceptions

By Lauren Rohrer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"The Last Black Play," an Ebony Theatre production, premieres this week in East Stadium's Purple Masque Theatre.

Written by Nathan Jackson, graduate student in theater, the play addresses misconceptions about race relations that exist today.

The play follows the life of Isaiah Cantrell, a young playwright and actor at The Grey Area Theatre Company. As the company's last production, Cantrell writes a play that includes all the stereotypes about black people. Audiences love the play, but Cantrell is not satisfied by their response. He attempts to sabotage the play, but his plan backfires and adds to the play's recognition.

"The Last Black Play" addresses the hardships Cantrell endures because of racial stereotyping both in the theater and in his personal life. It explores the world of theater from an African-American actor's point of view.

Jackson said "The Last Black Play" is a reminder that racism will not go away on its own.

"When we ignore racial issues and do not address them, then that is when we have bigger problems," he said.

Diontey Moore, junior in theater, plays Mista. He said he agreed with Jackson.

"People may not like racism, but it's here and we have to deal with that," he said.

"The Last Black Play" incorporates comedy and satire to deal with issues of race relations. At times, the play's dialogue has a hip-hop feel that makes the message more real and less staged.

The message of the play is important to Keenan Ramos, senior in theater, who plays the part of Isaiah. Ramos said he

Director to serve on commission

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Clyde Howard, Manhattan resident and director of affirmative action at K-State, was recently appointed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius to serve on the Kansas Human Rights Commission.

Howard
DIRECTOR OF AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Howard was designated to replace James Butler, also a Manhattan resident, on the committee after his term expired.

The HRC consists of seven members. Six of these members are divided into representation of three areas: labor, industry and real estate.

Between the seven members, no more than four of them can represent one political party.

Howard will represent democrats in the committee.

The seventh member serves as the "at large" commissioner, and oversees general commission activity.

Howard will serve this position on the board for the next four years.

Since his position on the board is a part-time, voluntary position, Howard will continue his work at K-State.

"I have two goals for this term," Howard said. "The first one is to work as closely as I can with the governor's office to ensure the law is implemented as fairly as possible.

"The second is to carry out the legacy of the HRC and to be an effective commissioner and do those things that are required – to be thorough in my evaluations and an effective advocate of the committee and its work."

The main functions of the HRC are to provide information to persons so they can understand what discrimination is and how to deal with such situations in the state.

It also provides information to employers, businesses and citizens on how to prevent discriminatory practices.

"If something is eliminated, it is gone 100 percent of the time," he said. "If it is not gone 100 percent of the time, then it still exists."

Howard has served as the director of Affirmative Action at K-State for 11 years.

He also served as the director of the state Equal Employment Opportunity Office from 1988-1994 and as an investigator for the Kansas Commission on Civil Rights (now the HRC) from July 1978 to July 1979.

USD 383 honors semifinalists, awards teachers of the year

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four Manhattan High School students, Nameer Baker, Sara Maatta, Alan Schurle and Camille Sultana, were recognized for becoming National Merit Semifinalists at the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school board meeting Wednesday.

The school board also recognized two faculty members within the district, Fred Nelson from Manhattan High School and Kim Liotta from Marlatt Elementary School. They were named local Teachers of the Year for the 2005-2006 school year.

The district also approved permitting students from outside school districts to join local school athletic teams. A female student from Riley County High School requested to join the Manhattan High School girls' swimming and diving team, and a male student from Clay Center Community High School requested to join the high school boys' swimming team. These students would pay their own way, an estimate of $359.46, to participate.

As swimming is a more individualized sport, school board members said it is within district policy to allow these students to participate. The students would not be allowed to replace any USD 383 student on a team.

School board members also approved 400 new computers to be added to the district.

As a result, the sale of 400 outdated computers was also approved.

The computers will sell for $25 each, as will the monitors. Students, parents, faculty members and patrons within the district are eligible to purchase a machine. The sale will take place Nov. 4 and 5.

Ephedra ban lifted after judge rules Federal Drug Administration out of bounds

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ephedra is back on the market after the ban on it was lifted this spring.

Ephedra is a derivative of the herb mahuang, according to www.ecafuel.com, a Web site marketing a dietary supplement that contains the stimulant sold by Enliten Fitness.

The site claims the substance was banned for being "too effective."

The substance is believed to be responsible for the at least 150 deaths, including that of Baltimore Orioles Steve Bechler during spring training in February 2003.

Mark Brown-Barnett, director of the pharmacy at the Lafene Health Center, said Ephedra is a substance similar to amphetamine that accelerates the heart rate and metabolism.

"If you have any underlying conditions like high blood pressure, then it could exacerbate that," he said.

Brown-Barnett said ephedra and other supplements available over the counter are considered foods by the Food and Drug Administration and do not face the same standards of effectiveness and safety that must be met by drugs.

This means that marketers of products containing ephedra don't have submit their products to testing to prove that they work or are safe to use.

"They're pretty liberal with what they'll allow you to advertise," he said.

It was banned in spring 2004, but a federal judge in Salt Lake City ruled the FDA overstepped its bounds and overturned the ban in April this year.

Dietary supplements need not contain Ephedra to be dangerous, however, according to a release from the University of California, San Francisco.

A study, which was published in the American Journal of Medicine last month, released by two UCSF scientists last month found two supplements advertised as "ephedra-free" had their own dangers.

The study tested the drugs Xenadrine EFX and Advantra Z.

Subjects in the test had their heart rates increase 11 to 16 beats per minute and had their blood pressure increase by seven to 12 percent.

"These findings indicate that ephedra-free dietary supplements could have some of the same adverse health effects associated with previously available ephedra products, such as Metabolife 356 and Ripped Fuel," Christine Haller, UCSF assistant professor of medicine and lead author of the paper, said in the release.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Capsized boat too heavy

A tour boat that capsized in Lake George, N.Y., Sunday, killing 20 elderly tourists, became unstable after weight equivalent to just 10 people was placed at the edge of the vessel, the National Transportation Safety Board said Wednesday evening. The boat was unsuited to handle the weight of the 48 adults aboard, said Mark Rosenker, acting chairman of the NTSB.

Python vs. alligator

A 13-foot Burmese python recently burst after it apparently tried to swallow a live, six-foot alligator whole around Miami, authorities said. The incident has heightened biologists' fears that the nonnative snakes could threaten a host of other animal species in the Everglades.

Virus infected organs

Three organ transplant patients in Atlanta recently were infected with West Nile virus from a common donor, the second such report of infection from the virus through organ donation. The organ donor, a New York City resident, was hospitalized in August after a traumatic head injury and died three days later.

Landon Lecture schedule announced

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ryozo Kato, Japanese ambassador to the United States, will give the opening lecture of the 2005-06 Landon Lecture Series at 2 p.m. Oct. 18 in McCain Auditorium.

Kato
AMBASSADOR

Charles Reagan, chair of the Landon Lecture Series, said Kato plays a vital role in U.S. foreign relations.

"This will be an opportunity for students and the community to hear the top representative of the second largest economy in the world speak about U.S. and Japan relations," he said.

Reagan said Kato's visit to Kansas is important because of a Japanese embargo on American beef. The embargo was enacted after a case of mad cow disease in the state of Washington.

"We are trying to get Japan opened to trade with U.S. beef again," Reagan said. "Ambassador Kato plays a very important role in U.S. foreign relations."

Ambassador Kato, who will be the 139th Landon Lecturer, was appointed to the ambassadorship in 2001. He graduated from Tokyo University in 1965 and entered the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Japan. He served as the deputy minister for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs from 1999-2001.

In addition to Kato, former Soviet Union President Mikhail Gorbachev and media mogul and philanthropist Ted Turner will give Landon Lectures later in the semester.

Gorbachev was appointed to a key position in Stavropol Communist Party in 1962, and he was elected as executive president of the Soviet Union in 1989. Gorbachev resigned as president in 1991 after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Turner launched CNN in 1980, which became the world's first live, 24-hour news television network. He is also responsible for the creation of Headline News, CNN International and the Goodwill Games. Turner also manages the largest commercial bison herd in North America, which includes a ranch in Kansas.

"It is incredible that we have these top people come to give Landon Lectures," Reagan said. "The series is a great opportunity for students to see and hear important figures in public life."

Beth Buchanan, sophomore in mass communications and music, said the Landon Lecture Series is a prestigious series and she plans on attending the lectures this semester.

"It's interesting to hear the people that come, such as government leaders and high-ranking military officials," Buchanan said. "It is also good to see Manhattan community members at the lectures."

Local businesses offer wireless Internet

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is known nationally for its wireless access. Now, several local businesses are starting to offer wireless Internet access to their customers as well.

Several Manhattan coffee shops and restaurants have wireless Internet for customers, both to bring customers in and to keep their regular patrons.

Bluestem Bistro, 1219 Moro St., has offered Internet to customers for about two years, manager Kevin Porter said.

Bluestem offers access with the purchase of food or drinks, but the service itself is free.

Porter said access is provided as a service to the customers.

"We are just a place where people like to come and study a lot, and since school and technology are advancing, we need to keep up," he said.

Porter said at any time there are three to four customers using the Internet in the coffee shop. The users are students, businessmen and people looking to check their mail.

Another Manhattan business that offers its customers free Internet is Panera Bread, 315 Southwind Place.

There is no purchase necessary to access Panera's Internet; anyone looking for a place to use their laptops can come in and get online, said Eric Cole, the franchise operations manager for Panera Bread.

Cole said Panera offers access to better serve customers.

"I think it's just another customer service we can offer," Cole said. "We have it in our stores already, so why not offer it as a convenience to them?"

Cole said Panera has offered wireless Internet at most stores for the past 15 to 18 months, after receiving requests from customers.

"Some of our best customers are those who use the Internet regularly and just make it their home base," he said.

Chamber of Commerce to launch 'Manhattan 24/7' ad campaign

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If time is frozen at any given moment, a Manhattan business is improving someone's life, according to Manhattan 24/7's campaign concept.

This is the main idea behind the Manhattan 24/7 advertising campaign. The campaign, which targets people living within a 60-mile radius of Manhattan, begins Oct. 16 and ends in June 2006, said Beverly Orr, member services with Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

Manhattan 24/7's goals are to reinforce the habits of those who already conduct business in Manhattan and inspire people new to the region to choose Manhattan to establish business relationships, Orr said.

"This is not your average advertising campaign," she said. "It is designed to make Manhattan a more exciting place and bring in more people."

Orr said the $120,000 advertising campaign, funded through the Chamber of Commerce, City of Manhattan and various sponsors, will target 30,000 people through a direct mail program, radio and television advertisements and its Web site. A customized scene will be developed for businesses when they join the program.

For more information
For more information on Manhattan 24/7, visit www.manhattan247.org.

The campaign will portray an image of Manhattan as the "big city" of the Flint Hills, Orr said.

After city commission members voted unanimously on the campaign, the retail committee sent requests for proposals to marketing firms. Manhattan 24/7 was the proposal designed in partnership by Susan Religa of Marketing Services and Brightward Communications.

Frank Beer, chairman of the retail committee, said his involvement with the campaign started more than a year-and-a-half ago. He said the campaign is a different take on how to present a community and will portray everything Manhattan has to offer.

"Manhattan has a lot more quality of life things to offer besides shopping, particularly because of the university," Beer said.

The committee will use the impact of the campaign and the status of downtown redevelopment in June to measure the promotional power of the campaign in larger cities like Salina, Kan., and Topeka, Beer said.

"We're hoping it's a long process and not just a one-time campaign," he said.

Terry Olson, owner of Eastside Market and Westside Market, worked with the retail committee in putting out requests to marketing firms for campaign ideas.

Olson said community members tend to underestimate Manhattan's shopping opportunities and customer service.

"Customer service is better in Manhattan than larger cities because of the university and the student labor pool," she said. "Also, now that Manhattan has some of the larger retail chains, people don't have to leave town to go shopping."

TO THE POINT

Bill of Rights would protect taxpayers' money

The runaway spending and incompetence spewing forth from Topeka has gone on for far too long. When the state's highest court must order the legislature back in session to fix the public school systems it is obvious something is amiss.

But more money is not the answer. The government can always use more money. Taxes stifle the economy, discourage spending and have done little to alleviate the problems that our state faces.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The taxpayers of Kansas deserve a bill of rights to protect them from government excesses.

The Taxpayer's Bill of Rights will be an important step toward keeping hard-working Kansans' money in their own pockets and out of the hands of the bureaucrats.

Opponents of TABOR have put forth several predictions warning us of winding up like our unfortunate neighbor, Colorado. Colorado, which has low spending, boasts some of the nation's best public schools and universities. Miraculously, funding has been found.

It has been pulled out of legislative raises, unnecessary departments and frivolous government expenditures.

There is money, it is just spread thinly as legislators try to cover as many voters with it as possible.

Don't be deceived. Big government spending is something they root for at KU.

Dating taboo

Interracial couples should be met with open minds, not prejudice

It goes without saying that in our society it is good to be open-minded and non-judgmental. But what is to be said for those of us who make judgment calls in order to spare the feelings of others? Thus, I welcome you to the very sticky topic of interracial dating.

In a perfect world, color would not make a difference.

LAUREN ROHRER

However, we live in a highly imperfect world where interracial dating is still looked upon, by some, as taboo. For example, I would have absolutely no problem dating someone of a different race, however, if the relationship were to get serious, I would avoid bringing him home to my predominately white small town in northwest Oklahoma.

I wouldn't do this out of embarrassment of my relationship, but out of fear of the scrutiny he would undoubtedly endure. This does not make me happy, but it is reality of where I am from and I have to face that.

But aren't we supposed to be living in a nation that no longer has a problem with race? If that is so, then why would I have this fear? Because, unfortunately, no matter how you look at it, there is still a silent but ugly judgment around the subject of interracial dating.

I realize that many people have very strong opinions on this subject.

I also realize that it would make people much more comfortable if I just wrote my usual column that wouldn't require much intelligent thought. But I have been doing a lot of thinking lately, and when I gave myself the chance to recognize my own misconceptions about race relations I realized how truly prejudiced I can be.

I can be prejudiced because I, like many of you, look at interracial couples and think of them as interracial, when I should be looking at them as just another couple.

I urge you to have the same awakening that I did.

Give yourself a mission, as I have, to look at someone who's skin is different than your own and try to describe that person in your head without mentioning color.

It's not easy because color, to some, can be a defining characteristic.

There is nothing polite about ignoring your own prejudice.

The sooner we confront the misconceptions we share, the sooner there can be a change for the better.

You shouldn't care because it makes you look like a good, well-rounded person to do so. You should care because it's not just a race thing, it's a humanity thing.

Everyone has their own reasons. Maybe you have friends that are in an interracial relationship. Maybe you are in one. Or maybe, like me, your parents are interracial.

It is hard for me to imagine that 25 years ago, my mother could not get a job in my hometown because of the fact she is Japanese.

I realize how far we have come, but we still have a long way to go.

I hate the looks that my parents sometimes get when we are out in public. I can only imagine what that must feel like for them.

Do yourselves a giant favor, look around and see people as just people. If that doesn't change your mind, than I hope it can at least open your eyes.

Too soon to form opinions on Miers

This has been a truly great week in our history. For once, more conservatives are pissed off about a decision Bush made than us bleeding-heart liberals.

The only downside is neither group knows exactly what the hell he was thinking when he nominated Harriet Miers to the Supreme Court.

Now, Republicans and Democrats of all types are split right down the middle on whether or not this woman is actually qualified for the position.

As far as history goes, Miers has led a very admirable life, breaking down many barriers in a world still dominated by males.

In 1972, she became the first woman hired by her law firm, which she then became the first woman president of in 1996.

She also became the first woman president of the Dallas Bar Association in 1985 and the first woman president of the State Bar of Texas in 1992.

No matter how many firsts this woman has, there could never be enough to support her as a judge based on this information alone. Although, when you believe it's the Supreme Court's job to extend freedom and equality to all Americans, it's not a bad start.

It was also refreshing to find out she at least used to be a democrat when she contributed $1,000 to Al Gore's presidential bid in 1988. At the same time, she donated $1,000 to both the Democratic National Committee and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Tex.

The fact she has never served as a judge shouldn't count against her. It would actually be a good thing to get out of the habit of only confirming appeals court judges, as the past nine have been.

However, with no judicial record to help us see just exactly what beliefs Miers has, we shouldn't put our faith in her yet.

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

Even though she doesn't appear to be overly conservative, after spending more than a decade with President Bush, we can never be too sure.

It will be essential to find out just how many of his shady policies she actually supports.

When it comes to supporting Miers' confirmation, it is just too soon to make up your mind one way or the other, regardless of which side of the political spectrum you fall in.

She has given both sides reasons not to trust her beliefs without a rigorous testing of her political philosophy by the Senate.

We must now put our faith in those we have elected and trust them to figure out just who this woman is. I only hope they will tug harder on her wool than they did on Chief Justice John Roberts to make sure she's not a wolf in sheep's clothing.

Rec caters to entire community

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every day, thousands of people enter the Peters Recreation Complex in pursuit of better health. However, they are not all K-State students.

In order to use the facility, one has to be affiliated with the university in some way. However, over the years, the list of eligible users has expanded.

The American Institute of Baking, Manhattan Christian College, K-State Federal Credit Union, Kansas Wheat Commission, the K-State Research Foundation, National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition and Commercialization, Colbert Hills Golf Course, First Tee and Nanoscale Materials Inc. are among the organizations whose employees can purchase a membership to the Rec Complex.

Memberships are also available to university faculty and staff, retired faculty members and their spouses, alumni and their dependents, and fraternity and sorority house parents.

"I've been working out at the Rec for over 27 years," Jack Ryan, K-State alumnus, said. "The facilities are just outstanding. Fitness is very important to me. My friends at the Rec range from the age of 18 to 82."

Though membership fees apply for faculty members and alumni, they are considerably less than what those individuals would pay for memberships to other facilities, Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said.

Complimentary passes are available for retired faculty members and their spouses.

It is estimated that 85 to 90 percent of daily Rec Complex users are students. The remaining 10 to 15 percent are faculty, staff and alumni.

"On average, we see 1,800-2,000 people set foot in here every day," Robel said. "Right now, we're seeing a little over 3,000 per day, and when the cooler weather gets here and basketball season, we'll see 4,500."

Though students do not pay cash for a membership, a fee of $35.25 is included in the general fee students pay at the beginning of the year.

"It's a proven fact that exercise is a way to release natural endorphins," Pam Wittman, freshman in horticulture, said. "That's why you feel so good when you're working out. I go to the Rec whenever I can."

Bicyclists can avoid punishment, tickets

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every day, hundreds of K-State students head to campus on their bicycles. However, many of them break the law every time they head to class.

The City of Manhattan and K-State have laws which govern where and how bicyclists can travel to and from campus. For the most part, bicyclists should obey the same guidelines as a motor vehicle, Don Stubbings, a sergeant with the campus police, said.

"They have to adhere to the same laws as a vehicle does," he said.

The sidewalks on which bicycle users may travel are shown on the K-State Parking Services bicycle route and parking map, which is available at the Parking Services Web site. Only sidewalks shown on the map are accessible to bike riders.

"Generally, sidewalks are for pedestrians, not bicyclists," Stubbings said.

The sidewalks where both bike and pedestrian traffic is allowed are chosen on several factors, Mark Taussig, university landscape architect, said.

"The general idea was to minimize bicycle traffic on sidewalks," Taussig said. "But there are some situations where there aren't many options in terms of getting from point A to point B, and if we have a wide sidewalk with medium to low pedestrian traffic on it, I feel comfortable assigning them as mixed pedestrian and bicycle traffic."

When off campus, riding on the sidewalks is acceptable, except in business districts, said Sgt. Troy Hensley, with the Riley County Police Department.

"You can not be on the sidewalks in Aggieville or downtown, it's part of a city ordinance," he said.

Another problem with bicyclists is the usage of crosswalks.

For more information

K-State Bicycle Routes and Bicycle Parking Map, www.k-state.edu/parking/maps/05BikeMap.pdf

A person may not use a crosswalk to cross a street while on a bicycle, they must dismount first.

"The problem we have with bikes and crosswalks is that bikes cross at a much higher speed," Stubbings said. "Drivers don't have enough time to stop for them."

The most common mistake bike riders in Manhattan make is riding after dark with no lighting, Hensley said.

"It's definitely not the wisest thing to do, and it's also a violation of the ordinance," he said.

According to the ordinance, a white light on the front of a bicycle is mandatory between sunset and sunrise, and the bike must also have a red reflector mounted on the rear. The front light must be visible from 500 feet away, and the rear reflector must be visible from 600 feet, when headlights are shined on them.

Students who violate the ordinances on bicycle safety may be given citations from the Riley County Police Department or campus police, Stubbings said.

Tickets may be given for everything from speeding to illegal parking.

"You can be ticketed for breaking city traffic rules, as well as parking regulations," he said.

Despite the possible punishments, many students still knowingly break the laws guiding the use of bicycles. Chris Jackson, sophomore in business, said he knows he shouldn't use crosswalks when he's on his bike, but does it out of convenience.

"Sometimes I get off, but usually I just ride across," he said.

Business groups sell K-State merchandise to send members to conference

K-State gear not offered by primary merchants of K-State apparel is for sale today outside Bluemont 101.

Pi Omega Pi, a business education honorary, and the Business Education Club teamed up to sell sweatshirts, coasters and decals.

The sweatshirts feature an older version of Willie the Wildcat with an optional "College of Education" printed on the front.

Where: Outside Bluemont 101
How much: Hooded sweatshirts $25 Sweatshirts $20 Youth sweatshirts $15 Coasters $5 Decals $2

"Varney's sells nothing with College of Education on it," Alissa Fischer, senior in business education and president of the Business Education Club, said. "We wanted to do something they didn't have."

Fischer said the organizations have sold more than 60 sweatshirts, 35 coasters and four decals in the first two days of sales Tuesday and Wednesday.

Proceeds from the fundraiser go toward sending members to the National Business Education Association Conference in April in Tampa, Fla.

Fischer said most of the speakers at the conference are or have been professors or high-school teachers of business.

"They bring their resources and share them with everybody else," she said.

To become members of Pi Omega Pi, students must be sophomores with at least a 3.0 grade point average, said Darla Stone, instructor in secondary education and Pi Omega Pi adviser.

The honorary performs service projects, which have included facilitating computer training for a women's group, helping people at a homeless shelter write résumés and collecting food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket, Stone said.

The Business Education Club also does service projects. This year's project is a résumé clinic at a community continuing education center.

Kelli Donley, junior in business education, is a member of the club. She said she likes the exchange of ideas within the club. Fischer agreed.

"It's really close-knit," she said. "You make a lot of networking contacts."

Fans can't take loss to Jayhawks

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

Just in case anybody has not heard the news, K-State will be host to those crazy Jayhawks from way over yonder this Saturday at (gasp) 11 a.m.

I was pulling for a night game, but oh well, what are you going to do?

My good friend and I were decked in purple in Kansas' student section last year when the fans rushed the field and carried the goal post to the Potter's Lake, and I don't think I would be able to stomach another loss like that to the Jayhawks, especially at home.

I can handle losing in basketball but not football. It's hard for me to walk into the Vanier Football Complex and see the void where the Governor's Cup trophy is supposed to be.

What I am trying to say is K-State needs to come out of this one victorious.

I can beg and plead as a die-hard fan all I want, but that doesn't mean the Wildcats are actually going to win, because they still have a lot of fundamentals to work on.

I don't think I am alone when I say I am having a hard time taking away too many positive feelings after the Oklahoma game. Granted, Adrian Peterson hurt his ankle, and yes, Allan Evridge showed promise, but I'm going to be real with you for a minute.

This team needs to pull its head out of its you-know-what and stop making bone-headed plays. The players need to look at what they did wrong last week and try to improve on these problems.

First, the penalties have got to stop. It seems like every time something positive happens, there is a little yellow flag lying on the ground that reminds me of a song by Boyz N' Da Hood where they say, "bring it back, bring it back".

K-State had an early opportunity to stop Oklahoma on third and long, but a late hit by Brandon Archer gave Oklahoma a fresh set of downs, which turned into a touchdown run by Peterson on the next play.

The Wildcats converted on a long third down with a 23-yard pass to Victor Mann early in the game that would have given K-State the ball deep in Sooner territory, but the play got called back due to a holding penalty on senior Jeromey Clary.

They also had a chance early in the game to take the lead, but Oklahoma recovered a fumble caused when center Jordan Bedore snapped the ball to quarterback Allen Webb, who was not ready for the snap. This

Cats pound Jayhawks

Wildcats earn 21st consecutive victory

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – Plagued by an injury in the first game and the explosive offense of Stacey Spiegelberg throughout, Kansas couldn't muster a victory against No. 20 K-State in the Wildcats' 3-0 (30-25, 30-24, 30-23) sweep of the Jayhawks.

Spiegelberg, a sophomore setter who tallied a career-high .833 hitting percentage in the Cats' 21st consecutive victory over Kansas, said this was a big win for her team.

"We always want to beat the Jayhawks, especially in their house," Spiegelberg said. "They always play well against us, so it was definitely a good victory tonight."

With her 36 assists Wednesday night in Lawrence, Spiegelberg also notched her fourth career double-double.

"It felt good, but I really don't think about the statistics I have," she said. "I just go out there and play as hard as I can every game."

Things didn't bode as well for Kansas.

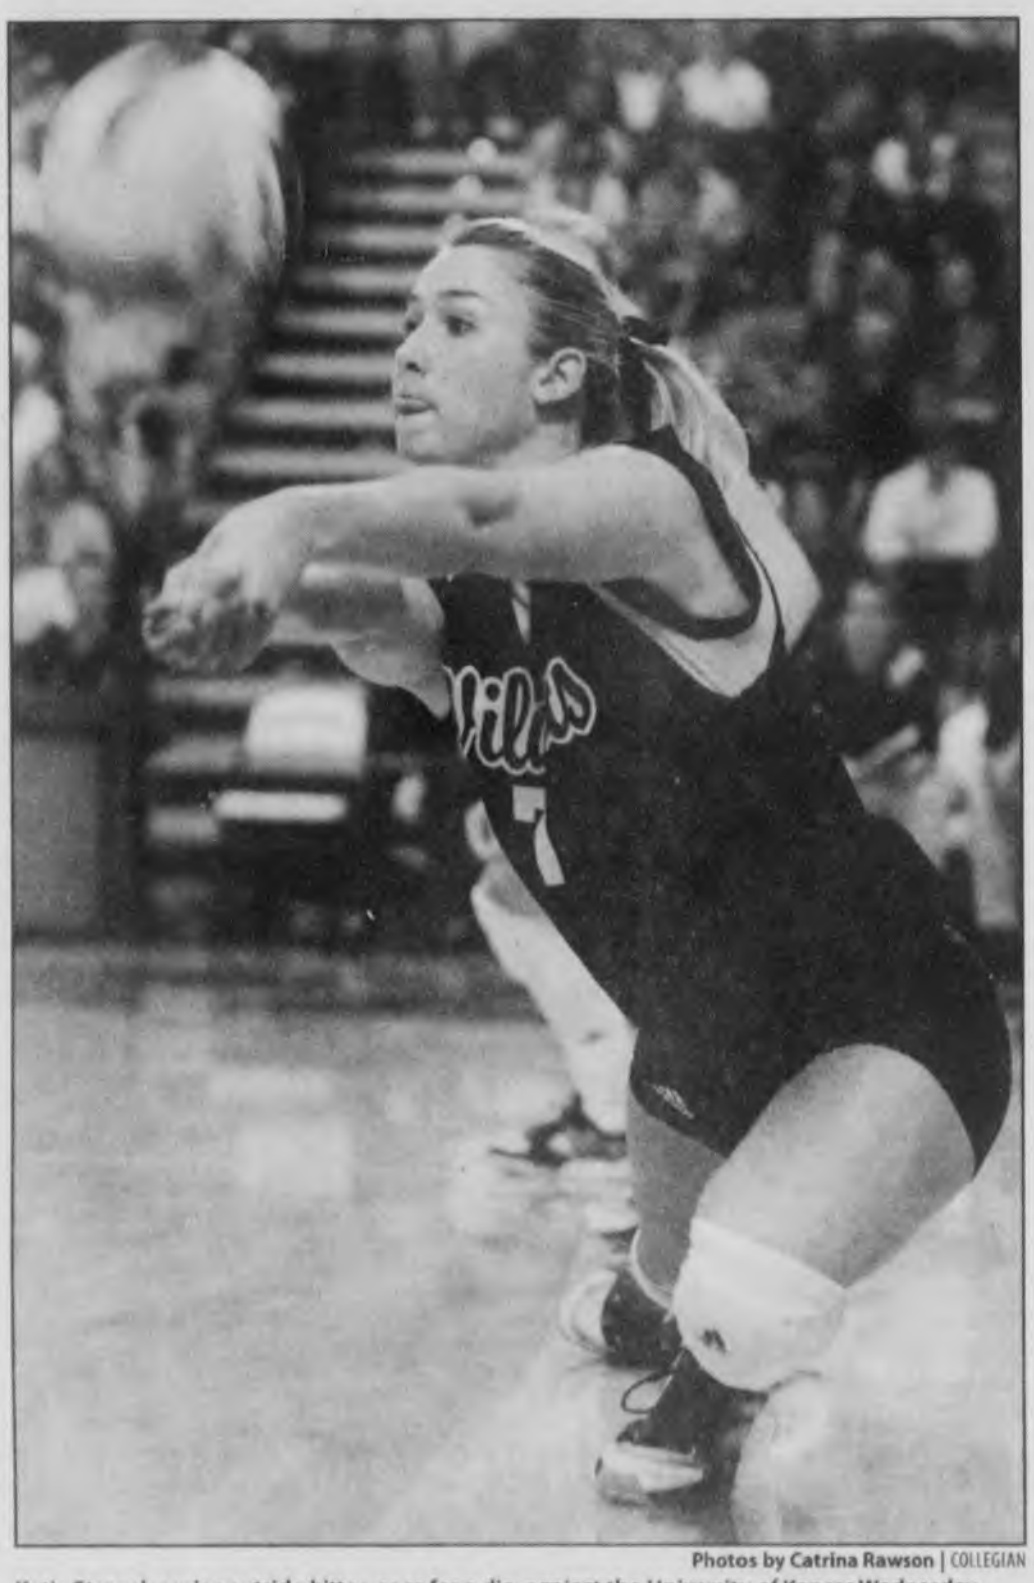
The Jayhawks lost outside-hitter Jana Correa, a key offensive force and All-Big 12 Conference candidate, in game one to an injury. The Wildcats also kept Kansas standout middle-blocker Josi Lima to a .207 hitting percentage, and the Jayhawk squad to a .098 hitting percentage.

"Unfortunately for Kansas, they lost one of their best players," coach Suzie Fritz said. "They lost a tremendous component, and I think, therefore, they didn't play as well as they've been playing."

Game one was the Jayhawks' best showing. Although they never led, they stayed close behind the Wildcats (13-3, 4-2 Big 12) early on, pulling within one at 15-14. The Wildcats answered with a 6-1 run, ignited by senior outside-hitter Agata Rezende and Spiegelberg, to pull ahead 21-15. Kansas responded with a 7-2 run, bringing the score to 24-23. That's the closest the Jayhawks would come, as the Wildcats closed out the game with a 6-2 surge.

In game two, the lead changed five times before K-State captured it for good at 14-13.

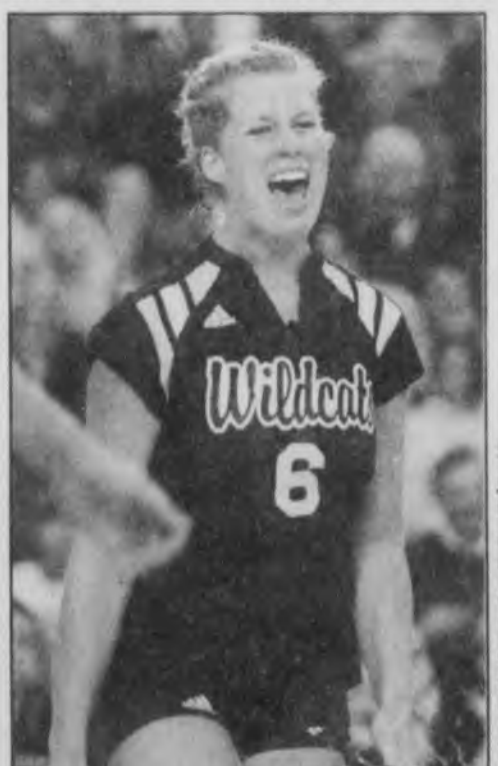
The match finale, at first, also seemed questionable. K-State took the early lead, but the Jayhawks hung on to take over 9-8. Spiegelberg and Rezende responded to regain the lead, and a late Hamlin kill extended the gap to 24-15. Kansas battled back with an 8-5 run, but time ran out when Rezende won the game on a kill.



Rezende finished the match with 14 kills for a .346 hitting percentage, and junior outside hitter Sandy Werner fired off 12 kills for a .259 hitting percentage.

"Another great night for Agata," Fritz said. "She just continues to be terminal and continues to be our go-to person, no matter how many people they put in front of her."

In addition to Spiegelberg and Rezende's individual performances, Fritz said her team's victory was a result of good serving and blocking.



"We knew going into the game that we needed to serve very well, and I thought, short of the first few points of the first game, I thought we served exceptionally well," Fritz said. "I thought our blocking was as good as it's been – 17 blocks in three games is a pretty good number."

K-State will host Iowa State at 4 p.m., Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Paintball club gains popularity on campus

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Darran McEuen doesn't quite know how his favorite sport reached its current status.

McEuen, senior in electrical engineering and president of the K-State Paintball Club since his freshman year, has been playing paintball since his high school years.

Simply put, he just can't think of a more fun sport to play.

"There are so many great things about paintball," McEuen said. "I enjoy just hanging out with people who like the sport just as much as I do. It is so easy to build friendships by playing paintball."

McEuen's teammate, Josh Gann, senior in computer engineering and two-year team member, has a slightly different approach to the game.

"I love being with my friends while I play," Gann said. "but what I like the most is getting to shoot people in the face."

The sport of paintball has been growing immensely over the last few years, and this only pleases the K-State Paintball Club. In fact, Gann said recently, the sport was only two votes away from becoming an Olympic sport.

"Paintball is gaining a lot more national recognition lately," Gann said. "Now there are a good amount of tournaments. The game has been around for quite a while, but now it is getting a lot of publicity."

Although paintball is often seen as a game with few rules that is played out in the woods, competitive paintball can be very different.

Today, paintball is played on a netted, outdoor field that is generally about 125 feet long and 100 feet wide. Two five-person teams compete against each other in an attempt to accumulate the most points. A player is eliminated if they are struck by a paintball from an opponent's gun.

Teams can earn points by eliminating opponents, surviving an entire round without being eliminated or by capturing the flag at the middle of the field and placing it in the opponent's starting bunker without being hit. At the end of the round, the team with the most points wins.

The K-State Paintball Club consists of two five-man squads. The team members try to practice at least three times every month. Recently, the squads traveled to Tornado Alley Paintball in El Dorado, Kan., to compete in an eight-team, round-robin tournament.

Overall, the tournament was a success for both squads. One of the teams finished in first place, while the other finished seventh.

Gann said both squads deserved credit for the victory.

"There is no way we could have won without the other squad being there," Gann said. "They really helped us out in a lot of ways."

The tournament in El Dorado was a bit of a treat for the club. With no other university club teams in the state of Kansas, McEuen said it can sometimes be difficult to find competition.

"The closest teams to us are Nebraska, Missouri, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma," McEuen said. "That makes it kind of hard to play regularly."

As paintball becomes more and more popular, no one knows what the future has in store for this unconventional sport.

"It's advanced so much in the last five years, it's almost getting ridiculous," McEuen said. "If you play, it gets to be so much fun every time you go out."

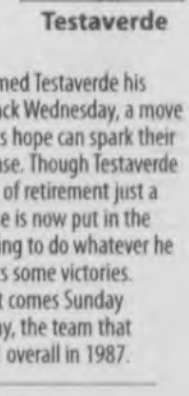
NFL | Martz may have heart bacterial infection

ST. LOUIS — St. Louis Rams coach Mike Martz has an infection of the heart that will require treatment with antibiotics and keep him out of practice for a couple of days.

Martz



Martz, 54, said doctors believe he has endocarditis, a bacterial infection of the heart's inner lining or the heart valve. Martz will undergo a series of blood cultures over the next week to confirm the diagnosis.

Treatment involves taking antibiotics over a long period of time, Martz said.

Martz was hospitalized last Friday with what doctors believed was a sinus infection. He was released the next day and coached the Rams on Sunday in their 44-24 loss to the New York Giants.

NFL | Testaverde becomes Jets starter at quarterback

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Vinny Testaverde is nearly 42 years old. He has not thrown a pass in a regular-season game since January. On top of all that, he has had about a week to learn the Jets offense.

Testaverde

This is the player coach Herman Edwards has entrusted to help save the season.

Edwards named Testaverde his staring quarterback Wednesday, a move the desperate Jets hope can spark their floundering offense. Though Testaverde was on the verge of retirement just a few weeks ago, he is now put in the tough spot of trying to do whatever he can to get the Jets some victories.

His first start comes Sunday against Tampa Bay, the team that drafted him No. 1 overall in 1987.

NFL | Lions' WR Rogers suspended for four games

ALLEN PARK, Mich. — Detroit wide receiver Charles Rogers was suspended Wednesday for four games for violating the NFL's substance abuse policy, the latest setback in his injury-plagued career.

The announcement came in a two-sentence statement from the league.

The suspension is the latest in a series of problems for the second overall choice in the 2003 draft, who missed much of his first two seasons after breaking his right collarbone twice.

Rogers apologized to teammates and coaches at a team meeting Wednesday.

GLF | Wie turns professional, announces endorsements

HONOLULU — Michelle Wie, the Hawaii teen who has been competing against golf's best players since she was in the seventh grade, turned professional Wednesday.

Wie

The splashy announcement was hardly a surprise. It had been reported for weeks that Wie would go pro by her 16th birthday next week.

She has signed endorsement deals with Nike and Sony said to be worth $10 million a year, and her first act as a professional was to give some of it back.

Wie pledged $500,000 to the U.S. Golf Hurricane Relief Fund, set up by the major golf organizations.

NBA | Proposed dress code doesn't suit some players

The idea of an off-the-court dress code isn't sitting well with some NBA players.

Though it hasn't been finalized yet, players have been warned a dress code likely will be instituted this season for team functions.

Players will have to wear business casual clothes — such as a sport coat and slacks — for all team affairs. Commissioner David Stern told The Boston Globe the dress code would exclude jeans.

Pampering practices can relieve stress before testing

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many students, the semester's first round of tests are beginning, catapulting students into a studying frenzy for the first time in months.

Getting back into the grind of trying to balance school, work and a social life can create stress for anyone, but students should try to keep stress levels at a minimum.

In order to accomplish goals while avoiding a premature stroke, students can easily and affordably do some small everyday chores to pamper themselves, lower stress and relax.

Debbie McCullough, owner of Hair Experts Salon & Spa, 1323 Anderson Ave., said college students are especially prone to stress and should take any necessary actions to relax.

"One of the biggest causes of hair loss is stress, and we've seen this in college students because they carry so many hours, so it's important that you do relax and pamper yourself," McCullough said.

For those who are extremely stressed and are willing to pay a small price for some relaxation, Hair Experts, offers many options. Simple manicures, pedicures, facials or back and neck massages can range anywhere from $30 to $50.

"It's amazing how much a simple manicure can help relieve stress, and they include an arm and hand massage," McCullough said.

Sometimes even going in to a salon to get a hair cut many help ease stress. Mandy Johnston, manager of Salon 1, 3104 Anderson Ave., suggests stopping in any time for a quick trim.

"To me, just coming in and getting your hair done is always relaxing, and it includes a shampoo and head massage," Johnston said.

Not everyone can always afford to stop by salons to pamper themselves, and for these students on a budget there are numerous stress-destroying alternatives.

Creating a spa-style experience in your own home and treating yourself with a store-bought facial could be a fun, quick fix. A spa atmosphere could be created in the bathroom by putting on some slow, calming music, lighting candles and sinking into a bubble bath.

According to the Discovery Health Web site, the essentials needed for a spa at home include a bath brush with natural bristles, a loofah or terry cloth washcloth, bath salts, a selection of essential aromatic oil, anti-oxidant and anti-inflammatory cleansers, toners and moisturizers, coarse sea salt and plenty of chilled spring water (with a splash of lime or lemon) to keep your body hydrated and to eliminate toxins from the inside out.

For a tantalizing spa foot treatment at home, all that is needed are epsom salts, baking soda and warm water. Get a tub or large bowl, fill it with warm water. Add a small splash of the epsom salts and baking soda, mix and soak your feet for at least 20 minutes.

Getting enough sleep is another stress reliever in itself. Troubled students may have a hard time drifting into their dreams, but switching bedroom lighting to 40-Watt bulbs or lower can help. This creates a softer glow to help calm the senses and bring on heavy eyelids.

Experts suggest that even the simplest gestures, such as stroking a pet or even a soft pillow or sweater, will lower stress.

"Touch has a soothing effect because it lowers cortisol, a stress hormone," said Tiffany Field, director of the Touch Research Institute at the University of Miami School of Medicine, in a recent article in Cosmopolitan.

In the end, finding "you time" is as important, if not essential, in the relaxation process.

"Find a hobby or something you like to do that totally takes you away from the grind of studying and class," McCullough said.

Chocolate frosted brownies can make sweet dessert

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once in a while, a brownie comes along that screams, "Eat me."

These brownies aren't the usual boxed mix-and-bakes. They are homemade with two sources of chocolate, and are topped with a rich, chocolate cream cheese frosting.

This recipe can provide a good snack for those with a sweet craving. The taste is rich enough that a little goes a long way. No worries about sitting down and eating half of a pan at once.

However, they aren't likely to last long with roommates around because they are so irresistible.

This recipe is a chocolate-lover's delight. It features baking chocolate and chocolate chips in the brownies, and is highlighted by a butter and cream cheese chocolate frosting.

For a twist on this treat, cut a couple of smaller pieces and top with a scoop of ice cream.

Worth the time recipe

Double chocolate frosted brownies

1 cup of butter
4 ounces of baking chocolate
2 cups of sugar
4 eggs, beaten
2 teaspoons of vanilla extract
1 1/2 cups of flour
1/8 teaspoon of salt
1 cup of semi-sweet chocolate chips

Melt butter and baking chocolate. Cool. Combine sugar, eggs, and vanilla. Beat until thick. Blend in butter and chocolate mixture. Add flour and salt, mixing well. Stir in chocolate chips. Bake 25-30 minutes at 350 degrees in a greased 9-inch by 13-inch pan.

Frosting

3 ounces of cream cheese
6 Tablespoons of butter
1 Tablespoon of milk
3 cups of powdered sugar
1 teaspoon of vanilla extract
1 to 2 Tablespoons of cocoa

Mix well. Spread over cool brownies.

HOROSCOPES

Aquarius (Jan. 21 - Feb. 18)
Good day to ponder the parable of the itsy, bitsy spider, and the futility of climbing up water spouts during spring weather. You'll be able to apply this lesson to one of your current relationships.

Pisces (Feb. 19 - March 20)
You will get together with several friends and start an extremely exclusive club. Mostly, this will just be so you can have your own secret handshake, of course.

Aries (March 21 - April 19)
Good day to call an old friend, and reminisce. (It turns out to be much, much harder to reminisce with a new friend.)

Taurus (April 20 - May 20)
You will get through the day without too much trouble today. It would go even more smoothly, however, if you had bought that laser cannon when you had the chance.

Gemini (May 21 - June 20)
You will hear screams coming from a Hungarian restaurant, while you are walking by. Don't worry, though. That's normal.

Cancer (June 21 - July 22)
Beware of turnips.

Leo (July 23 - Aug. 22)
You will snidely snicker at someone today. That's not going to make you many friends, you know. Instead, you should cheerfully chuckle.

Virgo (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
You are about to invent a night light in the shape of a chess piece, which you will name the "Nighty Knight." You should be ashamed of yourself.

Libra (Sept. 22 - Oct. 22)
You will invent a modernized version of the ancient game of horseshoe throwing. You will call it "hubcaps." This will have several advantages over the older game, not least of which is that a car doesn't kick the crap out of you when you try to steal its hubcaps.

Scorpio (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
If you want someone to change, it's often good to give them a painful option and a less painful option, and let them choose their own course. For example, "Do you want to pick up your own wet towel, dear, or would you like to have a live weasel stapled to your leg?"

Sagittarius (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
Huge mutant gnats will pester you today. Or at least, that's what it will seem like — sometimes managers bear a striking resemblance...

Capricorn (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)
Today you will deliberately annoy people by standing too close to them when waiting in line. Tomorrow: standing just slightly too far away.

Christian group helps with relief effort, finds new perspective

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The skeletons of a hundred houses, each solemnly marked with large Xs, along with the day the place was searched and the number of bodies found at the site, greeted a small group of students from Kansas.

But while these students went to make a difference, they said they came back changed themselves, with a new perspective, a renewal of hope and a plan to go back at the end of October.

K-State's Campus Crusade for Christ sent 17 students and three staff members to Pass Christian, Miss., to help with relief efforts over fall break. The group was joined by about 150 students from Campus Crusade for Christ groups across the nation.

Jon Morgan, junior in secondary education, said the damage was overwhelming as the group entered the city.

"As we started driving through the side of town that wasn't that bad, I was thinking, 'It won't be that bad,'" he said. "But then we saw the destruction. It was far worse than I could ever imagine."

The work began with clean-up at a church and cemetery in the city. The frame of the church was all that remained on the site and carpet from the building was strewn throughout the cemetery where no gravestones were still standing.

Kristina Kleinsasser, junior in animal science and industry, said the devastation on the news would never compare to what she witnessed.

"The trees didn't just fall over," she said. "They were pulled out of the ground."

While cleaning out several homes, the students said they found rotting food and garbage mingling with the stench of month-old waste.

Andrew Hoelscher, senior in agriculture economics and team leader, said those smells were unforgettable.

"You could taste the mold in the houses," Hoelscher said. "It was hard work and nasty working conditions, but also one of the most fulfilling things I've ever done."

"As we started driving through the side of town that wasn't that bad, I was thinking, 'It won't be that bad.' But then we saw the destruction. It was far worse than I could ever imagine."

Jon Morgan
JUNIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

Brent Watson, K-State director of Campus Crusade for Christ, said he was thankful for the quick and willing response of the students involved.

"Everyone was so affected by how much other people had lost," he said. "No one complained. Everyone just jumped in with everything they had."

Kleinsasser said though the options seemed grim at times, many people found hope in the midst of tragedy.

"One lady came in to get food, and I asked her how her day was going," Kleinsasser said.

"She said, 'Oh, I can't complain' with a smile. I said, 'Ma'am, you've lost your house. I think you have a right.' But she said, 'I have my family and I have my God. There's nothing to complain about.'"

Hoelscher said many people just needed someone to lean on.

"There were just a lot of broken people," he said. "They would show you a picture and then break into tears for half an hour."

Curtis Kipple, junior in computer engineering, said social status and monetary wealth were torn down, leaving a community bare.

"Everyone would come to eat at the FEMA tent," he said. "No matter if they were rich or poor, they were all sitting at the same table."

TABOR faces opposition from Board of Regents

Kansas legislation cuts state spending, raises arguments

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For Kansas, it could save $8.4 billion.

For students, it could increase the cost of their education, and for 10,000 others, it could cost their jobs.

This is why Donna Shank, chair of the Kansas Board of Regents, does not support the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, a resolution designed to save the state billions by capping government surplus spending.

"We have a 30-year track record that Kansas government spending has grown three times (more) than average Kansans' wages," State representative Brenda Landwehr, R-Kan., said.

She supports the resolution and had brought it to the state legislature this past year.

If TABOR were enacted today, Kansas' general revenue fund would be reduced to $3.8 billion, according to a Center on Budget and Policy Priorities report.

By adopting TABOR, the state will eliminate surplus money, which is spent on 10,000 K-12 teacher's jobs, roads, bridges and insurance for low-income households, Shank said.

Kansas' TABOR resolution is modeled after Colorado's TABOR, which was adopted in 1992.

"Because of TABOR, college students in Colorado were hit with tuition increases of up to 28 percent this year," she said.

"If that happened here, Kansas students would be required to pay as much as $1,500 more in tuition each year."

Matt Wagner, Student Senate privilege fee chair said the cuts to overall education funding would be the same as eliminating one Kansas Board of Regents university, such as Wichita State University.

Opponents of TABOR are concerned with how it influences Colorado. Today, Shank said the state is temporarily recalling the program because of existing budget problems with TABOR.

Shank said due to Colorado's economic challenges, it has to cut back on funding for higher education and is calling for emergency relief funds.

"If TABOR is such an economic cure-all, why is Colorado running on life support?" she said.

However, in Kansas' version of TABOR, Landwehr said relief funds are included in case of any state disasters.

Landwehr said the adoption of TABOR is in the best interest of the state. She, along with members of the Kansas Americans for Prosperity Foundation, went on a 23-city TABOR tour last week. The campaign included a stop in Manhattan.

Alan Cobb, director of Kansas Americans for Prosperity Foundation, said he hopes to continue to campaign to cities across the state, and he hopes to have public debates with Shank and other regents members.

"While TABOR supporters offer hope and solutions to getting out of our economic slump, the opposition offers nothing but nay-saying, scare tactics and misinformation," Cobb said.

"In fact, the flagrantly dishonest information being spread is simply breathtaking."

Student Senate Governmental Relations Chair Matt King attended the Manhattan TABOR campaign meeting. King said supporters of the TABOR campaign yelled obscenities at students in opposition.

"They claimed we didn't know our facts," Student Senate Chair Tyson Moore said. "But trust me, we know what the resolution is about."

Because of the conflict, Cobb said his main goal is to educate Kansans about the TABOR resolution, and Landwehr said legislatures could review the resolution by next year.

"I think it will have an impact on higher education for this year and many years to come," Michael Burns, student body president, said.

"It's important to be proactive – not only educate yourself about it, educate your friends and parents to be proactive about it. They have a lot of leverage."

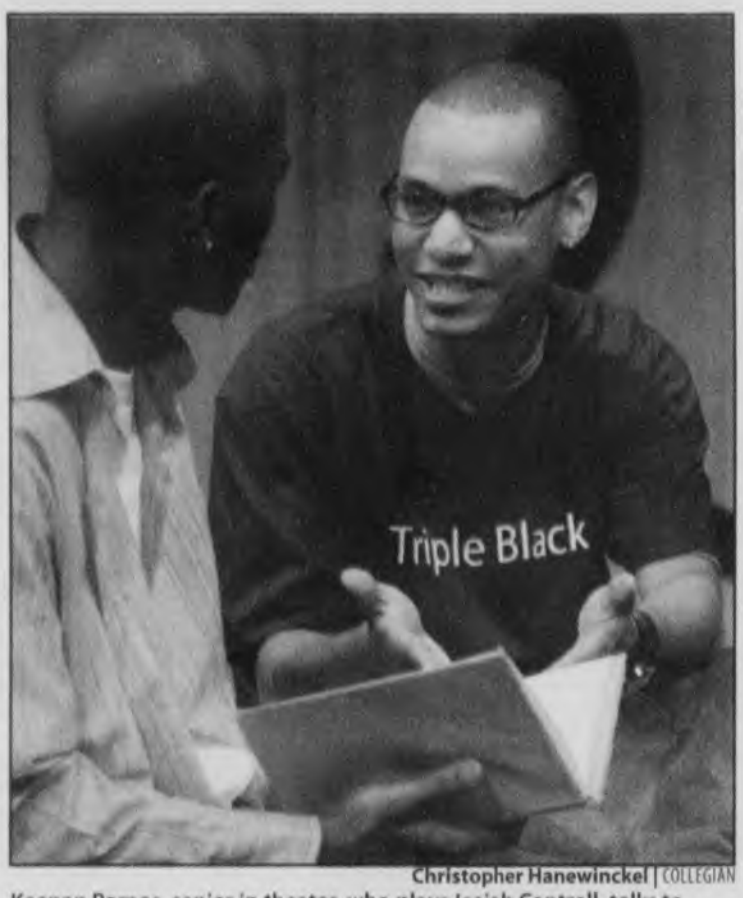
has experienced firsthand racial stereotyping.

"The vital message of this show is how we, as a cast, think," he said.



"The Last Black Play" is directed by Candace Feldman, senior in theater and president of Ebony Theatre. This is the first full-length production Feldman has directed.

"People don't like to talk about race because it makes them uncomfortable," Feldman said. "If we continue to let the issue simmer then we will stay ignorant and uneducated."

The play also includes short documentary-style films by Chad Howard, senior in theater, that portray different viewpoints on race relations.

"The video is in the plot to educate the audience about what racism is today and reinforce what is happening in the play," Howard said.

"The Last Black Play" is Jackson's second to be put on by Ebony Theatre, according to a release from K-State Media Relations. He also wrote "Mancherios," which was shown in 2002.

COLUMN

Fans need a win

type of turnover could have easily been avoided, and would have given the Wildcats a great opportunity to put points on the board, giving K-State much-needed momentum.

The situation with time-outs also needs improvement. For some reason, K-State always has a problem with this. Wasting time-outs in the first nine minutes of the game hurt the team's chance at the end of the half to try and get into position to kick a late field goal, or maybe even score a touchdown.

I'm not going to mention the punter incident.

If the Wildcats can eliminate the little mistakes and play some hard-nosed K-State football, then they will have a chance to win this game.

Hopefully Gov. Kathleen Sebelius will hand the Cup back to its rightful owner Saturday.

Quilt show honors cancer survivors

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Konza Prairie Quilters Guild Sesquicentennial Quilt Show will have an opening reception Friday at the Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research.

The quilts are on display during October in observance of National Breast Cancer Awareness Month. The 21 quilts, made by 140 guild members, show historic pictures of Riley County and Manhattan, said Marcia Locke, public relations and outreach coordinator for the Johnson Center of Basic Cancer Research.

Locke said one quilt features past K-State presidents' wives. The quilt, made by guild member Michaeline Chance-Rea, has pink ribbons on the pictures of two wives who died of breast cancer.

"The quilt display is a great opportunity to learn about cancer research being done at K-State, as well as cancer programs that would affect students," Locke said.

The Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research was founded by Terry C. Johnson in 1980. Johnson was the director of the program until his death from cancer in 2002. The current center in Chalmers Hall was completed in 2003.

Charlotte Herr, president of the morning Konza Prairie Quilters Guild, said she made a quilt featuring Manhattan streets she has lived on and a quilt with the Methodist churches in Manhattan.

The quilts display history as well as the importance of women, Herr said.

"I think it's really important to acknowledge the value of women," she said. "We, as quilters, put little pieces of our lives into the quilts."

Karen Spaeth, president of the evening Konza Prairie Quilters Guild, said quilts provide comfort to women with breast cancer.

Spaeth, a seven-year survivor of breast cancer, said she worked on a quilt during car rides to and from Topeka for radiation treatment.

"It was comforting to me because quilting is a big part of my life," she said. "Quilts are associated with comfort and warmth."

No increased security after OU bombing

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite the bombing during the K-State/Oklahoma football game Oct. 1, security measures will not be heightened for Saturday's Sunflower Showdown at KSU Stadium.

The athletic department met earlier this week to discuss the security of football fans and athletes but decided the security the stadium has is adequate for the game, Casey Scott, associate athletic director of operations, said.

"Last week's incident was certainly an eye-opener and one that makes us in our positions aware of our responsibility to our fans and participants in the game," Scott said. "Having said that, we didn't come to the conclusion that there were massive changes that needed to be made."

The Friday prior to each game, the stadium is secured and security is put in place. Scott said the guards monitor who enters and leaves the stadium.

A few hours before the game on Saturday, there is a security sweep on the stadium.

"We have a bomb squad make a pass and then they return with dogs and other measures," Scott said.

When the gates open for the game, bags and other items brought into the stadium are checked.

Scott said students can help make entry into the stadium smoother if they are patient.

"We may ask to inspect bags," he said. "If folks can refrain from bringing items into the stadium, that's a big help."

Security cameras also survey the parking

When Steve and Donna Logback drive to Olathe, Kan., to visit Donna's family, they don't take the quickest route because it runs through Lawrence.

"Steve couldn't take it," Donna said. "He just hates KU too much."

Instead, they drive out of their way and take Interstate Highway 70 to I-435.

Steve is a fourth-generation K-State graduate, and Donna graduated from the University of Kansas.

They met in 1992 when Donna was hired at the company where Steve worked.

That same year, Steve proposed to Donna, but she said she didn't realize how much he loved K-State until the next day when there was a football game against Kansas.

K-State lost that game 31-7.

"Let's just say, I didn't take it very well," Steve said.

At their wedding rehearsal dinner in 1993, Donna's father surprised the couple during his speech.

"My father stood up and said 'I'm

Choir surprises Wefald with concert

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Myra Gordon, associate provost for Diversity and Dual Career Development, lured President Jon Wefald outside Anderson Hall to be greeted by the harmony of United Black Voices.

The nearly 20-member choir surprised Wefald with a three-number concert Thursday afternoon to thank him for his support, Akeia Haddox-Rossiter, UBV president and senior in hotel and restaurant management, said.

"He does a lot for the students," she said. "We really appreciate him supporting us."

Robert McNair, UBV adviser, said the concert was in appreciation of Wefald's moral support of the choir.

"Just let him know we care about him," McNair said. "We love him."

David Smith, UBV member and senior in social sciences, said UBV isn't as well-known as other campus choirs.

"This is a thank you for what we have received," he said.

Wefald said he was meeting with Gordon when she told him, "I want you to see something." He didn't know what she was talking about but he followed her outside.

"I certainly did not expect the United Black Voices, so it was a very,

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Security heightened
New York City officials stepped up mass transit security Thursday, saying they received a credible threat that the subway system could be the target of a terrorist attack in coming days. Mayor Michael Bloomberg said the threat originated overseas and was the most specific terrorist threat city officials had received to date.

Justice won't face voters
Eric Rosen will be sworn into the Kansas Supreme Court Nov. 18, guaranteeing he won't face voters next year amid ongoing criticism that the court is out of touch. Some Republican legislators suggested Thursday the timing of Eric Rosen joining the court could be an attempt to avoid voters. Rosen is currently a Shawnee County judge.

VCU freshman found
Investigators said Thursday they identified the body of a Virginia Commonwealth University freshman who had been missing for a month. A task force investigating Taylor Behl's disappearance found the body buried off a dirt path in rural Mathews County on Wednesday. Dental records were used for identification.

Your guide to the weekend's entertainment

1 | 'The Wizard of Oz'

The Columbian Theatre, 521 Lincoln Ave. in Wamego, presents the story of Dorothy Gale, a young girl who lives on a farm in Kansas with her Aunt Em and Uncle Henry and keeps getting in the way of her aunt and uncle's work. "The Wizard of Oz" runs from tonight through Sunday. Buffet starts at 6 p.m. and the performance begins at 7:30 p.m. Sunday's buffet starts at 12:30 p.m. and the performance begins at 2 p.m. The cost is $20 for adults and $10 for children for the musical. Dinner and the musical is $37.25 for adults and $20.75 for children. For more information call (785) 426-2029, e-mail ctheatre@wamego.net or visit www.columbiantheatre.com.

2 | The Last Black Play

K-State Ebony Theatre presents "The Last Black Play," a comedy by Nathan L. Jackson. The play follows Isaiah Cantrell, the main writer and actor for The Grey Area Theatre Company, one of the few venues that brings in culture and diversity. The company is about to lose its lease and is given one opportunity to present a final production. The play will be at The Purple Masque Theatre at 8 tonight and at 3 p.m. and 8 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Cost is $8 and $5 for students and seniors. For more information call 587-0533 or e-mail mjp0717@ksu.edu.

3 | K-State vs. KU

The K-State Wildcats will face off against in-state rival the University of Kansas Jayhawks at 11 a.m Saturday at KSU Stadium. The 103rd Sunflower Showdown will be broadcast on Fox Sports Network. The Wildcats are looking to avenge last season's 31-28 loss in Lawrence. For tickets call 1-800-221-CATS or visit www.k-statesports.com for more information.

4 | K-State Volleyball vs. Iowa State

The No. 20 Wildcats will play Iowa State at 4 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. Admission is free for students with K-State ID. Regular adult admission is $4, but those who bring a football ticket stub from Saturday's game get in for $1. An attendance goal has been set for 12,000 people. For more information call 532-6295, e-mail dloomis@k-state.edu or visit www.kstatesports.com.

5 | Chimp Day

Children will get a chance to meet with ChimpanZoo, the resident research group at the Sunset Zoo, sponsored by the Jane Goodall Institute, from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday. Educational games will teach kids about the aspects of research. They will get the chance to make and eat "chimp food" and create enrichment. Enrichment is anything that can be used to physically or mentally stimulate intelligent animals. For more information call the Sunset Zoo at 587-2737.

6 | Movies on the Grass

The film "Mardi Gras made in China" will be shown at 7:30 p.m. Sunday, the event is free and open to the public. The film will be shown at Coffman Commons, in front of Hale Library. Don't forget a lawn chair or a blanket to enjoy the movie.

Professor filmed for PBS series

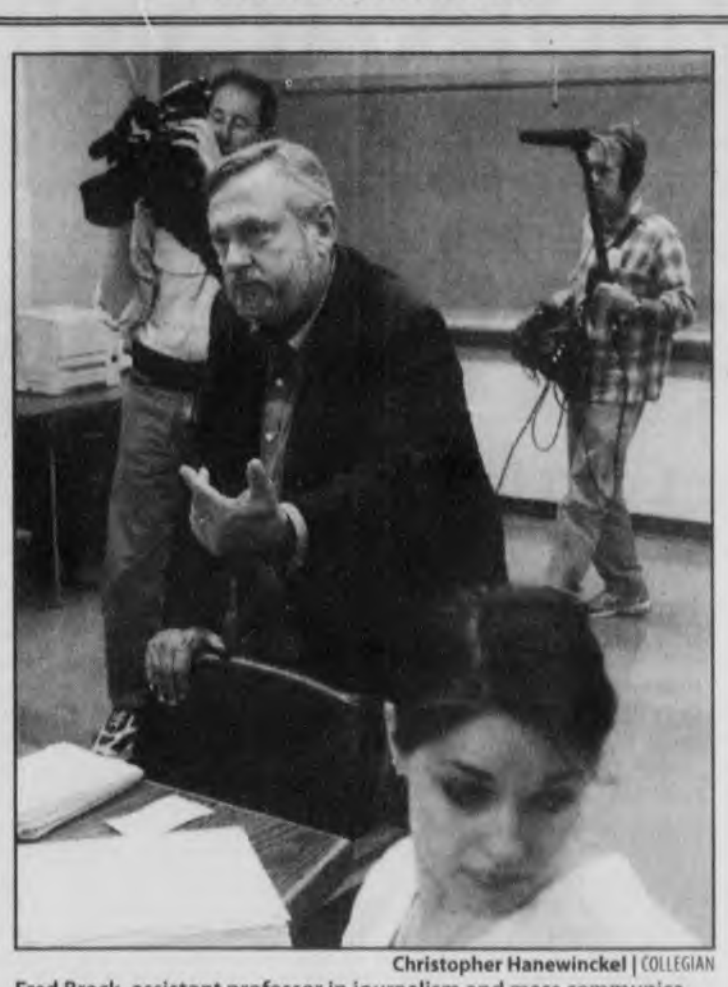
By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fred Brock, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, was filmed Thursday in a planned extra class for the 13-part PBS series "Boomers: Redefining Life After Fifty!"

Baby boomers, as defined by www.boomerstv.com, are people who were born between 1946 and 1964. This generation includes President George Bush, Donald Trump and Steven Spielberg.

"There are 78 million baby boomers and the job market will lose 75 percent to retirement," Brock said.

Brock was chosen to be filmed for the segment "Boomers on a Budget" because he wrote a book, "Retire on Less Than You Think," that covers ways to save and invest money for retirement. In the book, he argues retirees can live on about 40 to 45 percent of their pre-retirement income, while some experts say retirees need 70 to 80 percent.



Brock discussed how the retirement of the baby boomer generation means more job availability for college students. He also addressed the stock market, the value of cars and what college students should do with their own money.

"Be smart with your money and pay back student loans as fast as you can," Brock said. "Also, invest in a stock mutual fund. The earlier you start, the more money you will have."

The entire filming process took half an hour.

"It was a little awkward because we are sitting here having a conversation and we are not supposed to look at the camera," Tyson Erdman, junior in electronic journalism, said.

The series will air on PBS starting in January 2006, when the first baby boomers turn 60.

MHS addresses achievement gap

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some Manhattan High School parents are concerned.

After release of state reading assessments in September, parents and members of the local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People began addressing the issue through several meetings.

Their largest concern was with the education gap between white and minority students in Manhattan High School, said Michele Jones, Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 spokeswoman.

Reading assessment reports at Manhattan High School last spring showed about 25 percent of African-American students read at state levels.

Though scores were low, Jones said the district is making academic progress. She said MHS has implemented a required remedial reading course for students who perform below proficiency levels.

To help close the achievement gap, a diversity commission emerged from USD 383.

"We have been talking with that commission about the state assessment results and plan to talk about things that are either good or not so good," she said.

Jones said she thinks solid reading skills are a good step toward bridging the minority achievement gap.

"We have required reading classes at the elementary and middle school level," she said. "It's a systematic thing. If you can get them on a right path earlier, you have a higher impact (with) them later on."

MHS does not require reading courses for its students. However, Jones said the high school strongly encourages students to take those courses.

Andrea Peterson, Manhattan High School senior, said academic achievement is important but depends on the student.

"I think how much the students achieve is based on the classes they take," Peterson said.

While the minority students struggle in reading, Jones said all students excel in other areas.

"The high school had done exceptionally well in math scores in the past couple of years," she said.

Despite steps toward narrowing the race gap, a report from Standard & Poor's Evaluation Services said there is room for improvement. The black-white gap is 18.4 percent statewide and the Hispanic-white gap is 16.7 percent.

"Given the complex nature and extreme difficulty in closing these gaps, Standard & Poor's believes it is important to pay tribute to those school districts that have made progress in this area," said William Cox, executive managing director of Standard & Poor's School Evaluation Services.

"Every school district can say we need to do a better job with that, bringing in other people's cultures and experiences into the classroom," she said. "Every teacher would say that we would like to find the balance and expose students to those situations."

SGA treats K-State-Salina SGA to ice cream social

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thursday's Student Governing Association meeting was short, several senators said.

It began with an ice cream social in light of visitors from the K-State-Salina SGA, and senators passed allocations totaling $2,948.

Ten senators and cabinet members from K-State-Salina SGA attended the meeting.

"It's a great way to keep in touch," Brad Rice, engineering senator and junior in construction science, said.

The Club Managers Association of America was granted $1,000 for members to attend a conference in Chicago.

Kansas State College Bowl Club was allocated $448 for members to travel to Rolla, Mo., for the Rollapalooza.

The Navigators were given $1,000 to help fund travel expenses to a conference in Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators were granted $500 for expenses for members to go to a conference in Orlando, Fla.

Student Body President Michael Burns also said SGA will be taking a stance soon about privacy and student IDs.

He said SGA will take into consideration what appears on the cards – whether it's randomly assigned numbers or just eIDs.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

More stadium security not necessary

Since last weekend's suicide in Norman, Okla., much attention has been given to stadium security. Although our stadium has received no new security instructions, this is no cause to worry.

K-State currently has extra security cameras, bomb squads and dogs checking the stadium prior to the games and bags are checked before fans can enter the stadium.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Although it is human instinct to recoil at these events and seek to protect ourselves and our loved ones from harm, increasing security at KSU Stadium would do little to prevent such tragedies.

The individual who killed himself using a bomb was not mentally sound. The football game was secondary to the event itself. If it was not at the stadium, it would have been at the bus stop; if not there, McDonald's.

The lengths that would be necessary to provide security would also be far beyond what we would expect from a college football game. Every car searched, every bag emptied, every cooler drained, every jacket opened, every attendee patted down.

Eventually, our fun college games would begin to resemble trips to the airport. Perhaps we should create the Federal Football Security Agency to guard the gates to the stadium.

We should bear in mind the fact that we've had over a century of peaceful, explosive-free college football games before we institute martial law.

Death with dignity

Supreme Court Justice should support Oregon

This week the Supreme Court is considering a case concerning Oregon's Death with Dignity Act. The Act allows terminally ill patients to request their physicians assist them in ending their life by prescribing a lethal dose of drugs.

The Oregon act has gotten a lot of fire from the Bush administration, mainly from former Attorney General John Ashcroft, who had been trying to undermine the state's power to regulate medicine. But the current Attorney General Alberto Gonzales has continued the battle.

RACHEL THOMPSON

The court's main concern is if the actions taken by Ashcroft to make Oregon's act invalid are acceptable applications of federal power. Ashcroft decided the act conflicted with the national drug laws and implemented regulations to undercut Oregon's act. Supporters of the act say it is supported by Oregon voters and the government shouldn't nationalize medical regulations, which Ashcroft had been attempting to do.

Political interests and views vary state to state, and often nation-wide legislation does not allow for the flexibility needed to work successfully. The Constitution was framed to allow for each individual state to regulate as they saw fit, but as we have modernized, much of the power has shifted to the federal government, for better or worse. But the state's ability to regulate needs to be respected.

Trying to undercut Oregon's act undermines the democratic political process. The voters of Oregon twice supported this act, and their voices should be upheld. While I strongly oppose Kansas' recent amendment to outlaw gay marriage, the voters should change it, not the federal government with indirect attacks. This also means amendments in other states that legalize gay marriage or a terminally ill person's right to decide to end his or her own life should be honored as well.

Many times people think that what people with contrasting views want to do, or put into law, is absolutely brainless. But we have to allow others to say and do what they will, within reason. The United States is a vast place with diverse ideologies that range from state to state, coast to coast, and trying to smash or dismiss other's opinions gets the nation nowhere.

Oregon is one state where the people residing there have decided to allow adults who would die in a very painful, and costly way, to bypass that misery and make a rational decision to end their lives. The Supreme Court, with its new chief justice, should support the ability of Oregon to regulate its medical practices and the voice of its voters which support the act.

Half-rate educations hurt everyone

Forget math and English, apparently getting an A+ in surfing is now an acceptable means to graduate high school.

At Byron Bay High School in Canberra, Australia, administrators have made the decision not only to include surfing as part of the curriculum, but have also decided that it will count toward a high school diploma. School officials said the resolution was based on the idea that it will prevent students from skipping school to surf, and therefore help them to graduate and enter the workforce.

True, the new decision may keep kids in school for their surfing lesson, but it is not going to stop them from skipping other vital courses. But even more frightening to me, is what does this say about the standards being set for education.

The Australians certainly aren't the only ones facing a country full of graduates with no education. Besides a few wonderful teachers who managed to maintain their integrity and actually teach, it is something of a miracle that I have made it this far in my pursuit of a college degree. I found if students were unwilling or somehow unable to meet the required standards, it was okay with the majority of administrators that they were simply lowered, often being disguised as "alternative courses," until students did meet them.

My memories of high school have too many disheartening instances of lowered standards. After transferring high schools, my sister found herself one physical education credit short of fulfilling her requirements to graduate in the last semester of school. Did the school hold her back or offer her a summer or night course? Of course not. It may have looked poorly on the school's records or, God forbid, contributed to loss of funding.

Instead, she was enrolled in an alternative course which consisted of a computer program four days a week that gave unlimited chances to click the right multiple choice answer until it was correct, and one day a week to walk around the halls of the school for physical exercise. Obviously, she was much better off having completed this requirement before graduation.

Saddest of all are the instances when students themselves feel cheated and unprepared. A student came to visit my mom shortly after graduation, and told her how much he was struggling in the real world because, in his own words, he "can't read." He didn't understand why he had even been passed through grade school without basic skills.

Our government has made attempts to improve the situation, and perhaps the intentions have been good, but the results are not.

No Child Left Behind was enacted to ensure schools are accountable for maintaining standards, requiring that the district pay for a child to attend another school if they don't show improvement in one year.

But it is careless that the idea was never considered that schools, already desperate for money, might lower standards to make it appear that students are doing well. Again, in the end, it is the students who lose.

ADDIE LAUE

The key to truly educated students is teachers who care and administration to back them up. It is easy for teachers to slip into doing the minimum, where no administrators are hassling them and no students are failing.

Lorraine Monroe, author of "High Schools That Work," said it best: "The transformation of children is holy work, and those who don't believe that ought not be in the profession."

I know I thank God for my teachers who cared; they know who they are.

About 10 years ago, K-State students used to smuggle in toilet paper to football games and celebrate touchdowns by throwing it down the stands. Everybody needs to do that this weekend after we give KU the business.

It's amazing and I just don't understand it, how on Earth is your hair still curly?

Glad the campus cops are watching for bikes on the sidewalk. Maybe they'll catch themselves since they're the worst ones.

Men just have bigger brains than women. It's science.

You know if it weren't for gravity most humans these days would be concentrated 24/7.

My physics teacher almost burnt Cardwell down.

More cowbell!

A.A. is for quitters.

What separates KU from a good football team? Seventy-three miles west on I-70.

My calc teacher just asked the class for partial credit.

My math book has been blessed by the calculus god.

Those who can, do. Those who can't, teach. Those who can't teach, major in drama.

I guess the runaway spending is going way too far. We should cut the funding to K-State and make everybody's tuition higher. Great idea Collegian, once again you know nothing. Maybe SGA should do the same thing and cut your guys' spending. Now that's a great idea.

People still believe that old slippery slope theory? How does the marriage of two guys relate to the marriage of a guy and an animal that don't know how to sign legal documents and can't live to the age of consent?

I'm not surprised Kody Cooper is interested in a dog. Just look at him, it's not "true love," it's "true desperation."

Instead of ranting about our football team's last performance, how about we get excited and show some support for them this weekend, because they are going to need it to kick KU's ass and put things back where they should be.

You can't talk to him that way. Do you know who his dad is?

I stopped reading the article about celebrity donations when the Collegian had to bring something negative up about Bush.

Bachelorette parties reflect bride-to-be's personality

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether it's a crazy night on the town, a relaxing spa adventure or a giggly slumber party, bachelorette parties usually reflect the bride-to-be's personality.

Lindsay Lones, K-State alumna, said her party in May was exactly what she expected.

"It was hosted by a couple of my good friends from college and they had a whole bunch of decorations like penis balloons and pins to put on the bachelor poster," she said.

Lones said her party started out at a house and then the group headed to Aggieville.

"I was wearing a shirt they made that said "Suck for a buck" on the front and bachelorette on the back," she said. "It had Life Savers on the front and we asked guys if they wanted a suck for a buck and they would bite or suck it off. We made $30."

Amy Schultz, senior in dietetics and public health nutrition, decided to do something a little more laid-back for her party in September.

"I wasn't interested in getting drunk and going to the bars," she said. "I just wanted to do something where I could get together with all of my close friends and spend quality time together."

So Schultz went to see a Kansas City Royals game with eight of her closest friends and ate dinner at Olive Garden.

According to www.TheKnot.com, the most important thing in planning a bachelorette party is to do what the bride-to-be wants to do.

"My party was definitely based on my personality," Schultz said. "I'm more of a one-on-one person and I'm not much into the party scene."

Vintage rings popular among brides

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

White gold bands and vintage rings are popular choices to adorn the fingers of the newly engaged.

Erin Classen, manager-in-training at Zales Jewelers at Manhattan Town Center, said most women are leaning toward white gold for their wedding bands and engagement rings.

Andrea Rose, manager at Riddle's Jewelry in the mall, said ring choice really depends on the person, but there are classic styles that stand the test of time.

Vintage jewelry has recently become popular, Rose said, and white gold has been a favorite for the past several years.

Solitaire diamonds in princess or round cuts are some of the favorites for engagement rings.

When shopping for rings, Classen said couples should look for the four C's: clarity, color, cut and carat weight.

Rose said the price of various carat weights have increased recently. For a regular one-half carat ring, Rose said prices start at $1,500.

"For many girls, that's big enough but not that expensive," Classen said.

Rose said about 98 percent of engagement rings are diamonds, but the other 2 percent usually includes sapphires or rubies.

Both Zales and Riddle's offer services and professionals to help couples design their own rings.

Zales has setting shows every three months. White gold, yellow gold and diamonds are available, and couples choose exactly what they want.

"People will pick things out and the jeweler sets it then for you," Classen said. "It's different and unique."

Riddle's also helps with creating rings if a couple brings in a picture or an idea.

Rose said about half of ring shoppers are men browsing alone and the other half are couples looking together.

"Usually girls will pick out things they like, or shop for ideas so they can give a future guy some ideas," she said.

Rose said while many women have input in the ring decision, most men come in on their own to make the final purchase.

Wedding planning tests the future of any marriage

DAVID SKRETTA

There's a certain exuberance that accompanies getting engaged.

There's the joy in telling family and friends that you suckered someone into matrimony and the novelty of suddenly becoming the center of attention.

There's the relief that someone would actually say "yes," sparing you the embarrassment of returning that ring you had to muster the courage to buy.

The thrill of the hunt has been replaced by the exhilaration of the kill.

But then you have to start planning the blasted wedding, and the butterflies in your stomach turn into heart palpitations and sweaty palms become indigestion.

Recent surveys put the average cost of a modern wedding in the neighborhood of $25,000, which firmly places the entire production just this side of Beverly Hills. Unlike those incessant Mastercard commercials, every detail of the wedding does indeed have a price.

But it's not just the dollar cost that starts the brain doing pirouettes. It's choosing one photographer over another, deciding on a sit-down meal or a buffet and making the critical decision of where to spend the first night.

It's giving your opinion about something and then finding out your opinion is the wrong one.

If love and marriage go together like a horse and carriage, then the communication necessary to plan a wedding is as important as the pooper scooper trailing behind the procession.

You've got to have it.

It's the give-and-take of putting together a guest list – I'll trade you one Aunt Betty for two Uncle Jims and a relative to be named later. It's deciding what kind of music to have, what kind of service to have and whether the groom's family can be civil with an open bar.

It's traditional versus formal. It's pastor or priest, red or blue (or green or white or yellow). It's "I do" or "I will," so long as it's not "I don't."

Whoever said marriage is a romance in which the hero dies in the first chapter had it wrong.

He dies in the prologue.

Katharine Hepburn may have had it right when she said men and women really don't suit each other all that well. They should just live next door and visit every now and then.

But the good news is that in this bleak forecast dwells some modicum of hope. After all, the circus of planning a wedding is essentially a dry run in the spectacle of marriage itself.

If a couple can successfully navigate these troubled waters, and the bride decides the groom really is worth tossing a life preserver at, then landing the ship each night of the honeymoon should be the culmination of a wonderful adventure.

And the start of an even better voyage.

Wildcats to try for 19th consecutive win over Cyclones

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No. 20 K-State vs. Iowa State
When: 4 p.m., Saturday
Where: Bramlage Coliseum
How much: Free with Student ID

After extending its winning streak against Kansas to 21 matches on Wednesday, No. 20 K-State will try to beat Iowa State for the 19th consecutive time Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Though the all-time series between the two schools is tied at 33-33, the Wildcats (13-3, 4-2 Big 12) have not lost to the Cyclones since Oct. 25, 1995.

But Iowa State (11-6, 4-2) has already tied its school record for Big 12 wins and comes to Manhattan with the same conference record as K-State.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Iowa State's coaching staff, under the direction of first-year coach Christy Johnson, has contributed to the team's good start.

"They've always had decent personnel, and right now they are very well coached," Fritz said.

However, Fritz admitted she may be a little biased, as one of Iowa State's assistant coaches is former K-State All-America outside hitter Dawn (Cady) Sullivan (1999).

After losing two straight matches to No. 8 Missouri and No. 22 Texas, K-State has swept two consecutive matches over No. 23 Texas A&M and rival Kansas.

With the wins, the Wildcats are starting to build momentum, redshirt-freshman middle blocker Megan Kroeker said.

"It's a good emotional boost for us," Kroeker said. "We were pretty down about the losses, but not enough to not come out and still play hard against (Texas A&M and Kansas)."

Senior outside hitter Agata Rezende leads the Wildcats in kills per game (4.15) and hitting percentage (.381).

Rezende said she believes the Wildcats have played with more energy and focus in their last two wins.

"We played some very tough opponents, and I think we got back on track by bringing in our great energy," Rezende said.

Game to be played at Bramlage

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Think the K-State-KU football showdown is the only athletic event in Manhattan Saturday afternoon? Think again.

As part of the third annual "Wildcat Weekend," the No. 20 K-State volleyball team will take on Iowa State at 4 p.m., at Bramlage Coliseum, rather than the Wildcats' traditional home at Ahearn Field House.

Following the football game, fans are encouraged to keep their ticket stub and head to Bramlage. With the stub, attendees get in for $1, said Laura Tietjen, associate athletic director and senior women's administrator.

"For the past three years, we've had a real 'Wildcat Weekend,'" Tietjen said. "The football crowd comes over after the game – we've had a tremendous response."

While the University of Nebraska differs from K-State in that they have a large season ticket base, the Cornhuskers cross-promoted football and volleyball earlier this season and successfully sold out a volleyball game, Tietjen said.

"They heavily promoted the match during the football game and it worked," Tietjen said.

Thus, the Athletic Department plans to advertise the ticket-stub incentive during the game and honor the volleyball team between the first and second quarter.

Coach Suzie Fritz said the objective is to appeal to fans who don't normally frequent volleyball games.

"Our hope is we can attract a new fan base – people who come in from out of town and haven't had an opportunity to see us, or can't get up on a Wednesday night," Fritz said.

The 'Jetson' age of sports is closer than you think

MATTHEW GIRARD

When I was a kid, I tried to imagine what sports would look like when I was in my 20s.

It was probably all the episodes of "The Jetsons" I watched, but I imagined major sports like baseball and football would be played by robots (or at least half-human robots) that used jet-packs to hover around floating fields or courts.

Things may not have progressed to the point of flying robot warriors taking over sports in the last 15 years, but as each year passes, players are looking more like robots with the technological advances and the amount of equipment they are wearing during games.

I noticed this trend during game one of the National League Divisional Series between the Houston Astros and the Atlanta Braves Wednesday.

In the top of the third inning, the Astros sent eight men to the plate, with five of those hitters making it at least to first base. At one point, the camera focused on a player who had just hit a single and was talking to the Astros' first base coach, Jose Cruz.

The first base coach usually becomes an equipment manager, as players dump whatever protective gear they were wearing at the plate on him. Cruz's arms were full of shin guards, elbow guards and knee guards from the previous hitters.

It's a good thing Cruz wasn't the third base coach, because I'm not sure he would be able to lift either arm to wave a runner home.

Really, the only baseball player (besides catchers) who needs to wear protective gear is Astros' second-baseman Craig Biggio, who set a major league record for being hit by pitches.

Football is another sport in which the players are looking like the Jetsonian sports figures I imagined as a kid.

If you look at players like K-State's junior linebacker Maurice Mack and junior defensive back Kyle Williams, you will see what I'm talking about.

Although they are just pads and helmets, Mack, Williams and many other football players look as if they are going into inter-galactic battle against evil aliens.

The only way you can really tell they are human is by the appendages sticking out of their jerseys and pants.

What I'm trying to say is there are still human beings underneath all that equipment, but the transition to the day when sports players start replacing real arms and legs with machines has begun.

Equestrian team travels to Northern Illinois

K-State riders to compete with unfamiliar horses

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Unfamiliarity looms this weekend for the K-State Equestrian team.

Because 27 members of the English team will compete at an Intercollegiate Horse Show Association contest Saturday and Sunday at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show, the riders will be paired up with horses by a random drawing.

Stephanie Bell, novice rider, said the experience of competing with horses she has never trained with can be nerve-racking and intimidating, as well as uncomfortable.

"We get on the horse, and have to see how it goes," Bell said. "As far as the saddle, if it's uncomfortable, we just have to ride that way."

Summer Hamil, intermediate rider, said competing on the road is always more complicated because the home team knows the horses, giving it a home-field advantage.

However, competing teams are allowed to watch the horses' warm-up in the morning in order to make comparisons between the horses they are competing with and the horses they practice with at home.

K-State will compete against teams from Black Hawk Community College, Illinois Wesleyan, Iowa State, Northern Illinois, Northwestern, Southern Illinois, Southwest Missouri State, Truman State and Washington University in St. Louis.

Coach Teresa Slough said the team may ride better at away shows because the riders need to be more focused since they are not familiar with the horses.

"Sometimes you ride other peoples' horses better than you ride your own," Slough said.

Along with the greater level of focus that accompanies an away show, Slough said practices have been difficult. She said the intensity level at practice has increased and the team has been working hard on rhythm and body position.

Because of all of the hard work at practice, Slough said she expects a solid and consistent performance from her team, adding that she has high expectations for the returning riders competing this weekend.

"The returners should be prepared and able to handle what comes their way," Slough said.

Last year at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show, K-State won both days of competition, and finished both days with High Point Honors.

"There is always the possibility that someone can beat us, but we will be as prepared as any team there."

Teresa Slough
COACH

Bell said she thinks the team will do great, in part because of the final score last year.

"I expect us to win," Bell said. "Last year we beat them by a disgusting amount of points, as far as the region goes. Pretty much everyone that's going are awesome riders. We have a great group of girls that ride really well."

Slough said she expects the Wildcats to be competitive and place well at the show.

"There is always the possibility that someone can beat us, but we will be as prepared as any team there," Slough said. "We should be very competitive."

NFL | Miami chosen as site for 2010 Super Bowl

ROMULUS, Mich. — South Florida heat prevailed over a city whose last Super Bowl was an icy one.

Miami was awarded the 2010 Super Bowl on Thursday, a record 10th time the city will host the title game and record 15th time it will be in Florida.

Miami, Atlanta and Houston made a final pitch for the marquee event at an NFL owners meeting about 25 miles from Detroit's Ford Field, where the next Super Bowl will be played.

TEN | Clijsters beats Sprem, eyes No. 1 ranking

FILDERSTADT, Germany — U.S. Open champion Kim Clijsters closed in on the top ranking Thursday, beating Croatia's Karolina Sprem 6-3, 6-2 to reach the quarterfinals at the Porsche Grand Prix.

Clijsters

The Belgian can become No. 1 by winning this tournament a third time. If Clijsters meets third-seeded Amelie Mauresmo in Saturday's semifinals, she could unseat injured Maria Sharapova.

Mauresmo advanced when Jelena Jankovic retired with a virus after dropping the first set 6-0.

Clijsters next faces fifth-seeded Elena Dementieva, who won 5-7, 6-3, 6-4 against France's Nathalie Dechy.

BOX | Corrales, Castillo ready for rematch of epic fight

LAS VEGAS — Their first fight was an epic brawl, brutal for nine rounds and breathtaking in the 10th.

Diego Corrales and Jose Luis Castillo think it only natural they go at it again.

"They're paying us and that's what we do," Castillo said. "We're fighters."

Five months later, Corrales and Castillo engage in a rematch Saturday night that needs no hype. At stake once again is the lightweight title, but this fight is about a whole lot more than that.

Their first fight showed all that is still good about boxing. Their second seems unlikely to match it, but both boxers say that won't stop them from trying.

CYC | Cycling investigates Armstrong for doping

AIGLE, Switzerland — The International Cycling Union has appointed a Dutch lawyer to conduct an independent investigation into allegations Lance Armstrong tested positive for EPO during the 1999 Tour de France.

Armstrong

The cycling body said Thursday that Emile Vrijman and his law firm would "undertake a comprehensive investigation regarding all issues concerning the testing conducted by the French laboratory of urine samples" from the '99 Tour.

In August, the French sports daily L'Equipe claimed six of Armstrong's urine samples from 1999 came back positive for the endurance-boosting hormone EPO when they were retested last year.

The seven-time Tour de France champion denied ever using banned drugs and said he was the victim of a "witch hunt."

MLB | Griffey, Giambi named comeback players

NEW YORK — Cincinnati Reds outfielder Ken Griffey Jr. and New York Yankees first baseman Jason Giambi were named the recipients of the 2005 Major League Baseball Comeback Player of the Year Award, the league announced Thursday.

Griffey received 101,264 votes on MLB.com to win the National League's honor.

The oft-injured center fielder batted .301 with 35 home runs — his most in five years — and had 92 RBI in 128 games.

Giambi garnered 100,037 votes to receive the American League's award. He had 32 homers and 87 RBI while leading the league with 108 walks and a .440 on-base percentage after overcoming injuries, an intestinal parasite and steroid allegations. This is the first year that the league officially has sanctioned the award.

Men's Shopping 101

Stylish, affordable clothing can be found through local, national stores, Internet sites

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brand names, denim washes and clearance sales rarely register with most guys.

Comfort and a minimum amount of hassle are many males' priorities when they are forced to venture out and buy a pair of jeans.

Tim Dunn, junior in chemical engineering, said he doesn't mind having new clothes, but hates the entire shopping experience.

"It's tedious," he said. "You've got to go and find something you like that's in your size, and then make sure you can afford it."

Tyler Thoreson, freshman in finance, said he has his own pet peeve about shopping.

"I don't like overzealous salespeople in stores who harass you," he said.

Many stores, both national chains and local shops, cater to young men by offering stylish, casual clothing at affordable prices, without the dreaded fuss.

Target, often known to college students for its stock of school supplies and popular apartment furniture, also carries a wide selection of casual wear for men. The store offers a wide variety of Mossimo and Levi jeans, T-shirts, sweatshirts and track jackets priced between $10 and 30.

These items are perfect for a day on campus or weekend of relaxing with friends.

Before meeting friends for dinner or drinks in Aggieville, young men can stop by Zotcis Attire, 1203 Moro St., for casual clothes with an edge. The store carries button-down shirts, designer jeans, shoes and belts that create a polished look for a night out. Most items are priced between $40 and $80.

For guys more likely to hit the gym than the bar scene, Ballard Sporting Goods, 1218 Moro St., could be the place to shop.

Ballard's is full of hooded sweatshirts, active wear, athletic shoes and baseball caps, and it carries K-State athletic T-shirts priced below $10.

Thread, 1224 Moro St., is the destination for young men with a very individual sense of style. The store allows customers to create their own T-shirts by choosing the style, color and entire design of their shirt, with assistance from its designers. Prices vary with the type of shirt and design chosen, but usually fall between $15 and $25.

Shopping online is a quiet and crowd-free alternative for men who would rather suffer a root canal than a trip to the local shopping mall.

American Eagle Outfitters, at www.ae.com, carries jeans, graphic T-shirts, sweatshirts, button-downs, polo shirts and accessories priced between $15 and $60.

Each item is pictured and clearly priced, and the site is divided into categories that make it easy to navigate.

An extensive array of T-shirts, jeans, hoodies, jackets and polos are also available at Pacific Sunwear's Web site www.pacsun.com.

Online shopping is a resource for men who have difficulty finding their correct size of clothing. American Eagle and Pacific Sunwear are just a few of the chains that offer a range of sizes online that are not available in stores.

UPCOMNG CONCERT

Who: Dead Girls Ruin Everything, Blackpool Lights and Addictive Behavior
When: 10 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 8
Where: PJ's Restaurant and Pub, 1129 Laramie St.
How much: $3 for 21+; $5 for 18+

Dead Girls Ruin Everything, a band out of Lawrence, returns to Manhattan to play a show at 9 p.m. Oct. 8 at PJ's Restaurant and Pub, 1129 Laramie St.

Dead Girls Ruin Everything is the offspring of former Manhattan bands Ultimate Fakebook and Podstar.

Members from both bands knew each other from their days growing up in Manhattan. Nick Colby, bass guitar, and Eric Melin, drums, are both from Ultimate Fakebook, while JoJo Longbottom and Cameron Hawk came from Podstar and are both guitar and vocals. They found themselves in Lawrence bandless after their respective breakups and decided to join forces to create Dead Girls Ruin Everything.

The band is currently working on its first album, "What a Perfect Ending," which is due out in the spring through Reignition Recordings.

Opening the show is Addictive Behavior and Blackpool Lights. Addictive Behavior is a Manhattan band. Blackpool Lights is out of Lawrence and features Jim Suptic from The Get Up Kids.

Pet peeves, little sleep, Facebook all part of college life

Ask the 5th year

MATT PETERWORTH

The editors last week got to vent about their pet peeves. What is your biggest pet peeve?

Do you want to know what really grinds my gears? Well, I'll tell you. People who have to tell me that they stayed up until 3 a.m. last night partying with their friends or how they got up at 4 a.m. to finish a project this morning before coming to class.

Listen people, I don't care what time you went to bed last night. Why do you feel obligated to share it with the whole world? Everybody goes without sleep at least part of the time. Some of us even do it on a regular basis.

I challenge each and every one of my readers to go the entire next day after staying up late without telling anyone how little sleep they got.

What is the worst part about being in college for a fifth year?

Knowing the freshmen girls this year were in 8th grade when I was a senior in high school.

You mentioned in an earlier column that you started a Facebook group about the K-State Online girl. Is that the most popular Facebook group you have started?

I have created about 10 groups on the Facebook. "That Girl On the New K-state Online Page Is Hot" is the group you are referring to, and it only has 13 members, probably because I gave it a really obscure name. My personal favorite is the group "George Bush Doesn't Care About Black People," from the off-key remarks by Kanye West. That group has a whopping 38 members.

Another personal favorite is "I Could Never Date Anyone Who Listens to Country Music," which has 34 members. It is nothing personal to all of you country music listeners out there, and I may seem a little shallow for having this standard in place, but I put a high value on music in my life. If I were to date a girl who listened to country music, I would undoubtedly be required to listen to it at some point or even be subjected to her singing it. And that I just cannot come to grips with. I'm sorry ladies.

To answer your question, it would have to be the "Team America" group I started last year. The sad part is that I lost administrator rights to this group when I dropped my own membership from it. I did so for a very valid reason. I met a cute girl. I decided to send her a message on the Facebook saying "hi" and asking to be a new Facebook friend. But her Facebook profile was straight-line conservative. I figured she would totally be turned off by my liberal interests, so I purged everything from my profile that would give me away.

Unfortunately, she didn't buy into my charade and did not reply, so I quickly changed my profile back to the true me, but I no longer owned the "Team America" group.

Lesson learned: don't try to hide the real you.

Pianist to perform classics at McCain Auditorium

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pianist Katherine Chi will perform Sunday as a part of the McCain Performance Series at McCain Auditorium.

Chi
PIANIST

The Calgary-born pianist began performing at age 9.

The New York Times said her 2003 New York recital debut "displayed keen musical intelligence." Chi was also the first Canadian and first woman to win Canada's Honens International Piano Competition.

Chi will perform "Sonata No. 47 in B minor" by Haydn, "Gaspard de la Nuit" by Ravel, "Nuage gris" by Listz and "Sonata No. 6 in A Major" by Prokofiev.

Thomas Jackson, marketing and development director of McCain, said Chi was selected to perform at K-State because of her award-winning performances and her performance songs.

"Most people don't usually hear the Haydn piece performed at piano concerts," Jackson said. "This piece will make the K-State program very unique."

A Behind the Curtain talk will be presented by Slawomir Dobrzanski at 2 p.m. Sunday in McCain 204.

Dobrzanski, assistant professor of music, said he will discuss the history, style and poetic inspirations of the songs to be performed.

Pianist Katherine Chi
Where: McCain Auditorium
When: 3 p.m. Sunday
Cost: $20 general, $10 students, $18 faculty
■ Tickets can be purchased at www.k-state.edu/mccain or by calling McCain Box Office at 532-6428

"Chi is a very accomplished musician," he said. "Her program covers all possibilities of the instrument and it will portray the best at its best."

Heather Hagstrom, senior in music education, said she is attending the concert since piano is her primary emphasis instrument.

"I hope to learn from her phrasing and style of playing the piano," she said. "I want to hear her different interpretations of the songs she's playing."

Gymnastics Plus relocates

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students feeling a desire to bounce off the walls might want to drop by Gymnastics Plus Sunday evening.

The gym, currently at 1111 Hayes Drive, will open its doors to K-State students every Sunday from 7:30 to 9 p.m., with a cost of $5 per person. Assistant Manager Kasey Kile said participants can use the equipment on their own or work with the coaches when will be on staff each open gym.

Gymnastics Plus provides classes during the rest of the week for people aged 2-22.

Few groups are taking advantage of the session lately, Kile said.

"We've had a lot of the cheerleaders come in," she said.

The gym currently has a 1,900-square foot spring floor, along with a beam, parallel bars, trampoline, pommel horse, vault, a high bar and a five-foot-deep pit of foam blocks to break gymnasts' falls.

That will change Oct. 31, when Gymnastics Plus will open up at its new location at 2730 Amherst Ave.

Kile said the new location will have all the amenities of the current one, but will have the addition of a new tumble track.

"It's essentially a trampoline, only it's 30 feet long," she said. She said the track will have about as much "give" as a regular backyard trampoline.

Kile said the new location will have a new organization of equipment and her employers were wanting to install new pieces of equipment in the future.

Architecture receives reaccreditation

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's undergraduate architecture program has received the maximum reaccreditation of six years from the National Architecture Accrediting Board.

The program was reaccredited after the board of architects, educators and students visited K-State last spring and reviewed a detailed report complied by K-State's College of Architecture, Planning and Design, said David Sachs, department head and professor of architecture.

"They basically give us a thorough review and make a judgment of whether we have done the things we said we did in the report," Sachs said.

K-State's bachelor of architecture program ranked sixth in DesignIntelligence's 2005 nationwide survey, while bachelor of interior architecture/design and bachelor of landscape architecture ranked third in the nation.

Students must pass an examination, have internship experience and have an accredited degree in architecture in order to become a licensed architect, Sachs said.

K-State initiated an organized curriculum in architecture in 1903, and it was among the first in the United States to receive accreditation. The college was formed at K-State in 1963.

Sachs said K-State's architecture program has a strong reputation in the Midwest and nationally.

"K-State is one of the few colleges in the nation that offers a whole range of design degrees," he said. "We are fairly unique in that aspect."

Stephanie Edmonds, sophomore in architecture, said K-State has a record with architecture firms for quality architecture students.

"K-State's accreditation keeps us ahead of other colleges," she said. "It gives us a heads-up on other people graduating from other schools."

FAMILY | Husband, wife divided

sorry, but I can't let this marriage continue,'" Donna said. "I was like 'Dad sit down, sit down.' Then he gave Steve a stuffed Jayhawk and me a stuffed Wildcat."

RED AND BLUE MAKE PURPLE

Steve and Donna moved to Manhattan in 1994, a big change for Jayhawk-fan Donna.

"I had never seen so much purple in all of my life," Donna said.

Donna attended K-State football games with Steve and Steve even got her to wear purple – except for games against Kansas.

"I wore neutral colors with a red and blue headband," Donna said.

Steve jokes with her when she doesn't wear purple.

"He says I wear black because I'm in mourning," Donna said.

Steve sits with his family on the 50-yard line in a section where former K-State football players can be found.

"It's in the heart of the K-State section," Donna said.

So cheering for the Jayhawks is usually out of the question.

"It depends on where I'm sitting," Donna said. "Sometimes we sit somewhere else during the KU game. I'm not a very vocal fan anyway."

Steve laughed at Donna's description.

"How could you be vocal?" He asked. "What is there to cheer about?"

However, there are some instances where Donna cheers.

"There was a former K-State football player sitting with his son behind me saying to his son 'We don't like KU,'" Donna said. "It made me cheer a little bit louder."

Donna said although she cheers for Kansas, she still likes K-State.

"Steve always tells me red and blue make purple, so I was truly a K-State fan from the start, I just didn't know it yet," she said.

THE KIDS ARE WITH DAD, SORT OF

Steve and Donna have a 9-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, and a 5-year-old son, Logan.

Both are Wildcat fans, but Elizabeth said she wants to go to both schools.

"I want to go to K-State for four years and play basketball and do biology, then I want to go to KU for two years for art, then I want to go to Florida and do marine biology," she said.

Elizabeth even learned the "Rock Chalk Jayhawk" cheer when she was on a road trip with Donna.

But Elizabeth said between K-State and Kansas, she likes K-State better.

"If it comes between Florida and K-State, I don't know which one I would pick," Elizabeth said.

Logan likes football, but his favorite sport is baseball.

"We get Twizzlers, and when we get foul balls and turn them in we get purple balls," he said.

Donna said when she was pregnant with Elizabeth, she made a pact with Steve that their children could go to whatever school they wanted. However, she said the agreement hasn't quite carried through.

"He says the children will only be funded by us if they go to K-State," Donna said.

THE BIG, PURPLE BUS

Last year, one of Steve's dreams came true.

"Mom was on the computer and the phone rang and it was dad saying 'Can we get a purple bus?'" Elizabeth said. "So we go and look at it and it was this huge old thing."

Steve Logback closes the door to a cabinet inside the "Cat Scratch Cruiser" Thursday evening at his home. The Logbacks bought the bus last year and decorated it with K-State memorabilia.

Catrina Rawson
COLLEGIAN

The bus is a camper converted into a purple bus.

Now that the Logbacks own it, the bus is adorned with K-State memorabilia and appeared in the St. Patrick's Day parade playing the K-State fight song, "Wildcat Victory," over loudspeakers.

Silver names line the walls of the bus, because each person who gets on the bus is required to sign their name in a silver pen.

Steve and Donna take the bus to every home game and tailgate with their friends.

This weekend, Steve will take the bus to the parking lot at KSU Stadium at about 6 a.m., to start tailgating. Donna said they usually eat about two hours before the game and then go to their seats about an hour before the game.

"We go in early to watch the warm-up drills and the band," Donna said.

If K-State wins Saturday, Steve said they will go back to the tailgate and spend time with friends.

"We'll relive every moment of the game," Steve said.

But if Kansas wins, Steve said he will go straight home.

"I get really upset when we lose," Steve said. "On the rare occasion we do lose, I don't watch the rest of the football games during the weekend because the one that mattered most to me we lost."

Donna said even though she roots for the Jayhawks, she would prefer K-State wins.

"It's better for our marriage if K-State wins," she said with a chuckle.

No matter who wins, Donna said there is no gloating.

"I know better than to say anything," Donna said. "I will proudly take it and walk on if KU happens to win."

However, she said Steve does get excited.

"He is definitely on cloud nine," Donna said. "He is a K-Stater through and through. I've always said since the day I married him, he doesn't bleed red, he bleeds purple."

SAFETY | Security at stadium not increased for KU-K-State game

Security cameras also survey the parking lots and inside of the stadium.

Even so, Scott encourages students to report anything suspicious to police or anybody involved with game operations.

While some students may be shaken up by last Saturday's bombing, Kelly Huerter, junior in marketing, said security measures do not need to be heightened.

"I think the security measures are sufficient enough," Huerter said. "I feel safe at games and I haven't known of any problems in the past."

very pleasant surprise," he said. "Things like that don't happen every day."

The choir sang "Gain the World," "Yes" and "Amazing Grace."

Calling the concert a "pleasant interruption," Wefald said he was impressed by the quality and the emotion of the singing.

Haddox-Rossiter said UBV began in 1968. Wefald said the choir has been an important contribution to K-State.

"I think they play a very key role on campus," he said.

The concert was an opportunity for members of UBV to thank Wefald, McNair said.

"I was just bowled over," Wefald said. "It definitely makes my day."

College Rival Rematch

WILDCATS VS. JAYHAWKS

RECLAIMING THE SUNFLOWER SHOWDOWN

WILDCATS WANT TO ERASE 2004 LOSS TO KANSAS WITH A WIN AT HOME

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday marks the day that has been circled on many Wildcat fans' calendars since the final seconds ticked off the University of Kansas' Memorial Stadium clock on Oct. 4, 2004.

The score still makes many cringe – Kansas 31, K-State 28.

A picture hangs in the K-State locker room of Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius handing the Governor's Cup trophy to Kansas coach Mark Mangino after the Jayhawks beat the Wildcats for the first time in 11 years. The photo has served as a year-long reminder of what Saturday's game against the Jayhawks means.

"If your heart's not beating for this game, you definitely have something wrong with you," senior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said. "I think we all have our hearts beating."

For the first time in more than a decade, Kansas enters the Sunflower Showdown as defenders of the Governor's Cup.

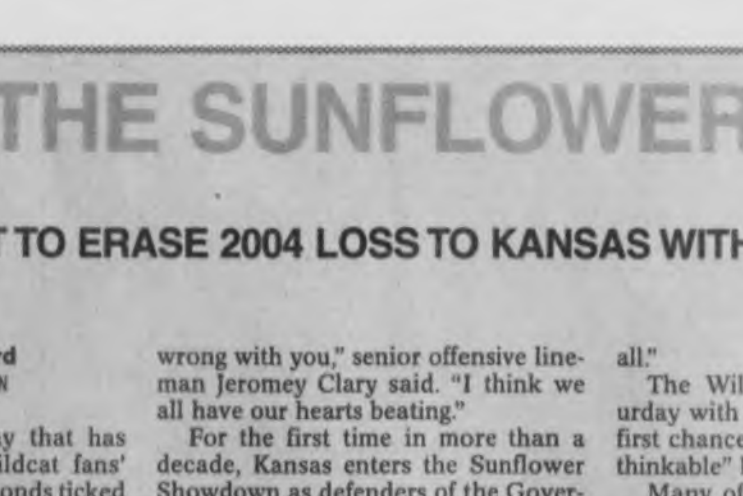
Starting in 1993, K-State dominated the series with the Jayhawks. In that span, the Wildcats scored 460 points to Kansas' 97, won by an average score of 42-9 and claimed the largest margin of victory in the series with a 64-0 thrashing of the Jayhawks in 2002.

Given K-State's stranglehold over the series, perhaps that's why the outcome of the 2004 game was so shocking.

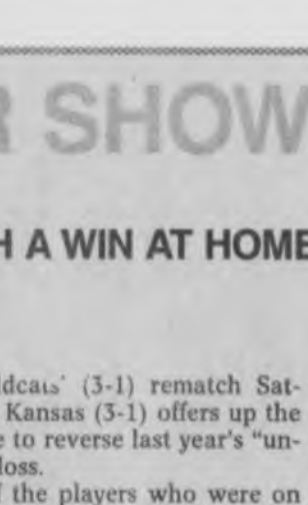
"It was kind of like the end of the world," junior defensive tackle Quintin Echols said. "It didn't feel too good at all."

The Wildcats' (3-1) rematch Saturday with Kansas (3-1) offers up the first chance to reverse last year's "unthinkable" loss.

Many of the players who were on the field that night in Lawrence have made it clear that they don't want the same to happen this year, coach Bill Snyder said.



"They do not want to be tied to 2004," Snyder said. "The vast majority of them were on that football team. They don't want to be like they were at that particular point in time."



Saturday against Kansas, 17 K-State seniors, who had never lost to the Jayhawks prior to last season, have a shot to walk off the field winners over Kan-

Off The Field
with Marcus Watts

Q: What's more annoying, "Boomer Sooner" or "Rock Chalk Jayhawk?"
A: "Rock Chalk Jayhawk," because it's your rival. It's probably more that I grew up in Kansas.

Q: Did the idea of going to Kansas ever cross your mind?
A: Yeah, it did. They seemed really interested in me, and they told me that they were probably going to offer me. At that point, that was the only Division I offer that I had. I was an in-between player – Division I and Division II. Then K-State came in, and I knew that K-State would be the best place for me. KU never ended up offering me, so this was the only offer that I got. I ended up taking it.

Q: What sport do you consider yourself to be the best at?
A: I think if there was one sport that I would have stuck with – that I would have been the best at – it would have been baseball. Even though I did not play it after my sixth-grade year, that was probably my best sport and could have been my best sport.

Q: What music do you listen to before games?
A: I'm not a real big music listener before games. If had to choose, I would probably listen to rap, but I don't bring a boom box or anything like that. I'm kind of a laid back kind of guy before games. I try not to get too hyped up before games because I'll get tired really fast if I do that.

Q: Who's the worst singer when they're listening to their music on their headphones in the locker room?
A: The only person that sings really is Surrell Davis. He's not the worst singer, but he's the only one that I hear singing all the time.

Q: Did you ever play video games? Do you use yourself in the football games?
A: I'm more of a Tiger Woods '06 player. I'm not really into the football games, but if I would get into the football games, I would probably play as myself.

Q: What do you think you're better at, offense or defense?
A: Right now, defense. You ask me that question seven or eight months ago, I would have said offense.

Q: What do you prefer to play?
A: Defense. It's fun. You get to fly around. You get to hit people.

OFFENSE

☑ Sophomore wide receiver Jordy Nelson is quickly becoming the star of the Wildcat offense. Nelson has a touchdown catch in all four games this year, the first time that has happened since Kevin Lockett did it in 1995. Despite 22 yards rushing at Oklahoma, K-State is still averaging 195.3 rushing yards per game.

☐ The Kansas offense has had trouble moving the ball this season, as the Jayhawks average 340.2 yards per game to rank No. 84 nationally. This may be due in part to the inability to find consistency at quarterback, where three different players have shared time. Freshman Kerry Meier may even see time Saturday.

DEFENSE

☐ K-State's strength on defense statistically has been against the pass, where the Wildcats rank No. 13 nationally in pass defense. After Oklahoma scorched the Wildcat defense for 232 rushing yards, K-State's defense fell from No. 9 to No. 25 nationally against the run. However, Kansas has had a rough go of it on offense this season, which could help the Wildcat defense.

☑ The Kansas defense has been powerful against the run, as the Jayhawks are No. 5 in the nation in rush defense by allowing 72 yards per game. This bodes well for the Jayhawks, as Oklahoma, ranked No. 3 against the run, was able to hold K-State to 22 yards on the ground last week. Kansas' weakness on defense is against the pass, where it gives up an average of 266.8 passing yards per game.

SPECIAL TEAMS

☑ One thing is for sure, K-State will always have a punter on the field in punting situations from here on out. Tim Reyer is smart enough to not make that mistake again. After a strong start to the season, the Wildcats' special teams took a back step against the Sooners last week, but there is too much talent on this unit for K-State to suffer for long. Don't expect many problems here.

☐ Kansas ranks 38th in kick returns and 39th in punt returns nationally. Punter Kyle Tucker is averaging 43 yards per punt, including a long of 77 yards. Charles Gordon became Kansas' career punt return leader in the Jayhawks' season-opener against Florida Atlantic. Gordon now has 747 career yards on 69 punt returns for an average of 10.8 yards per return.

PREDICTION

The 31-28 loss to the Jayhawks in 2004 has everyone associated with the K-State program in a rage. A loss to the Jayhawks is considered unacceptable to the 2005 team and its fan base, and consequently, the atmosphere Saturday at KSU Stadium will be electric. Expect the Wildcats to take back the Governor's Cup in dominating fashion.

— K-State - 35, Kansas - 14

Linebacker Diles has breakout game against Sooners last Saturday

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He might be K-State's best defensive player no one's never heard of, but he gained attention with a game-high 11 tackles in Saturday's loss to Oklahoma.

As a result, linebacker Zach Diles is tied for third on the team in tackles (18), despite limited playing time.

Diles, a 6-foot-2, 230-pound junior from Tulare, Calif., said while Saturday's game was probably one of his best, he was not surprised by the breakout performance.

"You put those high expectations on yourself," Diles said. "You want to come in and make an impact."

A late addition to K-State's 2005 recruiting class, Diles transferred from Fresno City College in Fresno, Calif.

Diles decided on K-State after orally committing to Utah, and he said there is no comparison between the Valley Conference and the Big 12 Conference.

"I think there were 84,000 fans (at Oklahoma's Memorial Stadium), and at a Valley Conference game, you're lucky to have 500 fans there," he said.

Diles said the large crowd in Norman, Okla., enhanced his Big 12-debut nerves.

"I remember the first play, I was kind of shaking," he said. "You get your adrenaline pumping coming into a situation like that."

But as soon as you get that first hit, that first contact, it is pretty much smooth sailing from there."

Coach Bill Snyder said Diles has made strides toward earning more playing time.

"He has taken advantage of the playing opportunities that he's had," Snyder said.

"He is playing smarter now, and that is something we did not do collectively this last week. I think Zach, just by being a little more familiar with the defense, makes fewer and fewer mistakes week in and week out."

Though Diles has impressed coaches with his work ethic and steady progress, he struggled when he first arrived in Manhattan.

"We were doing stations during the summer, and during my third or fourth station I almost passed out," Diles said. "I was so out of shape.

"From then on, I learned I need to step it up and get with it."

Diles, whose brother, Awan, plays strong safety for Fresno State, said he has benefited from being surrounded by other talented linebackers.

"You come in here and you see Ted Sims and all the people you watched on TV a couple years ago when (K-State) won that Big 12 Championship," Diles said.

Fellow Wildcat linebacker Maurice Mack said Sims and Diles, who split time at middle linebacker, compliment each other.

"Zach, he's a little bit faster than Ted, and Ted is more physical and has more knowledge," Mack said.

"Put either one in the game, and they are going to produce and produce well."

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Junior linebacker Zach Diles moves in for a tackle against North Texas on Sept. 24. Diles has appeared in all four games this season after transferring from Fresno City College in the summer.

Evridge makes move

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the matchup against rival Kansas in the 103rd Sunflower Showdown looming Saturday, K-State has been forced to address questions about its direction after a conference-opening 43-21 defeat at the hands of the Oklahoma Sooners last weekend.

Evridge

Among those questions is the uncertainty surrounding the quarterback position.

The Wildcats' starting quarterback through the first four games of the season, junior Allen Webb, was pulled in the fourth quarter against Oklahoma after completing 11-of-23 passes for 177 yards with two touchdowns and one interception.

Allan Evridge, a redshirt-freshman, replaced Webb and proceeded to throw for 49 yards on 3-of-6 passing.

Coach Bill Snyder said the race between the No. 1 and No. 2 quarterbacks tightened. However, he said he still plans to start Webb on Saturday against the Jayhawks.

"It's not a matter of saying, 'We've gone as far as we can go with Allen Webb,'" Snyder said. "That's not the case at all, by any stretch of the imagination."

At the moment, Evridge is content with his role on the team. He recognizes his position on the depth chart is ultimately not his decision.

"That's really up to Coach Snyder and the staff and what they feel," Evridge said. "Right now, I'm just taking every rep and trying to improve. I'm just trying to take advantage of every situation I get and trying to turn myself into the player that I want to become."

In two games this season, Evridge has an 81.8 quarterback rating after completing 8-of-16 passes for 146 yards, with no touchdowns and no interceptions. K-State chose to redshirt him last season after he entered K-State as a highly-regarded recruit from Papillon-LaVista High School in Nebraska.

Snyder said Evridge's improvement has been evident lately.

"I think he's been persistent, and that means an awful lot," Snyder said. "He's gained a considerable amount of knowledge, and he's been able to retain the knowledge and then execute it on the field. I think that speaks to his intelligence.

"He still has a ways to go, but I think there's a presence about him."

Against the Sooners, Evridge said he was pleased with his performance. Lately, he has been focusing on improving and increasing his confidence.

"I do feel like I am improving," Evridge said. "The name of the game is reps, and with every rep, the game slows down and it becomes more and more second nature.

Young offensive line gets training on the field

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An on-the-field learning experience for the offensive line in a hostile environment.

That is what K-State's line, which consists of one senior, experienced at Oklahoma during a 43-21 loss to the Sooners, senior Jeromey Clary said.

"What went right is that we got some good experience on the road," Clary said. "In front of an 80,000-plus crowd, we didn't handle it very well. That's the negative of it. But we got that experience under the young kids' belts and they have something to base off what Texas Tech will be like.

"I think it gives them the chance to get some good experience out there of a big crowd that's going to be loud and in your face."

Oklahoma, with the No. 3 rush defense in the nation, held K-State to 22 yards rushing on 32 carries, and the Sooner defense recorded six sacks. This week, the Wildcats will face the University of Kansas' No. 5 rush defense that held the Texas Tech offense to 30 points. The Red Raiders had been averaging 66 points per game.

"When you boil the water out of it, and you take the things that they are responsible for and how well they did, it wasn't a good enough performance for us to win, but they were not quite as poor as it seemed," coach Bill Snyder said of the line against Oklahoma.

The offensive line started the season with one player who had significant playing time in Clary, who will make his 31st consecutive start on Saturday. Sophomore left guard John Hafferty was the only other player with any experience.

The rest of the line is made up of redshirt-freshmen and sophomores, and took a hit in the Wildcats' game against North Texas. Matt Boss and Jacob Voegeli were injured in the first half, thinning out what was already a depth-deprived unit.

Because of the injury to Voegeli, converted defensive lineman Jordan Bedore started at center against Oklahoma, making one significant error when he snapped the ball to quarterback Allen Webb while Webb was calling an audible, which led to a turnover.

"It's a learning experience, having the opportunity to play in front of 84,000 people in Oklahoma," senior fullback Victor Mann said.

Cat offense hopes to rebound against KU

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will try to improve on its lackluster offensive performance against Oklahoma when the Wildcats take on the University of Kansas Saturday.

Oklahoma held K-State to 22 yards rushing on 32 carries last week, the first time this season the Wildcat offense failed to rush for more than 200 yards.

Coach Bill Snyder said he is confident his team will establish the running game against a stingy Kansas defense.

"Every week it is important to establish the running game, and I believe we can do that this week," Snyder said.

Statistically, the matchup of K-State's offense against Kansas' defense appears even. K-State ranks 69th in the nation in passing, 25th in rushing and 38th in total offense, while Kansas ranks 66th against the pass, fifth against the run and 39th in total defense.

One of the few bright spots for the offense against Oklahoma was wide receiver Jordy Nelson.

Nelson has scored a touchdown in every game this season and has as many receiving touchdowns as the rest of the team combined (4). He also leads the team in receptions and yards with 14 catches for 249 yards.

His move from defense to offense has been an easier transition than he expected, Nelson said.

"I feel real comfortable," Nelson said. "I know pretty much everything I need to right now on the offensive side through the run game and pass game."

Nelson will try to record his second consecutive game with more than 100 yards receiving.

Another contributor to the offense is backup running back Parrish Fisher.

Against North Texas on Sept. 24, Fisher rushed for 169 yards on 21 carries. Against the Sooners, however, Fisher carried the ball twice for 13 yards.

His role may have been decreased with the return of starter Thomas Clayton, but Fisher said he will be ready for his first helping of the Sunflower Showdown if Snyder calls his number.

"I don't know if I'm going to get on the field," Fisher said, "but I'm going to come in ready to do what I know I can do, and that's help the team get this victory."

shot to walk off the field winners over Kansas one last time.

As senior fullback Victor Mann said, that chance, along with the opportunity to win a fourth game – which would equal K-State's win total from last year – is the Wildcats' biggest goal.

"It means a whole lot, not just because it's KU, but we have the opportunity to keep winning games," Mann said. "We have the opportunity to correct those mistakes and make something good happen this Saturday, and that's what we're going to try to do."

Echols said the score Saturday won't matter, just as long as the feeling he and the other Wildcats felt as they walked off the field in Lawrence while the Kansas students tore down the goal posts doesn't come back.

"It's not really thinking about what the score was last year, what the score is this year. It's really more about how we felt losing last year," he said. "We don't want to have that feeling again."

day and widen my knowledge base and adapt to the offense. The biggest thing is mental preparation and being able to transfer it from the film room to the field."

With a rivalry game against Kansas a day away, the Wildcats are not opposed to the idea of playing two different quarterbacks.

The No. 2 quarterback is ready to play, whether or not he gets the chance.

"It's up to the coaches," Evridge said, when asked if he would play Saturday.

"They watch and evaluate what's going on. I definitely would hope to play, but we shall see."

Pakistan earthquake leaves 20,000 dead

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend, a magnitude 7.6 earthquake shook northern Pakistan, leaving at least 20,000 dead and many more wounded.

In wake of this weekend's disaster, many Pakistani students and faculty said they are worried about colleagues and loved ones back home.

"I know a number of colleagues who teach at the university at Muzaffarabad, where the epicenter was, so I'm obviously very worried about them," Talat Rahman, distinguished professor of physics, said. "It's a tragedy. It's a big tragedy."

Lack of communication is keeping people from contacting their friends and family.

"It's going to be a while before we can even get in touch," Rahman said.

Additionally, the severe terrain of the Himalaya mountain ranges has made rescue work difficult. Many cities have been buried, and road, water and electricity structures have been destroyed in some areas, the Associated Press reported.

The AP said in some cities that lack assistance, survivors are using sledgehammers to break through rubble in the search for other survivors.

"It's not New Orleans, so you can't get on the bus, but I think getting some of the supplies like medicine, and some of the essentials they need, that could be a big help," Rahman said.

According the AP, Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf stated the urgent need for medicine and tents which has been echoed locally. Rahman said the largest needs at present are

Evridge, defense help Wildcats regain control of Governor's Cup

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In leading K-State to a 12-3 win Saturday over rival Kansas, redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge may have taken the starting quarterback spot from junior Allen Webb.

"That's probably a fair assessment," coach Bill Snyder said Sunday when asked if Evridge holds the edge over Webb. "He's demonstrated some poise and the capacity to guide this football team and provide some leadership and make some good decisions along the way."

Evridge came on in relief of Webb on K-State's third possession against the Jayhawks, after Webb had accounted for a fumble on an exchange from center – which Webb recovered – and an interception.

Evridge went on to complete 14 passes for 136 yards and a touchdown.

After the game, Evridge said his first extended action at quarterback at K-State helped improve his game.

"I think I did alright," Evridge said. "There's a lot of room for improvement; there always is. Seeing stuff helps, but really what helps is actually getting in there and mixing it up a little bit. It's not the same from the sidelines."

Senator shares memories of brotherhood

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., joined Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity for Bagels, Brotherhood and Briefing Sunday morning.

As part of Pike's Super Homecoming, Roberts, a fraternity alumnus, addressed active members, alumni and family with a speech on his Pike memories and his work in the United States Senate.

Roberts
SENATOR, R-KAN.

"It's pretty exciting that he's here to talk to us," said Brandon Damas, chapter president and senior in architectural engineering.

Roberts pledged Pike in 1955 and graduated from K-State in 1958 with a degree in journalism. At K-State, Roberts served as the fraternity's recruitment chairman and was a member of Interfraternity Council.

He was elected to the Senate in 1996 and re-elected in 2002.

Roberts began his talk with memories of his university days, including a time he found a horse leg in his sleeping bag. Roberts quoted passages about values and obstacles to continued fraternity commitment from his father's speech at Pike's 50th chapter reunion.

"It's just great hearing a keynote speaker talk about brotherhood," said Ted Bauer, Pike member and junior in marketing.

The briefing part of the morning started with Roberts' work as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Intelligence, which he said consumes 80 to 90 percent of his time.

"Our first obligation in the Congress is to guarantee our national security," Roberts said.

He said senators are working on

9th Annual WildKAT Chase raises more than $7,000

Walkers and runners braved cool temperatures for Kappa Alpha Theta's ninth annual WildKAT Chase Sunday morning.

The more than 200 participants in the 5K walk/run helped raise more than $7,000 for Theta's national philanthropy, Court Appointed Special Advocates.

CASA gives children a voice in the courts when they are not old enough to speak for themselves.

"We are excited to have people come and support us," Katie McMurray, junior in secondary education, said.

K-State students, Manhattan citizens and Theta alumnae participated, both in teams and by themselves.

"Lots of alumni come back," McMurray said. "It gives them the chance to see the girls, too."

Kory Cool, staff assistant for Intercollegiate Athletics, was the race's top male and Tracy Bamberger was the top female. Phi Kappa Theta won as top fraternity and Alpha Delta Pi took top sorority honors.

Twelve others placed first through third in four age groups: 17 and under, 18-25, 26-49 and 50 and up.

Participants were eligible to win gift certificates at the end of the race when everyone's race number was put into a drawing.

"All the girls have worked really hard for this," McMurray said. "They are really excited to be here."

All Thetas worked at the race. Sign-holders carried motivational signs and pointed the way to the finish line.

Some women worked the registration tables and six women biked the 5K course so if participants had any problems, the women could bike ahead to get help.

The runners said they were excited for the race.

"It's a good experience," Reid Pritchett, sophomore in political science, said. "I am running the whole thing."

Mount Everest shorter
A recent measurement by Chinese scientists showed Mount Everest is 29,017 feet high, 12 feet shorter than what it was measured at 30 years ago. This does not mean the world's highest mountain has shrunk, but previous measurements were less accurate. A 1975 Chinese survey determined that the mountain was 29,029 feet.

Holdings destroyed
A fire which destroyed a Lawrence, apartment building Saturday claimed a stockpile of Kansas musical history. About 2,000 albums, 4,000 singles, several hundred CDs and tapes and rare live recordings from the late 1950s to today were burnt.

New FBI hiring rules
The FBI is considering whether to relax its hiring rules over how often applicants could have used marijuana or other illegal drugs in life. The change would limit how often and how many years ago the applicant for intelligence analysts, linguists, computer specialists, accountants and others used the illegal substances.

day and widen my knowledge base and adapt to the offense. The biggest thing is mental preparation and being able to transfer it from the film room to the field."

With a rivalry game against Kansas a day away, the Wildcats are not opposed to the idea of playing two different quarterbacks.

The No. 2 quarterback is ready to play, whether or not he gets the chance.

"It's up to the coaches," Evridge said, when asked if he would play Saturday.

"They watch and evaluate what's going on. I definitely would hope to play, but we shall see."

Pakistan earthquake leaves 20,000 dead

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend, a magnitude 7.6 earthquake shook northern Pakistan, leaving at least 20,000 dead and many more wounded.

In wake of this weekend's disaster, many Pakistani students and faculty said they are worried about colleagues and loved ones back home.

"I know a number of colleagues who teach at the university at Muzaffarabad, where the epicenter was, so I'm obviously very worried about them," Talat Rahman, distinguished professor of physics, said. "It's a tragedy. It's a big tragedy."

Lack of communication is keeping people from contacting their friends and family.

"It's going to be a while before we can even get in touch," Rahman said.

Additionally, the severe terrain of the Himalaya mountain ranges has made rescue work difficult. Many cities have been buried, and road, water and electricity structures have been destroyed in some areas, the Associated Press reported.

The AP said in some cities that lack assistance, survivors are using sledgehammers to break through rubble in the search for other survivors.

"It's not New Orleans, so you can't get on the bus, but I think getting some of the supplies like medicine, and some of the essentials they need, that could be a big help," Rahman said.

According the AP, Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf stated the urgent need for medicine and tents which has been echoed locally. Rahman said the largest needs at present are

Senator shares memories of brotherhood

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., joined Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity for Bagels, Brotherhood and Briefing Sunday morning.

As part of Pike's Super Homecoming, Roberts, a fraternity alumnus, addressed active members, alumni and family with a speech on his Pike memories and his work in the United States Senate.

Roberts
SENATOR, R-KAN.

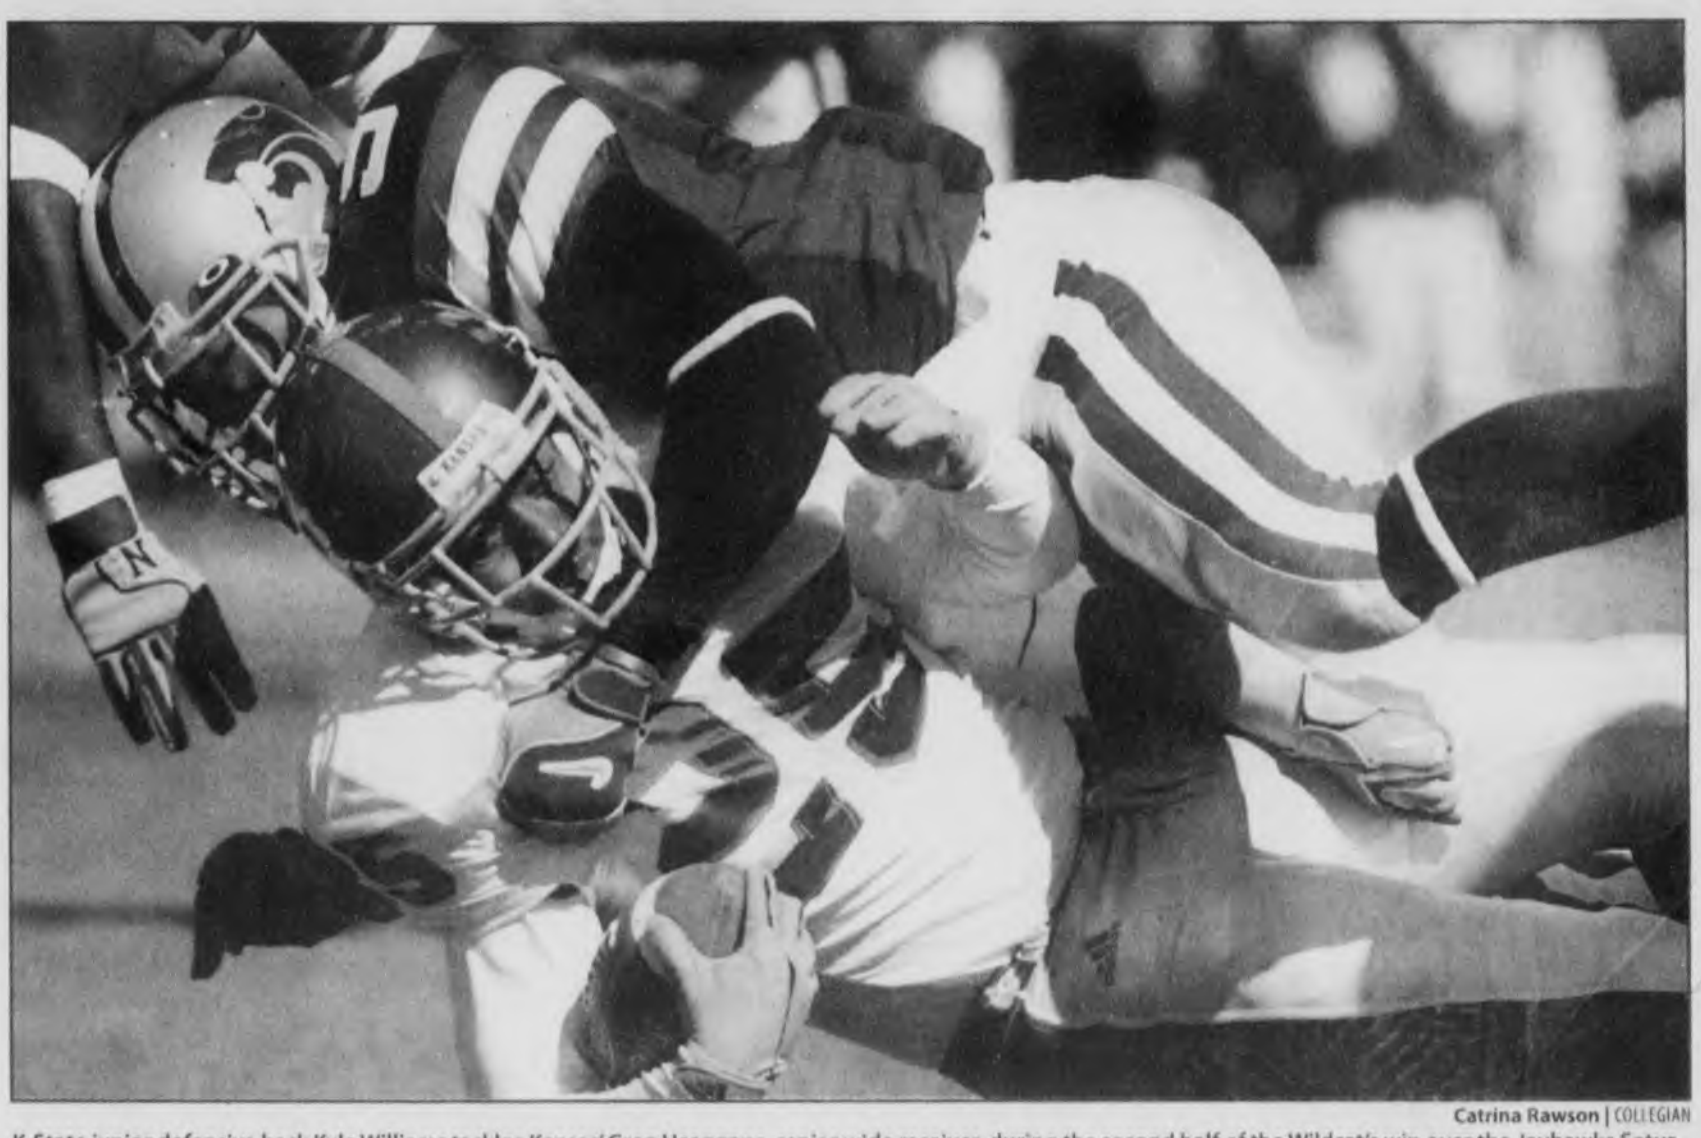
"It's pretty exciting that he's here to talk to us," said Brandon Damas, chapter president and senior in architectural engineering.

Roberts pledged Pike in 1955 and graduated from K-State in 1958 with a degree in journalism. At K-State, Roberts served as the fraternity's recruitment chairman and was a member of Interfraternity Council.

He was elected to the Senate in 1996 and re-elected in 2002.

Roberts began his talk with memories of his university days, including a time he found a horse leg in his sleeping bag. Roberts quoted passages about values and obstacles to continued fraternity commitment from his father's speech at Pike's 50th chapter reunion.

"It's just great hearing a keynote speaker talk about brotherhood," said Ted Bauer, Pike member and junior in marketing.



The briefing part of the morning started with Roberts' work as the chairman of the Senate Committee on Intelligence, which he said consumes 80 to 90 percent of his time.

"Our first obligation in the Congress is to guarantee our national security," Roberts said.

He said senators are working on

Evridge, defense help Wildcats regain control of Governor's Cup

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In leading K-State to a 12-3 win Saturday over rival Kansas, redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge may have taken the starting quarterback spot from junior Allen Webb.

"That's probably a fair assessment," coach Bill Snyder said Sunday when asked if Evridge holds the edge over Webb. "He's demonstrated some poise and the capacity to guide this football team and provide some leadership and make some good decisions along the way."

Evridge came on in relief of Webb on K-State's third possession against the Jayhawks, after Webb had accounted for a fumble on an exchange from center – which Webb recovered – and an interception.

Evridge went on to complete 14 passes for 136 yards and a touchdown.

After the game, Evridge said his first extended action at quarterback at K-State helped improve his game.

Red-shirt freshman Allan Evridge came off the bench to the lead the Wildcats to the win.

"I think I did alright," Evridge said. "There's a lot of room for improvement; there always is. Seeing stuff helps, but really what helps is actually getting in there and mixing it up a little bit. It's not the same from the sidelines."

Junior running back Thomas Clayton celebrates with fans following K-State's 12-3 victory over Kansas Saturday afternoon at KSU Stadium. The win moved the Cats to 1-1 in Big 12 Conference play. The Wildcat's next game will be in Lubbock, Texas, against the Red Raiders of Texas Tech.

9th Annual WildKAT Chase raises more than $7,000

Students and Manhattan residents take off from the starting line in front of Ahearn Field House. The annual 5K WildKAT Chase raised $7,000 for Court Appointed Special Advocates.

Walkers and runners braved cool temperatures for Kappa Alpha Theta's ninth annual WildKAT Chase Sunday morning.

The more than 200 participants in the 5K walk/run helped raise more than $7,000 for Theta's national philanthropy, Court Appointed Special Advocates.

CASA gives children a voice in the courts when they are not old enough to speak for themselves.

"We are excited to have people come and support us," Katie McMurray, junior in secondary education, said.

K-State students, Manhattan citizens and Theta alumnae participated, both in teams and by themselves.

"Lots of alumni come back," McMurray said. "It gives them the chance to see the girls, too."

Kory Cool, staff assistant for Intercollegiate Athletics, was the race's top male and Tracy Bamberger was the top female. Phi Kappa Theta won as top fraternity and Alpha Delta Pi took top sorority honors.

Twelve others placed first through third in four age groups: 17 and under, 18-25, 26-49 and 50 and up.

Participants were eligible to win gift certificates at the end of the race when everyone's race number was put into a drawing.

"All the girls have worked really hard for this," McMurray said. "They are really excited to be here."

All Thetas worked at the race. Sign-holders carried motivational signs and pointed the way to the finish line.

Some women worked the registration tables and six women biked the 5K course so if participants had any problems, the women could bike ahead to get help.

The runners said they were excited for the race.

"It's a good experience," Reid Pritchett, sophomore in political science, said. "I am running the whole thing."

Mount Everest shorter

A recent measurement by Chinese scientists showed Mount Everest is 29,017 feet high, 12 feet shorter than what it was measured at 30 years ago. This does not mean the world's highest mountain has shrunk, but previous measurements were less accurate. A 1975 Chinese survey determined that the mountain was 29,029 feet .

Holdings destroyed

A fire which destroyed a Lawrence, apartment building Saturday claimed a stockpile of Kansas musical history. About 2,000 albums , 4,000 singles, several hundred CDs and tapes and rare live recordings from the late 1950s to today were burnt.

New FBI hiring rules

The FBI is considering whether to relax its hiring rules over how often applicants could have used marijuana or other illegal drugs in life. The change would limit how often and how many years ago the applicant for intelligence analysts, linguists, computer specialists, accountants and others used the illegal substances.

Volcano erupts; 31 killed in flooding

William Martinez | AFP

Smoke rises from the Ilamatepec volcano in August 2005. El Salvador's largest volcano, dormant for more than a century, shook the ground as it woke up, hurling out hot rocks, killing at least two and forcing more than 2,000 to flee.

At least 31 people were killed Monday in San Salvador, El Salvador, from landslides triggered by heavy rains. Dozens of people from there and Guatemala evacuated as rivers began to rise. Mauricio Ferrer, director of El Salvador's national emergency center, said officials opened 122 shelters to accommodate more than 8,500 people who fled their homes. Floods and landslides came two days after the Ilamatepec volcano erupted sending ash and hot rocks down the sides.

BIRD FLU EPIDEMIC MAY NEED ASSISTANCE BY U.S. TROOPS

President Bush suggested dispatching American troops to enforce quarantines in any area with outbreaks of the bird flu virus on Tuesday. Bush said aggressive action may be needed to prevent a U.S. outbreak of the strain that is sweeping through Asian poultry. Experts fear it could be the next deadly pandemic. The flu has killed about 60 people, but if the virus mutates, it could lead to a worldwide outbreak.

CRUISE, HOLMES EXPECT CHILD

Tom Cruise, 43, and Katie Holmes, 26, are having their first child together. Holmes' pregnancy was reported Wednesday by People magazine. "Tom and Katie are very excited, and the entire family is very excited," Lee Anne DeVette, Cruise's spokeswoman, told People. The couple have been dating since April and became engaged in June.

MISSING STUDENT'S BODY FOUND

Investigators identified the body of Taylor Behl, 17, a missing Virginia Commonwealth University freshman who had been missing for a month. How Behl died has not been determined. The police chief said Thursday the area where Behl's body was found was determined from photographs of an amateur photographer, who was one of the last people to see her alive. Ben Fawley, 38, has is being held on child pornography charges. Fawley's lawyer said he had a romantic relationship with the teen. Detectives seized items from Fawley's home, including a box of bones, a machete and a part of a box spring bearing a reddish-brown stain, according to a search warrant.

CENTRAL AMERICA RESCUE WORKERS TRYING TO REACH VICTIMS

Mudslides and flooding from Hurricane Stan have killed about 258 people across areas of Central America and Mexico. Fears were increased Friday because of the earthquake that went through Guatemala and El Salvador. Food and water are beginning to run out and rescue workers are trying to reach flooded areas. Workers continue to search for more than 100 missing people. "We need food, clothing, medicine and help," Lucas Ajpus, a former firefighter coordinating efforts in Santiago Aititlan, Guatemala.

SOUTH ASIA QUAKE KILLS THOUSANDS

A magnitude 7.6 earthquake devastated Pakistan, India and parts of Afghanistan Saturday morning, killing more than 20,000 people. In Pakistan, the dead included 250 girls who were crushed at a school and 200 soldiers on duty in the Himalayas. The quake struck just before 9 a.m., Pakistan time, and about 41,000 people were injured. "It is a national tragedy," said Maj. Gen. Shaukat Sultan, Pakistan's chief army spokesman.

TENSION INCREASES AS ISRAEL-PALESTINE SUMMIT NEARS

Israel's defense minister rejected key Palestinian demands Sunday during a preparatory meeting meant to ensure the upcoming summit's success. Senior Israeli and Palestinian negotiators agreed to meet again in hopes of salvaging the summit. Tentatively set for Tuesday, it will be the first summit between Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas since the withdrawal of Israel from the Gaza Strip.

Rhythmic moves

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Bala Thiagarajan, graduate student in biology, dances a Dandiya dance during the Indian Student Association dance night in the Union Ballroom. Dandiya is a dance originally from India.

Indian association teaches culture through dance

Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From children in traditional dress to students in blue jeans, attendees of the India Student Association's Dandiya night learned new dance moves and made new friends.

Satyabrata Das, graduate student in biochemistry and ISA president, said he expected about 150 attendees.

The event drew a crowd of all ages, some were there just to learn about different cultures.

"Learning about other cultures through dance is really cool," Katie James, senior in dietetics and dietetics said.

Kelly Marshall, senior in food and nutrition-exercise science and dietetics, said although she is from the Kansas City, Kan., area, she said she hasn't had much experience with other cultures.

She also said she is taking advantage of all the diversity at K-State.

Dandiya night is part of the Navratri – or nine-day – festival.

The festival is in honor of the nine manifestations of the Goddess Durga. It occurs twice a year. Once in April or May and again in September or October.

The Dandiya dance is performed using Dandiya sticks, which are multi-colored.

The sticks are struck against each other in a rhythmic move accompanying the dance.

Learning the dance and accompanying movements of the Dandiya sticks took skill and coordination, something one student said she lacked.

"I'm going to kill somebody," Astrid Gutierrez, junior in psychology, said.

Architecture students display study abroad work in Seaton

Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An exhibit in Seaton Hall displays projects completed abroad by architecture students.

The study abroad exhibit features the work of K-State architecture students who studied abroad in 2004-05 winter intersession, spring 2005 and summer 2005 programs. The exhibit includes pictures of their experiences, drawings, personal photo albums and drawing books that double as journals of their travels.

"It gives people a comprehensive view of what students have done while studying abroad," said Lynn Ewanow, associate dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design and director of international programs. "It provides an opportunity to celebrate what students have accomplished studying abroad and to share their experiences."

And the students are willing to share their experiences.

"I chose these pictures for the exhibit because they show about Finland," said Don Semple, fifth-year student in architecture and student coordinator of the exhibit. "The pictures show the different people I met and their many different cultures."

Architecture students are given the chance to study abroad during the spring semester of their fourth year. They must go through an internal application process for studying abroad within the college that requires the students to complete a personal self-evaluation, write an essay and have their grade point average assessed. From the 720 students in architecture, 80 studied abroad, representing about 50 percent of fourth-year architecture students.

"With the exhibit, I get a chance to give a good representation of what I saw and experienced and what I wanted others to see," said Sam Loring, fifth-year student in architecture and student coordinator of the exhibit.

Each study abroad program is different. Students can choose from 11 programs in nine countries, making each exhibit's sections different from the rest.

The whole exhibit is spread throughout Seaton – in Chang Gallery, Pierce Commons and in the first-floor east wing. Each section shows the students' work by the country where they studied: Tanzania, Finland, Peru, Italy, England and others. The exhibit will be on display 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays until Oct. 14.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

U. S. should take care of citizens in time of crisis

A magnitude 7.6 earthquake rocked Pakistan on Saturday, causing major damage and killing more than 20,000 people.

As a result, Pakistan's government called for assistance from the international community. The United States swiftly made a commitment to send money and helicopters to the region.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Under normal circumstances, the actions of our government would be regarded as humanitarian. But these are not normal times.

The United States suffered multiple devastating attacks from Mother Nature in the past months.

It is too early in the recovery process for the United States to divert much-needed resources from its own desperate people to those overseas.

The earthquake in Pakistan is not to be overlooked just because it doesn't involve people in our own country. However, it is the responsibility of our government to help our people first.

Surely those homeless and hungry people in Louisiana can sleep well in their rubbled remains knowing those suffering from the most recent natural disaster are now taking the media spotlight.

The U. S. government is well-known for jumping in and helping other countries in times of disaster. But the disaster at home needs to not be forgotten.

Making sure American citizens are cared for and have the necessities needed to begin rebuilding their lives needs to be the first priority of the government.

Cracking the code

Over-used plot devices, characters make Brown's book predictable

JONAS HOGG

For many aspiring hacks we often question what tools we need to reach enlightenment. For surely we must meditate on the strife and sacrifice necessary to reach the Shangri-la of best-sellerdom.

Deep characters? Well thought-out plots? No-no says "The Da Vinci Code" author Dan Brown. The path to nirvana needn't contain unnecessary aspects such as good writing.

Why, if one looks close it is almost possible to see a formula for success.

In "The Da Vinci Code," our hero, Robert Langdon, must solve a murder mystery. Similarly, in the prequel "Angels and Demons," our hero must solve a murder mystery.

In "The Da Vinci Code," we have a hot girl to make us think about breasts amid dark and sinister motives. In "Angels and Demons," we have a hot girl with long Italian legs to distract us from the plot.

Helping along the way is Sir Lee Teabing, who possesses vital knowledge on the evil conspiracy but is limited in his ability to save or wreck the day due to being crippled by polio. Watch out for twists and turns, we don't know what side Sir Teabing is on.

In "Angels and Demons," Maximilian Kohler possesses vital knowledge on the evil conspiracy, too, but is unable to participate due to be being crippled by polio. Watch out for twists and turns, we don't know what side Mr. Kohler is on.

What good Dan Brown book is complete without secret organizations who do all sorts of secretly secret things in secret.

In "Angels and Demons," Langdon must unravel the mystery of the anti-Church, cardinal branding, occult group known as the Illuminati. But "The Da Vinci Code" features a combination of The Priory of Sion – a sacrilegious, anti-church occult (but no branded cardinals) group, and Opus Dei – a pro-religious, pro-church occult group (branded cardinals cost extra.)

Most important for any good Dan Brown book is something religiously weird. The Umbilical Cord and Foreskin of Jesus Christ are both considered religious artifacts. Do I smell a new Dan Brown book? He could call it "Wienies and Innies."

Carpe diem! For those aspiring writers, the Holy Foreskin can be your ticket to bestsellerville. Don't let this circumcised treasure make money solely for the Catholic Church, let it make money for you. Just remember Dan Brown's recipe:

- One murder mystery unrelated to the rest of the plot – even Economics books are more fun with an irrelevant murder thrown in.
- One hot girl – hot girls make everything suck a little less.
- One person with vital knowledge who has been crippled by polio – just because.
- Weird occult groups to taste. (Branded cardinals optional).
- Bumbling Catholics.
- One holy foreskin or other obscure religious artifact.
- Mix together hap-hazardly. Bake until mediocre. Garnish with an even more mediocre Hollywood production and voila, instant Dan Brown success. Repeat as necessary.

'Da Vinci Code' challenges beliefs, makes readers ask questions

KELSEY CHILDRESS

Before you even say it, I do know not everything in Dan Brown's novel, "The Da Vinci Code," is real. But don't sit there and tell me you didn't rush to look at a print of The Last Supper as soon as it is mentioned in the novel. What he describes is really there, isn't it? Yeah, thought so.

Seeing this visual proof for myself made me start to wonder what else is really true in this bestselling book. Catholicism has always been a sore point to me, so when Brown highlights the cardinal and other Catholic bigwigs as antagonists, it starts getting exciting. Keeping in mind that this is a work of fiction, one still begins to believe this tale of secret societies sworn to protect the truth of Christianity, which is held in a hidden book of the Bible written by Jesus himself.

It is desired that this book is a work of non-fiction rather than a novel meant for pleasure, because to those who don't research before committing to believing in something, it is the God-given truth.

However, as soon as "The Da Vinci Code" gained an almost cult-like status, critics leaped out of the woodwork to declare many fallacies placed in the novel.

Literary critics also argued that Dan Brown uses the same plot line throughout each novel – dashing hero with his sexy, intelligent female counterpart, set out to save the world from a religious (or in Digital Fortress, a technological) conspiracy.

As hokey and fictional the basic plot formula is, the historical information throughout the novel to advance the storyline sure sounds credible. The paintings and places do exist, which makes one want to believe even more. Certain things, like a story written as fact, make it hard to think that not everything being fed to us is true.

The fact of the matter is, when it comes down to it, Dan Brown didn't set out writing his novels to convince readers that these stories were true occurrences. He wants to challenge what people think about things that are sometimes taken for granted. It is customary to believe only what your supposed "superiors" tell you. This novel challenges this belief system, mainly directed toward the Catholic religion as a whole and its accused "dirty laundry."

Even though "The Da Vinci Code" and "Angels and Demons" don't deserve a place on the shelf of literary classics like "The Grapes of Wrath" or "Little Women," these books have significantly changed the way of thinking about religion.

"The Da Vinci Code" makes the reader want to examine what religion is really about and who to trust when it comes to believing. This is why I believe "The Da Vinci Code" is a good book.

Any piece of literature that helps examine self and how to approach and think about religion, life, love, etc., ought to be read and discussed as much as possible. Almost all books will never reach the literary precipice of true and eternal appreciation, but when one comes along that stirs up controversy of ideals and accepted "truths," we should pay attention.

Legendary primatologist Jane Goodall will speak in Salina on Oct. 23, and in preparation for her visit, Sunset Zoo hosted Chimp Day on Sunday.

Sunset Zoological Park, 223 Oak St., is one of 20 international zoos that are members of the Jane Goodall Institute's ChimpanZoo research organization.

The local researchers, mostly K-State College of Veterinary Medicine students, study the chimps and report their findings to ChimpanZoo. The researchers also find ways to stimulate and entertain the chimps.

"Chimps are very intelligent and they need mental stimulation every day," said Dianne Paukstelis, zoo marketing and development officer. "They do puzzles, papier-mâché, a few of them even paint."

On Sunday, zoo patrons helped make enrichments for the chimps and took advantage of games and prizes, Paukstelis said.

"It's a good way to raise awareness for Jane Goodall's visit," Paukstelis said.

Goodall is coming to Salina's Rolling Hills Wildlife Adventure for the international ChimpanZoo Conference Oct. 21-25. Conference attendees will fly into Wichita and tour the Sedgwick County Zoo before driving to Salina.

She will present "An Afternoon with Dr. Jane Goodall, DBE" at 2 p.m., Oct. 23, in the Stiefel Theater, 151 S. Santa Fe Road in Salina. Tickets are $22 for adults and $15 for students.

Goodall, 71, is a pioneer in the study of chimpanzees. She earned a doctorate in ethology from Cambridge University and spent 40 years studying chimps in Tanzania.

She has won numerous awards, including a United Nations Messenger of Peace award. In 1995, she was made a dame by Queen Elizabeth II. She has written several books and continues to travel nearly 300 days a year, speaking out against wildlife threats. Goodall visited Manhattan in 1999 and spoke at McCain Auditorium.

Mars encounter gives club, scientists chance to map planet

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stargazing never seemed so sweet – at least, that's what members of the K-State Astronomy Club are saying.

Throughout October, Earth and Mars are at one of their closest encounters in history, according to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Web site.

While this month is treasured by scientists, Astronomy Club vice-president Mindy Gratny said it is very special for her organization.

"When things like that, the once-in-every-1,000-year (events) are happening, there are several things that any person can enjoy," Gratny, senior in physics, said.

The NASA site explains the close encounter as an orbital race, where Earth laps around the sun twice as fast as Mars.

"Every two years, approximately, Earth catches Mars from behind and laps it," Tony Phillips, NASA scientist, said in a NASA report.

Earth will lapse Mars on Oct. 30, where only 43 million miles will separate the two planets. Generally, 140 million miles separate them both.

On Aug. 10, NASA launched a Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter camera to study the red planet. Phillips said it will take approximately six months for the MRO spacecraft to reach Mars, where it will begin a two-year mission to map the red planet in greater detail than ever before.

The MRO high-resolution camera will be able to discern objects like rocks, rovers, surface minerals and crashed Mars landers from old studies.

"These are key elements in NASA's plan to eventually send humans to Mars," Phillips said.

Gratny said while a future on Mars might not be something this generation will experience, she still enjoys spending time with her club and getting to know the galaxy.

"I just think it's really neat to think that there is so much out there that people don't really look at," she said. "It's really interesting to learn more about what's out there, how far away things are, what things are close together."

For those interested in learning more about Mars and other astronomic phenomenon, Laura Heyd, senior in elementary education and president of Astronomy Club, said her club will host a few stargazing experiences this month.

"We've already went out and looked at stars on Oct. 6," she said. "Yet, we will two others on Oct. 27 and Nov. 3."

Heyd said on Nov. 3, Chris Sorensen, professor in physics, will make a presentation before students gather at their star-watching spot 15 miles north of town.

With astronomy, Heyd said the club's meetings are always interesting and educational.

"I'm not that experienced with astronomy," she said. "But it's exciting to go out there and share this experience with everyone else. I learn something every day."

Terror simulation prepares doctors, officials in case of attack

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It happened this year on London busses, four years ago at the World Trade Center and 10 years ago in a Tokyo subway – and some government officials are determined that terrorism will not strike an unprepared Midwest region.

Kansas is not taking the domestic preparedness concern lightly, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said.

"Right now, the state is regrouping and filling in the gaps with what went wrong (with Hurricane Katrina) and work with what we can for the future," Sebelius said. "We are fools if we aren't prepared."

From Sept. 20 to Sept. 24, nearly 200 Kansas medical professionals and government officials participated in a terrorism preparedness study by simulating possible state disasters, said Marta Skalacki, project manager of anti-terror training for Kansas health professionals at KU Medical Center.

"For three days, we had people in a classroom session and they were assigned (and practiced) certain roles," she said. "And for 24 hours, over the course of the past weekend, people acted out the collaborate response."

Throughout the 24-hour simulation – located in Richmond, Mo., and Kansas City, Mo. – professionals set cars on fire, destroyed parts of neighborhoods and even bombed a building.

"Physicians and nurses had to get people out of the rubble, then transport them to hospitals," Skalacki said.

More than 17 area hospitals participated in the event. If one hospital was full, medics would send individuals to the next closest location.

"The goal of the project was to train, upgrade skills together, to prepare for a real life disaster terror event and essentially to develop collaborate response," Skalacki said.

One of Skalacki's biggest terror concerns is a variety of weapons of mass destruction, including biological and nuclear weapons.

"Most importantly to Kansas is agriterror. That would apply to not only health professionals, but to farmers as well," she said.

Agriterror, as defined by www.agriterror.com, is when terrorists contaminate food, water and anything that may be a danger to agricultural resources.

Although Skalacki said she was unclear about how to prepare for agriterror, all other potential terror threats were examined.

"We're in the process of conducting a formal evaluation," she said. "Personally, I think it was successful. People want to participate in another simulation, and we were just approved to have over three years of government funding to support our studies."

Since Sept. 11, the federal government has issued $13 billion in response to domestic terrorism.

Yet, now, with the help of a $4.3 million grant from the Human Resources and Services Administration, KU Medical Center Continuing Education will continue delivering programs around the state to help Kansans respond to a terrorist incident, emerging infection or other public health emergency, Skalacki said.

Jason Lantz, director of operations at the Flint Hills American Red Cross said locally, volunteers have prepared for smaller scale disasters. Smaller regions, such as Manhattan, though, lack appropriate funds to prepare the area for a significant disaster.

Until then, Skalacki said the state will continue working on simulations and other forms of preparation.

"We at KU Medical Center are very honored and pleased to work on events like this in the state," she said. "We need to continue to enhance and refine these type of skills to help prepare the area for a real emergency, with the best potential response possible."

Jayhawks' 2004 win just a fluke

The University of Kansas football team should savor last season's 31-28 win over K-State, because after Saturday's 12-3 Wildcat win, the Jayhawks won't win in the Sunflower Showdown series for a long time.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

In fact, it may be another 11 years before Kansas beats K-State again.

The reason?

The Jayhawks lose all their talent after this season, and Kansas coach Mark Mangino's pathetic 15-26 record in his tenure in Lawrence may mean his time as the Jayhawks' coach is at an end.

Let's face it, Saturday's game showed K-State's redshirt-freshmen and sophomores beating Kansas' seniors.

Of the 65 Jayhawks who played Saturday, 20 of them are gone after this season due to graduation, with the potential of others leaving for the NFL, namely junior All-American cornerback Charles Gordon.

Of Kansas' 22 starters, the Jayhawks lose 10, including seven on defense excluding Gordon.

On the other side, K-State played 49 players, and the Wildcats lose 10 of those players.

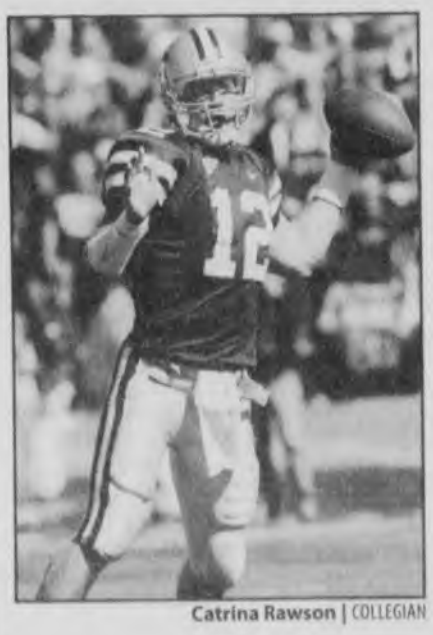
But even more amazing is that K-State loses just four starters after this year - two on offense and two on defense.

K-State started nine players who were either redshirt-freshmen or sophomores, meaning that talent will be around for awhile, and will only get better.

Simply put, the Wildcats are stacked with young talent that basically has their entire careers in front of them, while the Jayhawks lose all their talent that has made them somewhat competitive the past two seasons.

One thing is for sure, Kansas' defense is good this season. That much is obvious.

But all those Jayhawk seniors couldn't stop a Wildcat offense led by a redshirt-freshman quarterback and an injury-riddled offensive line from making the plays necessary to win.



Then there is the subject of Mangino. Surely he won't be around at the end of this season.

Look at Kansas' upcoming schedule: Oklahoma at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., at Colorado, Missouri at home, Nebraska at home, at No. 2 Texas and Iowa State at home.

The Jayhawks could and should lose at least four of those games, if not all of them.

If Kansas should lose four of those games, the Jayhawks would sport a 5-6 record at season's end, and Mangino would be out

Evridge steps in, leads K-State past Kansas

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Redshirt-freshman Allan Evridge runs through a hole for a short gain during the second half against Kansas. Evridge came off the bench for the Wildcats and passed for 136 yards and one touchdown to help K-State to a 12-3 victory over the Jayhawks.

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It did not take coach Bill Snyder long to decide what he wanted to do with his quarterback situation Saturday against Kansas.

Actually, it took less than six minutes for the K-State coach to take the headset off of backup Allan Evridge and have him warm-up on the sideline.

After a fumbled punt by Kansas return man Charles Gordon, the Wildcats took over at the Jayhawk 30-yard line.

In scoring position, Allen Webb moved the offense backward, fumbling the snap on second down only to recover it himself.

He followed that up with a throw off his back foot that was intercepted by Nick Reid, which Reid returned 28 yards to the Wildcat 39-yard line.

"You have to make sure you get the snap, No. 1," Snyder said. "You have to make sure you throw it to our guy, that's a prerequisite for being a quarterback. In Allen's case, I saw him grow so much in the spring and so much during the two-a-days, and he had a couple of good ball games, but he has been very inconsistent here of late."

Webb's inconsistency and Snyder's frustration with his play forced Webb to the sideline, as Evridge took over at quarterback for the Wildcats on their third offensive series.

Evridge remained consistent throughout the game, completing his first six passes despite being knocked around by the Kansas defense that pushed around a patchwork offensive line hit hard by injuries.

"He did a great job, and I feel really sorry for him because he's going to be extremely sore (Sunday)," senior offensive lineman Jeromey Clary said. "He did a lot of good things for us. He carried the ball and put his head down and got some extra yards for us."

The redshirt-freshman completed 14-of-21 passes for 136 yards and a touchdown and led the team in rushing with 25 yards on 17 carries.

"I haven't been hit since high school, so it was a little different," Evridge said. "I have to learn to get down on some of those. Those guys were flying around out there. You make one miss, another one was there, and then you try to make him miss and the next thing you know, you're flying through the air."

Tied at 3-3 in the final minutes of the third quarter, Evridge led the Wildcats down the field, completing all five passes he attempted, with the most crucial being a 28-yard completion to Jermaine Moreira on third and two.

The drive was capped off with an eight-yard touchdown pass to Jordy Nelson, which gave Nelson his fifth consecutive game with a touchdown.

"I thought he played reasonably well," Snyder said. "He (Evridge) and Allen Webb both made some mistakes – some more critical than others. There were some good things that both of them did, particularly Allan Evridge, and he had more opportunities to do that."

TEN | Davenport claims 50th career title, beats Mauresmo

FILDERSTADT, Germany — Lindsay Davenport earned her 50th career title Sunday with a 6-2, 6-4 victory against Amelie Mauresmo at the Porsche Grand Prix.

Davenport

The American became the 10th player to reach that milestone, relying on her big serve for her 10th straight win against Mauresmo.

She raced to a 5-1 lead in just 17 minutes by overpowering the fourth-ranked Frenchwoman with hard serves and returns that had Mauresmo scrambling to avoid breaks.

NHL | First NHL paychecks to be cut 12 percent

TORONTO — The first paycheck NHL players receive this season will be cut by 12 percent so that money can be placed into escrow.

Players haven't been paid in 16 months, dating to the end of the regular season before the lockout.

As stated in the new collective bargaining agreement, player salaries can't take up more than 54 percent of league revenues. An escrow fund was put in place to ensure that owners would get their share of the pot should salaries exceed the allowed percentage.

All 13 checks that players get this season will be docked for escrow but the percentage will change. The NHL and the players' association will recalculate the percentage three more times this season, the next being in late November.

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Running back Ahman Green was inactive Sunday with a thigh tendon injury and Najeh Davenport made his second career start for the Green Bay Packers.

Green

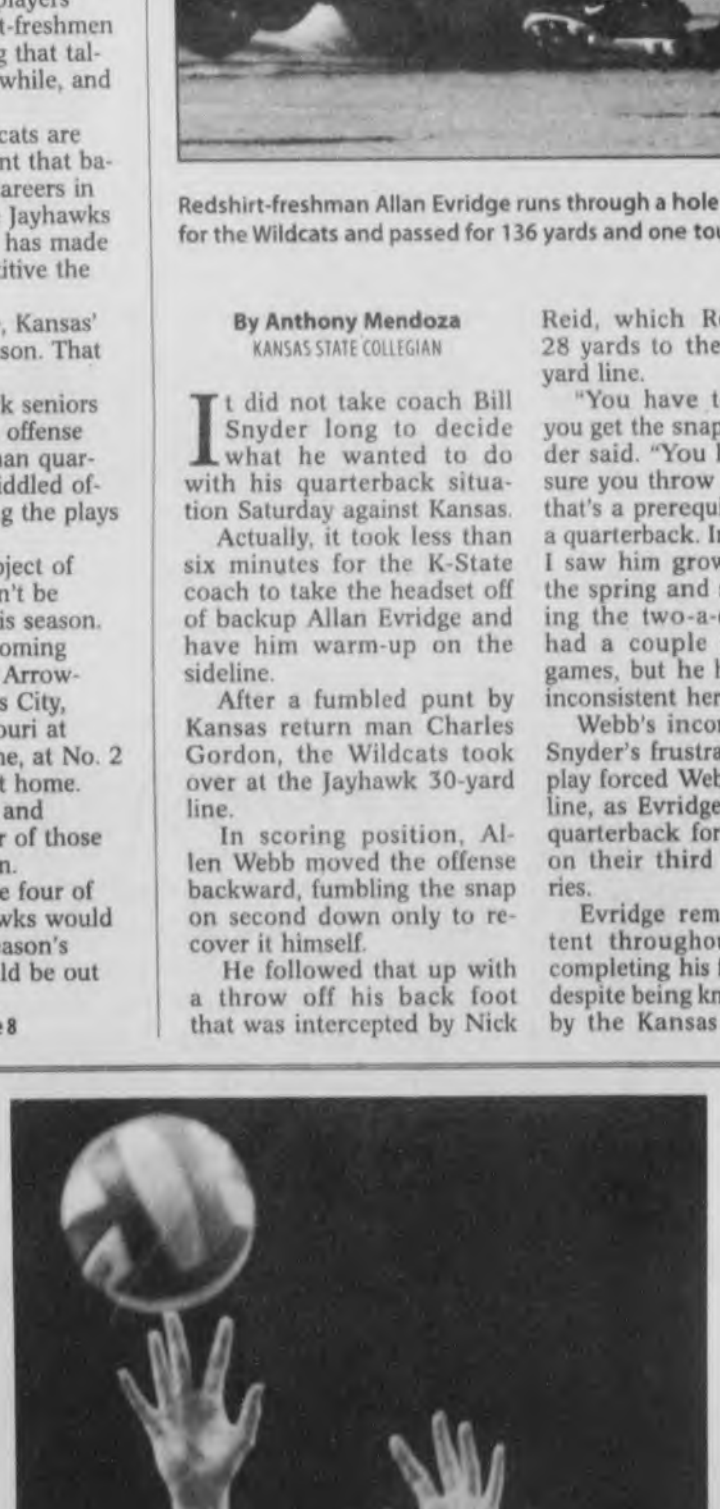
Also, center Mike Flanagan (hernia) and linebacker Na'il Diggs (knee) were among the inactives against New Orleans. Scott Wells replaced Flanagan, who had abdominal surgery Wednesday, and rookie Roy Manning, an undrafted free agent from Michigan, replaced Diggs.

The Saints were also without wide receiver Joe Horn (hamstring), who was replaced by Az-Zahir Hakim, and cornerback Fakhir Brown (knee) was replaced by Jason Craft.

MLB | Blue Jays broadcaster Tom Cheek dies at 66

TORONTO — Tom Cheek, who called every game in the history of the Toronto Blue Jays until last year, died Sunday after a battle with brain cancer. He was 66.

Cheek



Cheek, who died at his home in Oldsmar, Fla., was best known for his streak, which ended at 27 1/2 seasons on June 3, 2004, because of his father's death.

He called 4,306 consecutive regular season games, plus 41 more in the postseason, since the Blue Jays began playing in 1977.

"It's difficult to put into words the overwhelming sense of grief and loss shared today by the Blue Jays family," Blue Jays president Paul Godfrey said in a statement.

Wildcats defeat Cyclones for 19th consecutive time

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State sports teams gave Wildcat fans more than one reason to celebrate Saturday.

In addition to K-State defeating Kansas 12-3 in football, the 20th-ranked volleyball team stretched its winning streak to three matches by sweeping Iowa State in three games (30-27, 30-19, 30-23) in front of a season-high 1,768 fans at Bramlage Coliseum.

The victory marked the 19th consecutive time K-State (14-3, 5-2) has beaten Iowa State (11-7, 4-3).

Redshirt-freshman middle blocker Megan Farr led the Wildcats with 12 kills and 5 blocks, setting career highs in both categories.

"Megan has been continually improving and hitting for high efficiency," coach Suzie Fritz said. "She is a player who has not made a lot of errors, and thus has earned her way into the lineup."

In game one, Farr helped K-State build an early 14-8 lead, but the Cyclones rallied to pull within a point, 15-14. The game remained close, yet K-State won 30-27.

Farr said she benefited from finding a rhythm in game one.

"I wasn't in a very good rhythm (earlier in the season), which is probably why I haven't really been playing," Farr said. "But, it was good tonight."

The Wildcats struggled to gain momentum in game two until they tied the game at 8-8. From there, K-State went on a 22-11 run to win 30-19.

Following the intermission, the Wildcats jumped out to a 7-1 lead in game three. K-State's 30-23 win was a collective effort, as six Wildcats registered kills for the game.

Along with Farr, senior outside hitter Agata Rezende (11) and junior outside hitter Sandy Werner (10) also finished the match with double-digit kills.

Werner said she liked how well her team attacked Iowa State's defense.

Several options available for students staying up late

Iris Kalkofen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's 2 a.m. and students are still up.

Whatever the case may be, either studying, drinking or just spending time with friends, students are up late and many local businesses cater to this late-night crowd.

Many students get the late-night munchies. The restaurants and delivery services know this, especially in Aggieville.

The Pita Pit is open until 3 a.m. Monday through Wednesday and until 4 a.m. Thursday through Saturday, but only until 11 p.m. on Sunday nights.

"Late at night we get a lot of belligerent drunks," Paul Deuser, a Pita Pit employee, said. "They can get really loud and rambunctious."

Michael Parrish, senior in psychology and Pita-Pit employee, said drunkenness sometimes leads to morning business.

"A lot of times people will come in the next morning because they don't know what they had the night before but they found a wrapper and knew it was good," Parrish said. "That's usually half our morning business."

Open until 3 a.m. seven-days-a-week, Jimmy John's, also in Aggieville, offers students late-night sub sandwiches.

"Late at night, we get a lot of drunken people and the occasional late-night studier," Tom Hodapp, senior in human ecology and employee at Jimmy John's, said. "At about 11 p.m. we get people going to the bars to get something to eat before they get drunk. Between 1:30 a.m. and 2 a.m. we get the people that are already drunk and need to sober up."

Gumby's Pizza offers students a late-night pizza option. It is open until 2:30 a.m. Monday through Wednesday, until 3:30 a.m. Thursday through Saturday and until 2 a.m. on Sundays.

"We get really crazy, usually around 1 a.m.," Doug Macejewski, Gumby's owner, said. "The later it gets the crazier it gets. Late night, we usually get the bar-rush and parties. The partiers usually order the Big-Ass because it feeds a ton of people."

Another pizza option for students up late is Pizza Shuttle. It is open until 2:30 a.m. Monday through Thursday, 3 a.m. on Friday and Saturday and 1 a.m. on Sunday.

"We get a bar-rush and get really busy," David Sells, Pizza Shuttle employee, said. "We sold 140 pizzas between 1 and 2 a.m. last Friday."

Another option, for a more home-cooked type of meal is Bob's Diner.

"The middle of the night is usually college students and some regulars," Lindsey Schmitt, fifth year in elementary education, said. "It's kind of chaotic, especially the weekends after bars close."

Dara's Fast Lane convenience stores are open 24 hours and attract a lot of students who are up late.

"On the weekends we get all kinds of people," said Dave Lynn, sophomore in open option and assistant manager at the Dara's at 1816 Claflin Road said. "We get people up late studying, people that can't sleep and, of course, drunk people."

"We get a bar-rush and get really busy. We sold 140 pizzas between 1 and 2 a.m. last Friday."

Nate Laster, freshman in secondary education, said working late nights are what makes the job fun.

"I've only worked the graveyard-shift once but it was fun – especially with all the partiers and the interesting things they do," Laster said.

Students said they go to Dara's because it's close.

"Usually, I come by Dara's for drinks," Kiel Huntoon, junior in business, said. "I'm usually just up being drunk. Dara's is handy. Especially compared to Wal-Mart all the way across town."

For those closer to Wal-Mart or students willing to make the drive, Wal-Mart gives students the option to get a little shopping done while they're awake.

"We have a lot of students that shop late at night," Ron Werner co-manager of Wal-Mart, said. "It's a pretty steady flow throughout the night. The university in town really helps with late night traffic."

Students can also catch late night movies at the K-State Student Union that show most Friday and Saturday nights during the Union Program Council's "After Hours" or see movies that run late at the Seth Childs Cinema.

Students looking to stay on campus can visit the Union to go bowling, play pool or play games in the arcade.

On Fridays and Saturdays the recreation center is open until 1 a.m.

Rock'It Bowl, which features glow in the dark lanes and music, is offered every Friday night from 10:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Mortensen's latest movie may leave viewers guessing

"A History of Violence"

Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

Ok, we get it now – Viggo Mortensen is a badass.

As Aragorn in the "Lord of the Rings" trilogy, Mortensen pretty much single-handedly took back Middle-Earth.

He was a ruthless Master Chief in "G.I. Jane."

In "Hidalgo" he rode a horse for a long, long ways.

In the latest Mortensen-led bad ass trip, he is the gentle, caring Tom Stall, who owns a diner in a small Indiana town in "A History of Violence."

In this sleepy town, Stall is known, respected and married to Edie (Maria Bello). His son, Jack (Ashton Holmes), is bullied by a few jerks at school. His daughter, Sarah (Heidi Hayes), is an adorable, innocent blonde, and everything seems set up to be a nice slice of typical American life.

Then two criminals appear as Stall's Diner is starting to close. They ask for coffee, and the violence (and the questionable history thereof) begins.

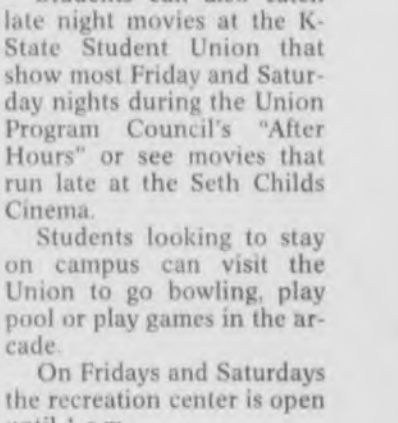
Stall mops the floor with the two vagrants, killing them both with some nice shooting.

Once Stall is labeled a hero, mobster Carl Fogarty (Ed Harris) shows up with some thugs thinking that Stall is someone who has wronged him in the past, and suddenly everything gets confusing.

To say the least, this movie is absolutely raw.

The violence is very graphic and extreme, and the sex is just as raw. But once you get past that, the movie plays with your mind. It is almost a mystery movie when you try to figure out if Stall is who he says he is, a typical Midwesterner, or is he in the Witness Protection Program?

The movie toys with the mind, but after a while, it seems like some annoying kid trying to poke you in the eye.



The relationships of the Stall family starts off warm and well connected. They seem to develop by the second in the beginning, but later on they become caricatures.

The absolute worst part of the movie is when Stall's past starts to be revealed and suddenly, everyones is talkin' like somes sorts a Eastern gangsters.

Perhaps the rawness of the movie is part of the charm that David Cronenberg was looking for, but starting off as a gentle, typical, lovable family and seeing it dismantled by violence, thugs and organized crime is actually quite disturbing.

Mortensen does do a good job of being a gentle guy turned thug. The actual story is good, as well, but it seems that it goes from believable to unbelievable to ridiculous by the time the ending comes.

Overall, "A History of Violence" is an alright movie, but make sure you don't have any sharp objects, because the ending is so ridiculously trite that you will want to gouge your eyes out.

Of course, then you'd have a history of violence.

opportunities to get lots of players swings," Werner said. "We expected them to be good, which they are a good team, but I think we are just better. We had a game plan and stuck with it."

K-State out-hit the Cyclones .274 to .180.

The Wildcats also tallied five service aces to Iowa State's one.

Fritz said she knew her team needed to play well to beat Iowa State, who had won three consecutive matches entering Saturday.

"They've got some significant wins, so they are playing with some confidence right now," Fritz said.

K-State, which usually plays its home matches at Ahearn Field House, played at Bramlage for the first time since the 2003 Wildcat Invitational.

Werner said most of the players did not mind Bramlage, but still prefer Ahearn.

"It was different playing here, but it is still our house, so we had to defend our court," Werner said.

Fritz said the move was only for one game, and she was glad her team got the opportunity to play in front of some new fans.

"Hopefully, we were able to attract some people who hadn't seen volleyball and maybe can get excited about volleyball," Fritz said.

of Lawrence without a single season above .500.

Mangino's departure would be a setback for the Jayhawks in their so-called "progression" as a team, as blind Kansas fans like to think the Mangino era has been.

And all the while, the Wildcats will be molding and shaping their young talent for another decade of dominance over the defenseless Beakers.

EQUESTRIAN

K-State returns from Chicago with 8 top finishers, team title

By Jessica Barnard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Northern Illinois University was probably happy to see the K-State Equestrian team leave Chicago.

That's because the K-State team finished in first on both days of competition at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show.

The Wildcats also claimed High-Point honors on both days of competition, beating out the nine other teams in their region.

K-State combined for 43 points and eight individual first-place finishes Saturday and 41 points on Sunday, beating host school Northern Illinois.

Coach Teresa Slough said schools hosting the shows tend to be their strongest competition.

"A lot of times a host team will ride stronger when they're hosting than when they travel," Slough said.

This was the first away show the English riders competed in, after hosting South Dakota State last weekend in Manhattan.

Along with the eight individual first-place finishes, a K-State rider also claimed High-Point rider on Saturday.

Sheena Linders, junior, finished as the High-Point rider for the first time in her collegiate career Saturday.

She said it was exciting to be the High-Point rider in the competition because former varsity riders Dehlia Burdan and Allison Woodworth claimed High-Point honors at most of their shows last year.

"My parents and I were just so excited about it all," Linders said. "I have never gotten it; it was very, very fun."

Senior rider Casey Finnell was Reserve High-Point rider on Sunday.

Slough said she was impressed with how consistent Linders and Finnell were, saying they competed well in both the flat and fence competitions.

Slough added she is pleased with the performance of the team.

"We definitely are looking pretty strong now, in comparison to the other schools in the region," Slough said, "There were a bunch of riders that did a really good job. Our riders have definitely put the time in."

The team is undefeated so far this season, beating South Dakota State and Black Hawk Community College.

Linders said she was pleased with the team's performance over the weekend.

"We have amazing riders, even the beginners," she said. "The walk/trotters are an important part of the team, we just have a really good team. We all work out really hard. We all have a very important part on the team, it works out really well.

"We're just good."

MEN'S GOLF

Wildcats begin tournament play at Alister MacKenzie Invitational

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team, coming off its second consecutive fourth-place finish, will be playing back-to-back tournaments for the first time this year.

The Wildcats head to Fairfax, Calif., today and Tuesday to compete along with 15 other teams in the Alister Mackenzie Invitational.

The team played on the par-71, 6,583-yard course last year, and coach Tim Norris is confident the Wildcats can better their fifth place finish from a year ago.

"Everybody's game is in pretty good shape right now, and I think we have a chance of improving on our finish from last year and hopefully get a victory," Norris said. "It helps that three of the five guys played here and played well last year."

The K-State team will consist of seniors Ben Kern, Tyler Cummins and Jonathan James, who all played in the Alister tournament last year, along with sophomore Kyle Yonke and freshman Robert Streb.

The top three Wildcats from last year are also in this year's event. Kern led the way for the Cats last year with an 11th-place finish after carding the eighth-lowest individual 54-hole score in school history, a one-over-par 214 (73-71-70).

James was right behind Kern, tying for 14th place with a three-over 216, which was his highest place of the year.

Cummins finished one stroke behind James to tie for 27th.

Streb said he is having an excellent start to his collegiate career, and he said he feels his game and his teammates' knowledge of the course will be positive factors this week.

"I expect to play well," Streb said. "I have been hitting the ball well and everybody else is looking pretty solid right now, too, so we should be alright this week."

Kern played a few practice rounds on Sunday to prepare for the tournament, and said he and his teammates are excited to begin play.

"We will win," Kern said. "If we all play to our potential like I know we can, then we will win this tournament."

SENATOR | Roberts discusses immigration, Congress, intelligence information access and sharing between the nation's 13 intelligence agencies.

"We are safer and I feel very confident that we will continue to make progress," he said.

Roberts is also on the Senate's Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry.

"When you're from Kansas, you're not appointed to the agriculture committee, you're sentenced to it," he said.

He touched on his work with Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., on the avian flu, a new energy bill designed to reduce the nation's dependency on foreign oil and K-State's bioterrorism and agroterrorism research.

Roberts compared Supreme Court nominee Harriet Miers to the K-State football team.

"She's underestimated," he said. "She may outperform."

He said throughout history, 12 Supreme Court justices have not been judges.

Roberts ended his speech with a short question-and-answer session about immigration, changes in Congress and the country's intelligence agencies. He said he plans to run for re-election in 2008.

Pike's Super Homecoming weekend brought together 250 to 300 active members and alumni from across the country and around the world, Damas said.

"We're planning on having it every three years," he said. "We might have it more often just because we've gotten such a positive response."

Donald F. Cox was in Pike's 1955 pledge class.

He said the homecoming was an opportunity to reunite with old friends.

"I have rekindled my interest in guys I knew 50 years ago," he said. "This is a marvelous chance to get together and see them face-to-face."

The weekend consisted of a dinner and auction on Friday, a post-game tailgate on Saturday and Sunday's breakfast.

Friday's auction raised close to $14,000 to renovate the fraternity's study room, Damas said. Two featured auction item were a North Carolina basketball autographed by former University of Kansas men's basketball, and current North Carolina men's basketball coach Roy Williams, and a lunch with Roberts in Washington, D.C.

"It's nice having all the older alumni coming out," said Jon Carrel, Pike member and junior in business administration. "They all came over for the traditional Saturday night hamburgers. That was kind of cool."

blankets, food and tents.

"It will be a while before they get back their houses and it's going to get cold very soon."

The United States has committed at least eight helicopters from operations in Afghanistan to help deliver supplies, but many areas are not seeing any help.

Tariq Mahmood, communications minister for Pakistan told the AP that there are some remote regions that troops, "have not started relief work ... where people are still buried in the rubble, and in some areas nobody is present to organize funerals for the dead."

Rahman said those wanting to help could contact her.

"People are going to be very sad," she said.

"It's like New Orleans all over again."

FOOTBALL | K-State wins Governor's Cup, loses another lineman to injury

(4-1, 1-1) to a win may have been more impressive due to the injuries K-State has sustained on the offensive line.

For the third time in as many weeks, K-State lost an offensive lineman to injury. Saturday, left guard John Hafferty went down with an apparent knee injury, forcing the Wildcats to shuffle many positions along the front line.

Consequently, for the second straight week, K-State was held to less than 40 yards rushing. Last week against Oklahoma, K-State rushed for 22 yards while against Kansas (3-2, 0-2), the Wildcats managed 35 yards on the ground.

Snyder said the injuries sustained by the offensive line have contributed somewhat to the lack of offensive rhythm the last two ballgames, but more than that, it has been the defenses K-State has played.

"Yes, you lose some continuity when there is constant turnover," Snyder said. "We've played against two very fine defenses against the run. That stands for something."

While the Wildcat offense struggled to 182 total yards, the K-State defense was busy holding Kansas to 236 yards of offense and one field goal.

At their meeting at midfield following the game, Kansas coach Mark Mangino told Snyder, "Your defense was incredible."

The Wildcats also forced three turnovers, held the Jayhawks to 1-of-4 inside the red zone and had two sacks, one of which went for a safety with 3:39 left in the game.

Senior linebacker Ted Sims said the win over the Jayhawks was sweeter after losing to Kansas 31-28 last year in Lawrence, especially for the defense.

"Overall, I think we had the better defense," Sims said. "(Winning) four out of the five times that I've been here is a good deal. If there was any game we wanted to win this year, it was to beat KU.

"Our defensive coordinator (Bobby Elliott) wouldn't let us call ourselves the Lynch Mob, but I think we deserved it today."

Coming out

Stories of 5 students who revealed their true selves

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today is the 18th annual National Coming Out Day, sponsored by the Human Rights Campaign Foundation, to encourage and help gay, lesbian and transgendered people make their sexual orientation known to friends and family.

Five K-State students volunteered to tell their stories.

IS IT A CHOICE?

While it is impossible to tell scientifically why a person is homosexual, the general consensus among the five K-State students is that it begins early in life.

"I have really early memories," Adam Paxson, senior in music performance, said. "It was early enough that it's not really a choice."

The students are split on the cause of their sexual orientation. Some suggested their sexuality is determined by the way they grew up. Others said it was because they were born a certain way, and still others said it is genetic. Regardless, they agree that no conscious decision was made.

"I don't think it's a choice," Trent Smith, graduate student in anthropology, said. "I don't want to be different. It would be a whole lot easier if I was like everyone else."

WHEN THEY KNEW

Gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people realize their sexual orientation at different times.

"It was gradual," Garrett James, sophomore in vocal performance, said. "I always knew something was different, and I knew for sure in eighth grade."

For others, it took an event to make them realize they were different.

"I knew when I was six or seven," Erin Erhart, senior in English literature, said. "I was with my older brothers, and they always whistled at girls. One day, we were at a gas station, and I saw this really pretty girl, so I whistled at her."

Erhart's father smacked her on the back of her head and told her to never do it again.

"It was then that I realized something was different," she said.

Paxson never thought about his sexuality until high school, when his best friend told him that he was gay and he knew that Paxson was too.

"I had thought that I might be bisexual for a bit, thinking that in the end I would be with a girl," Paxson said. "But then in high school, I knew for sure I was gay."

Sarah Lawver, senior in philosophy, didn't realize she was gay until she fell in love with her best friend. Her friend is straight but the two remained close.

"I was the last person in my high school graduating class to figure out I was gay," she said.

COMING OUT

James told his best friend last September, and it was only a month ago that he finally told everyone else. He told his female friends first, and

Student fights off would-be attacker

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student fought off a man who entered her home early Sunday morning, said Riley County Police Department Capt. John Doehling.

Kimber Melton, junior in apparel and textiles, told police a man entered her home between 1 a.m. and 2 a.m. Sunday at 1858 Claflin Road, Apt. 2.

Doehling said Melton heard a noise coming from the bedroom of her apartment. He said Melton thought it was her cat, but when she went to check it out she saw a man outside of her window.

Doehling said Melton ran to the front door and went outside to see who it was. He said the suspect then ran around the house and Melton ran inside without closing the door behind her.

Doehling said the suspect followed Melton into her home and Melton tried to protect herself with a baseball bat she retrieved from underneath her bed. After a struggle, Melton kneed the suspect and the suspect ran away, Doehling said.

The suspect is still unknown and was described as a white male in his 20s, about 6 feet tall, 180 pounds, wearing dark clothing and a black ski mask.

Doehling said the suspect has a similar description to the serial rapist the Riley County Police Department believes to have raped six women since October 2000.

"I would not necessarily connect this incident to what we've come to know as the serial rapist, but the incident is obviously similar in the description of the suspect," Doehling said. "I'm sure we will be looking at this considerably more."

Melton declined to comment.

2 rapes reported

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department received two reports of rape this weekend.

RCPD Capt. John Doehling said early Sunday morning a 17-year-old girl reported she was raped by a person she knew.

Doehling said the victim made a connection with the suspect at a party Saturday night and went back to the suspect's home at an unknown location in Manhattan. Doehling said the victim reported the suspect raped her at his house.

The suspect was described as being a white male in his early 20s.

Doehling said there were no injuries beyond the rape.

The incident is still under investigation, and there have been no arrests.

In an unrelated incident, a 21-year-old woman reported a rape that occurred between 10 and 11 p.m. Sept. 13.

Doehling said the victim was at a bar in the south central part of Manhattan and was followed into a restroom and raped by a white or hispanic male about 6 feet 3 inches tall, weighing about 280 pounds.

The victim was not injured, and Doehling said the case is also under investigation.

DeLay charges affect Republicans

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The recent indictment of Tom DeLay, the former majority leader of the House of Representatives, may not only affect Texans.

According to the Oct. 2 edition of The New York Times, many Republicans in Texas dismissed the indictment of DeLay as politically motivated, and said it would have little effect on DeLay's career or Republican domination of state politics.

DeLay and two of his associates were indicted Sept. 28 on a conspiracy charge and Oct. 3 on charges of money laundering and conspiracy. DeLay had to surrender his role as House majority leader after the indictment charges but has denied the accusations.

DeLay
FORMER MAJORITY LEADER

However, James Franke, associate professor of political science, said the DeLay case is not an isolated incident.

"This case affects the entire Republican party and reflects upon the administration," he said.

Franke said campaign finances is the immediate issue, but the case is symptomatic of future problems.

"I think the larger issue has to do with the impact and ability of this administration to continue to govern effectively," he said. "That's why this case is worth paying attention to."

The general public is cynical about ethics and politics in general, said Diane Swanson, professor of manage-

Several items stolen from Chi Omega house mom

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Chi Omega house mother reported items stolen from her room in the sorority house Sunday, said Riley County Police Department Capt. John Doehling.

Kathi Haynes, 53, reported her laptop, camera, diamond earrings and iPod stolen at about 3:40 p.m. Sunday, totaling to $5,000. Haynes was not available for comment.

Doehling said Haynes was on a trip from about 6 a.m. Sept. 30 to about 1 a.m. Oct. 5. When Haynes returned, she waited to unpack her bags until later on Oct. 5, he said.

When she did unpack her bags, Doehling said she noticed her iPod was missing. Haynes said she thought it may have been stolen at the airport, but later she noticed her laptop and camera were missing from her closet and her diamond earrings were missing from her dresser drawer, Doehling said.

Doehling said the incident is still under investigation.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

10 dead in Northeast
At least 10 people died in heavy downpours in the Northeast and about six people remain unaccounted for, including a couple whose house was washed away. Floods tore up highways, tossed vehicles like toys and knocked out electricity from North Carolina to Maine.

Woman struck by limb
A 60-year-old Denver woman died after an 8-inch-diameter tree limb snapped off and struck her during a powerful storm that dropped up to 20 inches of snow in parts of Colorado. The storm also knocked out power to thousands of people, closed an 80-mile stretch of highway and triggered rock slides in the foothills.

Sebelius chosen to lead
Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has been chosen to lead the Education Commission of the States, the nonprofit group that advises governors, legislators and state education officials about education policy. Sebelius will serve as chairwoman-elect of the group until next summer, when she will become chairwoman for a two-year term.

DON'T FORGET

A new faculty and GTA information session will be from 3:45 p.m. to 4:15 p.m. today in Union 206.

Union Program Council will meet at 5:30 tonight in the Union Station.

An information table for the sixth annual Integrity Week will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. today at the Union Food Court.

Mortar Board sponsors forum

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

University Forum
When: Noon today
Where: Union Courtyard
How much: Free

Five university and community leaders will be open for questions at noon today in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

Mortar Board's annual University Forum includes panelists Pat Bosco, dean of student life; Michael Burns, student body president; Amy Button Renz, president of the K-State Alumni Association; Jayme Morris-Hardeman, city commissioner; and Ruth Dyer, associate provost.

The forum will be open-microphone style, with students and other attendees able to ask questions from noon to 1 p.m. It is intended to be a dialogue with campus leaders about issues important to students, Candi Hironaka, Mortar Board co-adviser, said.

"These people would have the information students have questions about," she said. "We're hoping students will stop and listen."

Renz said the panelists bring expertise from different areas of campus and Manhattan, including student life, community and social services, central administration and alumni viewpoints.

She said she anticipates addressing how the Alumni Association works with current students and how the K-State Alumni Center operates.

"People assume our main audience is graduates," Renz said. "It'll give me a chance to clarify."

Dyer said she is prepared to discuss the honors program K-State is now implementing, the quality of faculty and students, and why certain degrees are marketable.

"It's important to keep the dialogue going between students and faculty and administration," she said.

Mortar Board, a national college senior honor society, has been facilitating the forum for at least eight years, said Patrick Simpson, Mortar Board leadership chair and senior in biology.

He said the forum gives students an opportunity to learn the how and why of on-campus events as well as university changes and improvements.

"It's also a chance for administrators to learn from students," he said.

Mortar Board members have prepared topics for discussion, but want students to bring up issues that matter to them, Simpson said.

"We think it's important for K-State students to be informed," Hironaka said. "Hopefully there will be lessons learned and information gained."

OZtoberfest to feature original munchkins

The Wizard of Oz
When: Friday through Sunday, Oct. 20-23 and 27-30
Where: Columbian Theater, 521 Lincoln Ave.
Cost: $15 for adults, $12 for children ages 4 to 12

When Dorothy tapped her ruby red slippers and said, "There's no place like home," she returned to Kansas. And ever since the release of the 1939 classic "The Wizard of Oz," Jane Albright, resident of Kansas City, Mo., has been trying to find a way for Kansas to pay tribute to one of her favorite movies.

This weekend, Albright, as well as those in the Wamego, Kan., area, will have the opportunity to celebrate "The Wizard of Oz" with the city's first OZtoberfest event Oct. 14-16.

OZtoberfest was originated by employees from The OZ Museum in Wamego. Albright said people of all ages would enjoy the event.

"Craft and food booths, hot-air balloons, games for the kids and street entertainment will be featured in downtown Wamego throughout the OZtoberfest celebration," she said.

However, Albright said the events of OZtoberfest would not be complete without several items the city plans to showcase.

"The first OZtoberfest will kick off with the arrival of original artifacts from 'The Wizard of Oz' movie, including Judy Garland's blue gingham dress, the Wicked Witch of the West's pointed hat, a munchkin hat, photographs, film clips and several other memorabilia," Albright said. "There were several gingham costumes made for Garland. One was recently sold for $260,000 in London."

In addition to the costumes and various artifacts from the movie, original munchkins will also be participating in the weekend's festivities.

"Seeing original munchkins appear on stage as munchkins, 65 years after the film was released, is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," Jim Ginavan, The OZ Museum curator, said.

More than 123 munchkins were cast in roles when the movie filmed, but Albright said only nine of them remain. All other munchkins had other commitments or cannot travel anymore.

Ginavan confirmed several other cast members from the original movie will perform cameo roles as well. Cast members include Meinhardt Raabe, who played the coroner; Clarence Swenson, who played a soldier; and Margaret Pellegrini, who played the Flower Pot Lady and Sleep Head.

Albright said two grandsons of "The Wizard of Oz" author L. Frank Baum, along with Emmy-winning "The Judy Garland Show" producer and author John Fricke, will also be part of the celebration.

Throughout the weekend, Albright said the cast and families of "The Wizard of Oz" will sign autographs and perform in a variety of skits.

As for participating in the event, Albright encourages people to pay in advance.

"Our show on Saturday night is sold out, Friday and Sunday night are close to full," she said.

OZtoberfest passports are available at $15 for adults and $12 for children ages 4 to 12.

Passport holders will get into The OZ Museum for all of the displays, as well as into other exhibits in the Columbian Theater, 521 Lincoln Ave.

The Columbian Theater's production of "The Wizard of Oz" will run from Oct. 13-16, 20-23 and 27-30.

"The visiting munchkins will only be performing in Friday, Saturday and Sunday shows," Albright said.

As for Ginavan, he anticipates spectacular performances by his cast and guest actors in the theater production.

"We always try to have new and exciting things in the Oz Museum," he said. "We thought creating a hometown OZtoberfest was a great way to celebrate the end of summer and beginning of fall."

TO THE POINT

Forum gives students chance to speak

Do you want a safer campus? How about better technology? Wouldn't it be nice to have desks that aren't crumbling and ceilings that aren't caving in over your head?

At noon today in the K-State Student Union Courtyard, five prominent campus decision-makers will hear your voice.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The Mortar Board's annual University Forum will bring together Pat Bosco, dean of student life; Michael Burns, student body president; Amy Button Renz, president of the K-State Alumni Association; Jayme Morris-Hardeman, city commissioner; and Ruth Dyer, associate provost.

They're there to hear what's on your mind.

Do you object to the proposed parking garage in front of the K-State Student Union? Do you worry about lighting on campus? Are you tired of trying to find off-campus housing because there isn't enough available in the residence halls?

If you're tired about Webmail's reliability or K-State Online's design, say so. If you want to gripe about tuition increases or parking woes, this is your chance.

While the panel already has several topics on its agenda, they are encouraging students to take an active part in the discussion.

You've heard the cliché that it's up to you to make a difference.

Now you have the chance.

Caffeine choices

Coffee better than soda, has more options, health benefits

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

Worldwide, what is the most popular beverage? What ranks second to oil in monetary terms as the most purchased product in the world? For mid-morning respite, does the typical office worker take a soft drink break? Did soda shops appear in popular sitcoms like "Frasier" and "Friends"? No. The answers, my friends, are coffee, coffee, coffee break and coffeehouses.

Coffee is one of the most versatile and commonly consumed caffeinated beverages out there.

Comparatively, soda, pop, coke or whatever name you associate with that bubbly beverage, is seemingly limited to lukewarm, cold, or slushy forms. Honestly, who drinks a soft drink hot? Alternatively, coffee can be served hot or cold, including iced, slushy, smoothie, milkshake and even as a flavor of ice cream.

Unlike soda, coffee may be dressed up not only with flavored syrups, but with assorted flavored creamers, whipped toppings, spices or with a shot of liqueur.

Now let's talk about its near-miracle medicinal purposes. One should always take any research with a few skeptical grounds of coffee. But according to several recent research studies, coffee provides antioxidants, increases metabolism and enhances short-term memory recall.

Have a headache? Coffee reportedly increases the effectiveness of painkillers. Coffee also reduces the risk of certain types of cancer, heart disease and diabetes in both men and women. Also, coffee is essentially flavored water. Every serving of coffee can be counted toward the recommended 64 ounces of daily water intake.

In addition, coffee offers more than just good taste and health benefits. The mere aroma gives it an energetic charisma with which soft drinks just can't compete. Could you imagine attempting to wake up to the smell of a soft drink in the morning?

Although soft drink consumption has become increasingly common as a breakfast item among high school and college kids, I doubt dunking a donut into a soft drink provides the same satisfaction as coffee.

Plus, coffee can complement any meal that a soft drink can and beyond. "Dessert" coffees are made especially to complement sweet treats. For example, cheesecake and coffee make a far better pairing than any soft drink could. In contrast, a root beer float can only offer so much variety.

Even those who absolutely abhor the flavor of coffee can still enjoy a mocha milkshake, for example, which is more or less espresso and ice cream masked in chocolate. And coffee beans may provide extra enjoyment as candy when covered in dark chocolate.

When compared to a regular soda, coffee also provides a better kick when you need those extra hours of cram time for tests. The average eight-ounce cup of coffee contains twice as much caffeine as the average 12-ounce soft drink can and about the same amount of caffeine as energy drinks.

The list of benefits is perhaps as exhaustive as the varieties of coffee. More importantly, coffee holds both an air of collegiate sophistication, a common everyday experience that soft drinks lack.

Christina Forsberg is a sophomore in English and economics. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Soda provides all of the perks without the bad breath, teeth

LAUREN ROHRER

We all have our addictions. I, for example, happen to be addicted to such things as shoe shopping, show tunes and the Facebook. But most of all, I am addicted to Diet Pepsi.

I know I am not alone in my caffeine addiction. With all the late night studying and early morning classes, caffeinated beverages can seem like a really quick fix.

But while I always go for soda, there are others who reach for coffee.

When I think of coffee, the first thing that comes to my mind is really bad breath.

I dated a guy who was a religious coffee drinker. Because of his caffeine choice, he will be remembered as the absolute worst kisser of my dating life. Breath after having a soda is not even comparable to that of a coffee drinker.

Another thing to consider is the cost. If you are a caffeine addict, it is unavoidable that you will spend a considerable amount of money to support the habit. For example, eight ounces of Folgers ground coffee will cost about $6.95. A 12-pack of Diet Pepsi costs about $3.99. Not to mention the added cost of a coffee maker and the filters that have to go with it.

Something else to consider is preparation time. It is much quicker to pop the top of a soda can than to prepare coffee.

This might make me sound a little bit lazy, but at 8:10 a.m. on a Monday morning, every second counts.

Making coffee is a process. Even to those that do it every day, making coffee takes up a lot of time, time that could be spent sleeping in another five minutes.

Something my grandmother always says about soda is that it rots my teeth out. I don't know if that is true or not. What I do know is that soda doesn't stain your teeth the way coffee does.

My uncle, for instance, doesn't need to say he has been drinking coffee all his life for someone to know he has. The coffee has completely yellowed his teeth. It's really quite gross and I can't imagine why anyone would want that for themselves.

And there is also what I call the post-coffee buzz. The times I have tried to drink coffee, (yes, I tried it, and I wish I could forget it) I got really antsy for a little while and then I felt like crashing completely.

If the point is to get you going for the day, then I don't think coffee has the desired effect if by 10:30 in the morning I am ready to go back to bed.

Another thing to think about is the times of day you crave caffeine. I think of coffee primarily as a morning thing. Whereas, soda is appropriate all day long. It is not uncommon to order a Dr. Pepper with a sausage biscuit on your morning trip to the drive-thru.

Finally, coffee is an acquired taste, and I just don't like it. I might be willing to give another try sometime if they invented a type of coffee that wouldn't taste bad, stink or stain my teeth.

Organic foods, SMART SNACKS

By Kelly Schmitt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fries, cookies and candy bars are everywhere. It's easy to be tempted and easy to eat all kinds of foods that are less than nutritious. Pre-packed, processed food is much easier to obtain these days than anything considered healthy.

Previously unheard-of diseases are constantly cropping up across the nation, and cancer doesn't look like it's going to disappear anytime soon.

Now nutrition centers are supplementing for the gardens people once grew in their backyards. Organic food stores provide chemical-free alternatives to the usual grocery store.

So what's the big deal about organic foods?

"They're not laden with pesticides and herbicides. It's the way things should be," said Audrey Clower, assistant manager of People's Grocery Cooperative, 517 S. 17th St.

Be wary of foods that turn something natural into a chemical conglomerate.

"Some things that say low-fat or fat-free are actually loaded with things you don't want," Clower said.

Students on the go don't often have many healthy options, she said.

"The only healthy place I really eat at is Subway," Jeanette Flanders, sophomore in theater, said. "I guess at school, I don't really think about what's healthy. I just get whatever's there."

Flanders said her idea of a snack is usually a bag of chips and a soda.

"It's convenient to just grab a bag and go," she said.

Clower said the health-conscious customers who shop at the People's Grocery Cooperative are people who care about their health and what they're eating. Because organic means the products are grown without using toxic pesticides and fertilizers, organic food buyers are also contributing to a better environment, Clower said.

She also said some favorite healthy snack ideas at the store include almond butter on apples, fruit and nut bars, yogurt, string cheese and dried fruit.

These items, especially the preservative-free items, are not usually available in vending machines, so it takes some planning ahead to eat healthy.

While watching TV in the K-State Student Union basement, Christopher Berger, junior in sociology, drinks a soda and eats a Subway sandwich.

Quick snack ideas

Homemade granola bars
4 cups of rolled oats
1 cup of wheat germ
1/2 cup of sunflower seeds (no shells)
1/4 cup of chopped walnuts
1 cup of honey
1/2 cup of oil
1/2 teaspoon of vanilla extract

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Combine the oats, wheat germ, sunflower seeds and walnuts. In a saucepan, heat the honey, oil, and vanilla until syrupy. Mix into the dry ingredients. Spread on a jellyroll pan. Bake for 20 minutes, stirring every five minutes.

Rice cakes with toppings
Spread peanut butter onto rice cakes. Top with banana slices.

Honesty, sobriety keys to success on dating scene

JOHN BECKER

Since my last column, I have noticed several people trying to date. However, it never seems to work in their favor. I think this problem is occurring because people are trying to be someone they are not.

There are some other problems as well. For example, one person may be way too drunk or not interested and the other person doesn't seem to notice. Here is some advice for guys and girls in the party scene.

First and foremost, be yourself. Acting like someone else is stupid. It will blow up in your face. Be honest. Say you don't like the music if you hate it. Don't lie to build yourself up. Don't try and make other people around you seem lower or less than you. If someone likes you because of a lie, the situation will only go downhill. It won't be good. Be yourself, have fun and let things happen.

If you go to parties looking to find someone, then it's probably not a good idea to drink to the point when you look like an idiot. Being uncontrollably drunk is not attractive, ask anyone, guy or girl. (I know from experience that it's easy to make a fool out of yourself when you're that drunk.) Besides, how can you be yourself if you have no idea what is going on around you?

I have seen a lot of people rejected because they were too drunk. I'm not saying don't drink at all. Keep it within reason, because doing 10 shots and then turning to someone and trying to get with them is not going to work.

You should also be able to tell if the other person is even remotely interested.

"When guys can't take a hint it's really annoying," Kara Thiele, junior in political science, said. "It's pretty obvious when a girl isn't interested. Then they just become the guy at the party who nobody wants to talk to because they're not smart enough to realize that there is no chance."

Don't be the one person at the party that nobody wants to talk to. Learn that no means no and not everyone wants a piece of you.

You should also make it a point to be nice to everyone at the party. You won't have a snowball's chance in hell if you were mean to a friend of someone you're trying to get with.

I am not saying this is easy and there isn't any gray area, but these are just some basic tips. Meeting people and dating is hard for everyone, even the most popular of people.

There is always uncertainty and fear, confusion and awkwardness. When you are just getting to know someone, don't read into everything they say.

They are just as nervous as you and they are probably going to do or say something stupid.

Take risks. Be spontaneous. Don't wear your heart on your sleeve because you just set yourself up for heartbreak.

Marathon running plain nuts

MARK POTTER

Sunday, more than 1.2 million people lined Chicago's streets to cheer on 40,000 runners at the 28th annual LaSalle Bank Chicago Marathon.

No joke – 40,000 runners.

Can you believe that many people actually chose to run 26.2 miles?

Instead, why didn't they just beat their legs with bowling pins for 10 minutes? That would serve the same purpose and take much less time.

I guess most marathon runners simply prefer to endure pain for more than 10 measly minutes.

I should know. I ran a marathon once.

It's been a year since I ran my first and only marathon, and I remember it well.

On a clear, crisp, beautiful morning in the Windy City, the gun sounded and we were off. Five minutes, 54 seconds later, I made it ... to the starting line.

Less than a mile into the race, running alongside my cousin and friend, Mitch, I noticed dozens of runners stopped under a bridge.

I asked, "Are they already getting tired?"

As I neared, I realized these runners were facing the wall, which had streams of liquid running down it. "Awkward," I thought to myself, as I suddenly needed to use the restroom.

Allow me to digress for a moment to share one of my beliefs about marathon running. Barring injury or asthma, I am convinced almost anyone can complete a marathon if they set their mind to it and adequately train.

I'm not saying everyone will finish with a good time, or even be able to run the whole way their first time.

I do believe there is some natural ability involved, but let's be honest: marathon runners are generally not the tallest, strongest, most coordinated or even fastest people in the world.

But the thing is, to want to run a marathon you must be at least a little crazy.

Now back to the race.

I trained for months by gradually building up mileage, and it paid off, at least for the first 23.5 miles. The last 2.7 miles were what nearly killed me.

I made a deal with God that I would not walk during my race, but God didn't mention those around me could walk.

In any case, I continued to trudge along.

With a half mile to go, fighting dehydration and pure exhaustion, I started to climb a small hill, which I later named, "The Hill from Hades."

I turned the corner and, despite my blurred vision, saw the finish line.

As I crossed the line, my muscles immediately yelled at me to stop punishing them. They ached so badly I wanted to cry or at least find a place to sit.

I wiped my face and noticed I had quit sweating, but salt fell from my forehead.

My entire body was covered with salt since I was so dehydrated, causing me to become sick to my stomach.

I tried to eat, but nothing tasted good. I tried to keep walking, but my body needed to rest.

"Only an idiot would do this to himself," I said to myself. "Training for months, choosing to endure large amounts of pain for an extended period of time, preventing myself from walking up and down stairs for a week and paying for a plane ticket, hotel room and entry fee – all this, just to say I ran a marathon? What was I thinking?"

I'm not exactly sure what convinced me to run a marathon, but strange as it may sound, I wouldn't trade the experience for anything.

Hamlin comes into her own on court

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may come as a surprise, but junior Joy Hamlin hasn't always been a talented volleyball player.

"I started playing volleyball in seventh grade, and I was very, very bad," Hamlin said. "I was very uncoordinated, and I looked like a goon."

Since Hamlin has evolved into a standout middle blocker for K-State and began to catch people's attention, the "uncoordinated goon" is hard to see.

Not only is Hamlin leading the Wildcats in blocks with 1.41 per game, she is fifth in the Big 12 Conference in blocks and eighth in hitting percentage at .361. Against Texas A&M, she exceeded 300 career kills.

Yet when Hamlin is asked about her recent accomplishments, she modestly replies, "I have no idea."

Coach Suzie Fritz, on the other hand, has plenty to say.

"I have been incredibly proud of Joy," Fritz said. "There's no doubt she's having her best season, thus far.

When Hamlin first arrived at K-State, she had some improving to do. She let her brain interfere and struggled a bit early on, Fritz said.

"She thinks a lot when she plays and is a very analytical person," Fritz said. "In her first few years, she kind of had to think her way through – it wasn't something that came naturally to her."

Now, with a few years of experience under her belt, she's transitioned into a very fluid player, Fritz said.

Part of Hamlin's problem was her gentle demeanor.

"We kind of had to get a little tiger in her and get her to be a little more tenacious," Fritz said. "Let her know it's okay to be that way as a volleyball player and not as a person."

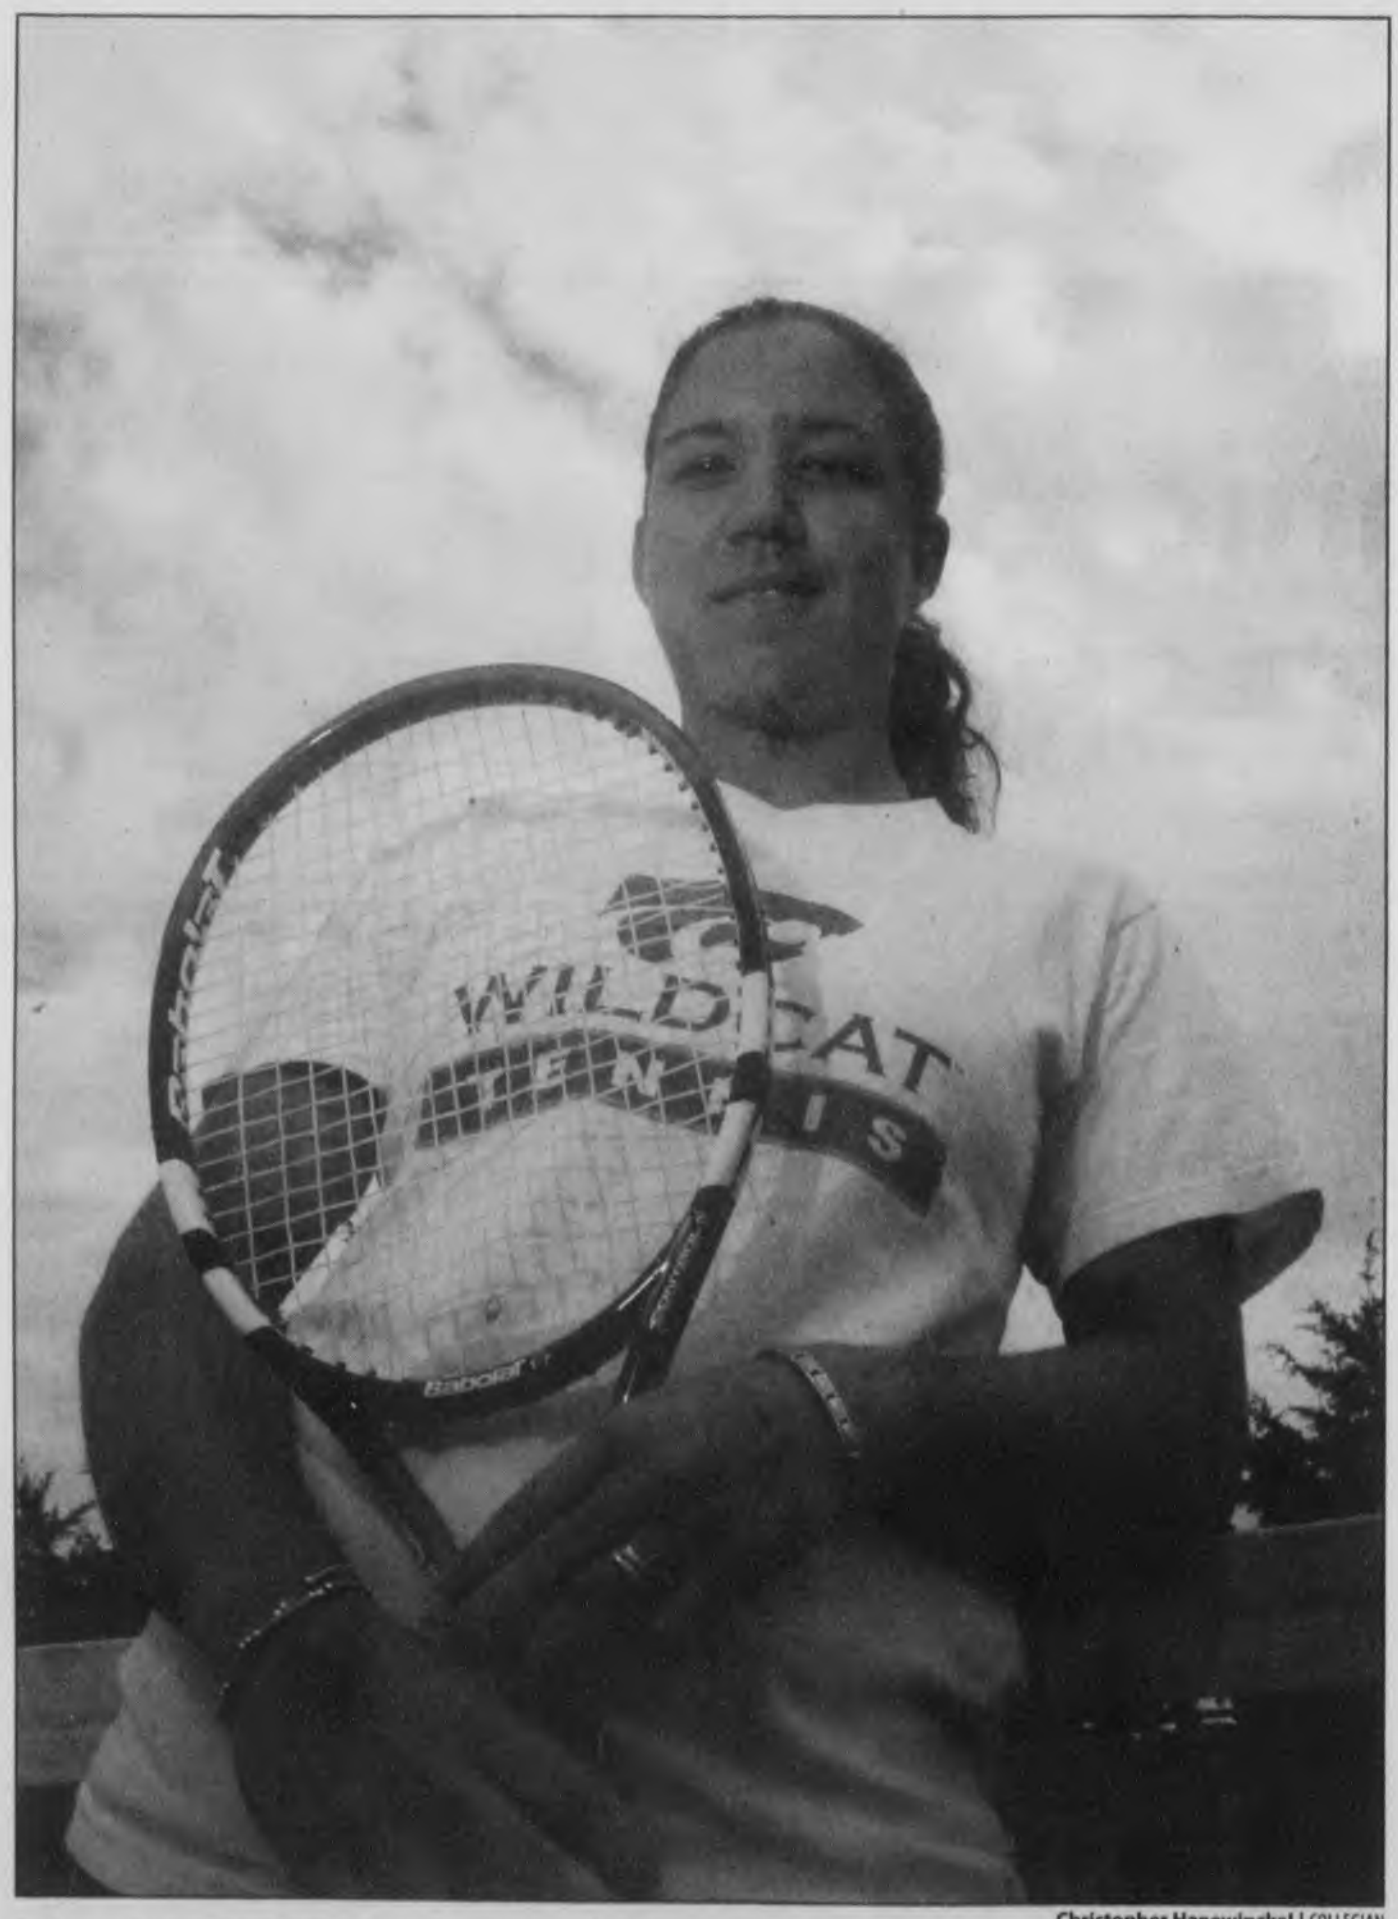
Hamlin said she has worked hard to become a proficient middle blocker and wants to continue improving.

"I love to play volleyball," she said. "I love the girls, I love the team camaraderie and the competitive spirit.

"Now, I want to keep being a great leader and an efficient volleyball player."

While volleyball demands much of her time, Hamlin said she does have a life that extends beyond the court.

Because she teaches a anthropology lab this semester and hopes to pursue a career in forensic anthropology, she devotes much of her time to her anthropology major.



When Hamlin goes back to her hometown of Winfield, Kan., she has more free time.

"When I go home, I have more of a life," Hamlin said.

Even in her free time, Hamlin has a constant reminder of volleyball. Her fiancé is a former member of the K-State track team.

"We met in the weight room," Hamlin said. "He's my college sweetheart."

Role model

Senior tennis player Jessica Simosa is 4-2 in competition this season, finishing third in her last tournament in Indiana. Simosa is K-State's No. 1 singles player.

Simosa steps up play for senior season

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jessica Simosa has had a career full of ups and downs as a K-State women's tennis player.

The lone senior on the Wildcat lineup has always shown talent and promise, but it is her recent consistent play that has allowed her to become a role model for her team, coach Steve Bietau said.

"You'd have to call it an up-and-down ride," Bietau said. "Over the first three years, I would say there was a small difference from year to year."

Simosa owns a 4-2 singles record through her tournaments this season.

"This year has been different," Bietau said. "This year she has been consistent. I've seen her play six singles matches, and she really hasn't had a bad match."

Simosa, from Valencia, Venezuela, said she won her position as K-State's No. 1 singles player by working hard in practice every day.

"I was not surprised because I beat everyone in my challenge matches," Simosa said. "I've been doing well in practices, but then I was skeptical because I didn't know how I would do in matches against other universities."

Simosa, who has posted a winning record every year she has been at K-State, said the competition she faced in tournaments in South America made her a better player in college.

"When I came to America, there were some good players, but I think there were better players in South America because most of them became professional," Simosa said.

Bietau said Simosa being at K-State helped recruit sophomore Viviana Yrureta, who recently took second place in her flight at the Indiana Hoosier Classic.

"It was a factor in us getting Viviana because there was someone she knew, maybe not all that well, but someone she had seen in tournaments," Bietau said.

Simosa, who placed third in tournament play in Indiana last week, is now settling into a leadership role for a team of mostly freshmen and sophomores.

"As far as I'm concerned, she's doing all the right things," Bietau said. "She's an example that I want all the other players to follow."

Simosa said offseason conditioning improved her game and gave her the consistency she needed to succeed.

"When I first came here, I had never had physical conditioning, so when I first came here there was a lot of improvement in that area," Simosa said. "I wasn't a bad player when I came, and I became a better player."

Simosa has also received awards for academics, winning a 2002-03 Intercollegiate Tennis Association Scholar-Athlete award as well as being a two-time Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll selection.

"She's not afraid to work and she's serious about school," Bietau said. " The record speaks for itself in terms of academics."

Simosa said she hopes to leave her mark at K-State by breaking the record for all-time wins. She is currently at 61 career singles wins. The record is 79.

"I would like to break the most wins record," Simosa said. "Last year, I won 21 matches, and I think I'm more consistent this year and have a better chance of winning matches."

CFB | Former Alabama coach, Time Inc. settle suit

EL PASO, Texas — Texas-El Paso football coach Mike Price felt vindicated after a settlement was reached with Time Inc. over a Sports Illustrated article recounting a night of drinking at a topless bar in Florida.

Price

Price sued the magazine for $20 million, claiming he was defamed and slandered by a story detailing his actions the night he visited a topless bar in Pensacola, Fla., in April 2003 while still head coach at Alabama.

He acknowledged being heavily intoxicated, but denied allegations of sex at his hotel that the magazine reported. Alabama fired Price a few days before the article was published.

NFL | Saints lose running back McAllister for year

Already beset by a natural disaster, the reeling New Orleans Saints have now suffered a physical one as well, with a Monday morning MRI exam revealing that star running back Deuce McAllister has a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee, an injury that will sideline the five-year veteran for the rest of the season.

McAllister

A team spokesman confirmed the injury and coach Jim Haslett will announce it at his Monday afternoon news conference.

The injury occurred in the third quarter of Sunday's loss at Green Bay when McAllister caught a screen pass and his right foot seemed to catch in the turf at Lambeau Field.

NFL | Williams rejoins Dolphins after suspension

After serving a four-game suspension for violating the NFL's substance-abuse policy, Ricky Williams returned to the Miami Dolphins on Monday.

Williams

Once thought of indifferently by many teammates in training camp, Williams has made inroads since.

There is one unresolved issue surrounding Williams — his contract. Agent Leigh Steinberg has asked the team to revisit the deal, perhaps to add some incentives, according to the paper.

Because of his four-game fine and suspension for multiple violations of the league's substance-abuse policy, Williams stands to make approximately $284,000 this year.

MLB | Phillies fire GM Wade after eight seasons

PHILADELPHIA — Ed Wade was fired as general manager of the Philadelphia Phillies on Monday after failing to get them into the playoffs during his eight years on the job.

"This was a very difficult decision. No one works harder than Ed, and he has served this organization extraordinarily well for over 16 years," team president David Montgomery said in a statement. "At the same time, we have not been able to achieve the goals we have set for the Phillies."

Philadelphia finished this season at 88-74, one game behind NL wild-card winner Houston.

The Phillies haven't reached the playoffs since 1993, and have won just one championship (1980) in the franchise's 123-year history.

NBA | Auerbach returns home from hospital

Boston Celtics patriarch Red Auerbach returned to his home on Friday as his health continues to improve, The Boston Herald reported Monday.

The 88-year-old coaching great has been in and out of the hospital over the past month for tests and a successful surgical procedure. As recently as last month, he was in intensive care for an unspecified ailment.

After Auerbach was released from intensive care last week, he was suffering from a loss of appetite, but friends told the Herald that Auerbach had begun asking for Chinese food within the last week.

Auerbach has two daughters, Nancy and Randy. His wife, Dorothy, died in 2000. Auerbach has spent the past 55 seasons with the Celtics.

Go Red workshop to highlight heart disease risks for women

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women will have the opportunity to learn about how to protect themselves from one of the top killers of women in the United States today.

Manhattan's first Go Red for Women Workshop and Luncheon will be from 9:30 a.m. till 1 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Ballroom. The event will feature heart related health screenings, educational sessions and a motivational speaker.

This is the second year the event has been on a national level, said Michelle Geering, Regional Director for the American Heart Association. The event is in response to a survey the American Heart Association had in 2003, asking women what they believed their biggest health threat was.

Go Red for Women
What: Informational workshop, luncheon and health screenings
When: Registration from 9 a.m. to noon today, program starts at 9:30 a.m. Luncheon from noon to1 p.m.
Where: K-State Student Union Ballroom
How Much: Individual ticket is $30

Only 13 percent of the women surveyed answered heart disease, despite the fact that, at the time, it was the number one killer of women in the United States.

"We decided that we needed to do some more public education about women and heart disease," Geering said.

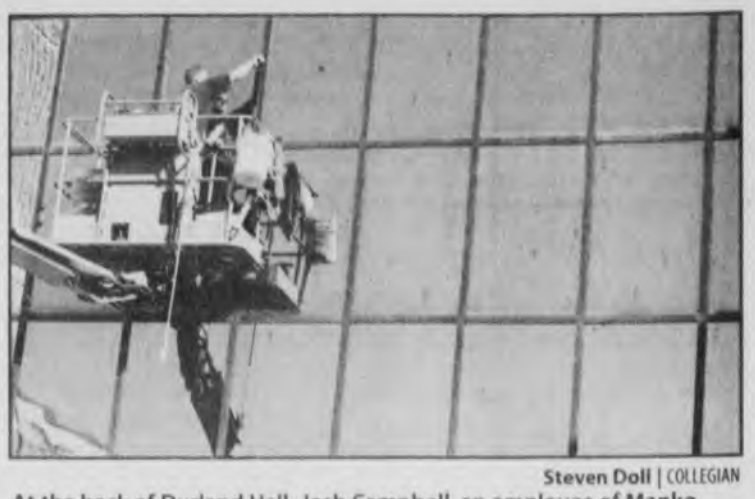
Only recently has heart disease fallen from the number one spot, largely due to an increase in public awareness, said Dr. Debra Doubek with Stone Creek Family Physicians.

"I heard disease alone in the last year dropped below cancer because of awareness campaigns like this," she said. "It makes a difference to educate our public."

Tickets for the event will be $30, which will go toward educating women about heart disease and toward heart disease research.

Along with the ticket sales, several local businesses will be supporting the event.

From 9 a.m. until noon, participants will have the choice of four break-out sessions on self defense, stress management, weight loss tips and quick and nutritious meals.



Participants will also have the chance, from 9:30 a.m. until 10:30 a.m., to have their cholesterol panel, glucose, blood pressure and body mass index checked to see if they are at risk for heart disease.

"There are controllable and uncontrollable risk factors, and it's important that women learn how to control their own risks," Geering said. "Cholesterol, blood pressure, weight – it's important to know those numbers, and a lot of people, both male and female, don't know what those numbers are."

Along with the informative sessions and screenings, Roxann Scheid, a motivational speaker and American Heart Association volunteer, will be speaking at the event. She will be discussing how important it is that women know and understand their "numbers," such as blood pressure and cholesterol level.

"You know what kind of clothes size you wear, right? But do you know what your cholesterol level is?" Doubek said.

COMING OUT | Students help family, friends come to terms with their sexual orientation and later, a friend from high school overheard, and the news James is gay spread quickly.

"Within 48 hours I had 31 different phone calls from people asking me if I was gay," said James, who told his mother but whose father doesn't know.

"My mom thinks he might take it a lot worse, and she doesn't want to choose sides," he said. "He's a Vietnam vet, so I understand."

Erhart's family was not accepting.

Her dad is a Southern Methodist lay preacher and her brother is a Southern Baptist lay preacher. She told her mother last month.

"My mom called and asked me a bunch of questions," she said, "so I told her."

Erhart's mom screamed, cried and told her daughter she didn't know her anymore. She threatened to take away all her college money, and still hasn't come to terms with the fact her daughter is a lesbian, convinced she is just going through a phase.

Erhart's father does not know she is a lesbian, but Erhart thinks he has an idea.

"He said I wouldn't be welcome at family functions," she said, "but I haven't actually told him, so he can't do anything."

Erhart's immediate family goes to great lengths to deny her sexuality so the rest of her family still does not know. Her friends do, though, and they accept her for it.

Many parents remain in denial about their children and the path they have taken.

Lawver comes from a strong Christian background and grew up around many gay stereotypes. When she finally told her mother last year, her mother said it was impossible for her to be a lesbian because they don't fall in love with straight girls, like Lawver did with her best friend.

"It was hard for me to admit it, because I had been denying it for so long," said Lawver, who said she grew to accept she was right and, for once, her mother was wrong.

Religion played a part when Smith came out during his junior year of college.

"My dad was OK with it," he said. "My mom started telling me Bible quotes and we fought for two hours using Bible quotes."

Smith told his roommate first and then his brother. Both accepted his coming out.

"It took me so long because I kept saying to myself that I hadn't met the right woman," he said, "I thought I could meet her in college."

For more information

To learn more about National Coming Out Day, visit the Human Rights Campaign Web site at www.hrc.org.

Smith and Paxson's experiences with coming out show it will not always cause family problems.

Paxson came out to his family during his senior year of high school, when his sister was attracted to his boyfriend. He had to tell her he was gay, and the boy she liked was his boyfriend.

They both kept it a secret until his family became suspicious and wanted to know what was going on.

"They just wanted me to say it," he said. "I beat around the bush for a while and they were like, 'Just say it.' There's no reason not to admit it. There's nothing to be ashamed about."

THE AFTERMATH

After the five K-State students came out, they placed themselves under others' scrutiny.

Some have never been treated unfairly, but others have been the subject of various kinds of abuse -- sometimes verbal, other times physical.

Smith has a scar to show for his encounter with someone's opinions. Two years ago in February, he was walking home with some friends from a party.

"They saw another party and wanted to go to it, but I wanted to go home because I was tired," he said.

As he was walking down an alley to the residence halls, he passed a darkened garage where the light had gone out.

"As I was passing the garage, someone hit the back of my neck with a beer bottle," he said. "Five guys that I couldn't see beat me up so badly that the only way I could get away was by crawling."

The five men hit him and yelled at him about his sexual orientation, but Smith never saw their faces. When the beating finally stopped, he crawled and limped home.

"The front desk guy was sitting there and when I came in the door, I will never forget his face. I guess I looked pretty bad," he said.

The residence hall's community assistant called Smith's friends. They took him to the hospital, but he refused treatment.

He didn't have the money to pay for the hospital visit and didn't want to put it on his insurance because he hadn't come out to his parents yet – the same reason he never filed a police report. The doctor said he would pay Smith's bill.

Smith had a fractured frontal bone and needed between eight and 13 stitches. He still has a scar over his left eyebrow.

"That experience is what made me so adamant about showing people on campus that we're just people," he said.

SINCE COMING OUT

After coming out, all five said they have found another part of themselves.

Paxson is the president of Queer Straight Alliance, and Smith serves as its graduate adviser. Smith said that since his beating, he has become even more involved on campus.

James is an active member of QSA and is confident enough with his sexual orientation that he no longer cares what others think.

"I have enough friends who care about me," he said," and I don't need you [if you aren't OK with my orientation]."

Erhart said she plans to tell her father this summer she is a lesbian, even though she thinks he may cut her off from her family.

Lawver said she dreams of one day getting married in her hometown with all of her family present.

"I think it will happen," she said.

management and founding chair of Business Ethics Education Initiative.

"It's not okay that the public's bar for ethics has been lowered over the past few years, not only with the government but with business," she said. "It means that we expect less from our leaders and that cannot lead to a good outcome in my estimation."

Brian Tadtman, senior in prelaw and political science, said the indictment of a high-ranking official in a political party is substantial.

"The indictment will slow down the work in the legislature," he said. "Whether the charges are federal or in the state of Texas, the case is still going to affect the way the House runs and House representatives."

Vanier family donates $3.5 million to coaching fund

Vanier

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jack Vanier and his family – longtime supporters of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics – have donated $3.5 million to establish the university's first-ever endowed head coaching position, Athletics Director Tim Weiser announced Tuesday.

The gift was made by Jack and Donna Vanier, Brookville, Kan.; John Vanier, Salina; Martha Vanier and husband Bob Krause, Manhattan; and Mary Vanier, Manhattan.

"Building our endowment is vital to the future of Kansas State Athletics, and we are very grateful to the Vanier family for their continued generosity and support," Weiser said in a statement. "For K-State, an endowment represents a long-term solution to the escalating costs of competing at the highest level by giving us a constant stream of revenue and guaranteeing a source of future funding."

The donation, the largest single contribution in K-State athletics history, will be placed in the university's pooled investment fund, with the interest used to fund the base salary of the head football coaching position.

Coach Bill Snyder said while the monetary gifts are appreciated, he values his friendship with the Vanier family for their support and friendship.

"They're wonderful people, and it's a cherished relationship that goes far beyond the dollars and cents," Snyder said at his press conference Tuesday. "I've been here for, going on 17 years, and I think the relationship has been prominent throughout that entire time.

"I think they've always been there for the university, for the athletic program, for our football program, throughout the entirety of my tenure here."

Weiser also announced the gift from the Vaniers will be used to create the Ernie Barrett Endowment Society for K-State Athletics.

Funds donated to the Barrett Endowment Society will go toward permanently endowed scholarships, coaches' salaries, facilities and programs.

Officials say Manhattan water safe for residents

Drink it up

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While some students may not prefer the flavor of Manhattan's water, it is safe to drink, said Jerry McIntyre, deputy director of the Manhattan Department of Public Works.

McIntyre said all the treatment is done at the plant near Bluemont Hill off Tuttle Creek Boulevard. The water is filtered then treated with chlorine and ammonia, which form chloramines in the water – a chemical that keeps the water safer to drink than chlorine alone.

The water is softened to improve flavor with the addition of lime – the mineral, not the fruit – and fluoride is added to prevent tooth decay.

However, some students are just skeptical of the taste.

"It's pretty bad," said Shiva Mohandass, graduate student in architecture. "I live in Jardine, and I've complained to them several times."

He said the taste improves after running for 30 seconds to a minute, but that's not enough.

"It's potable, but they need to do something," Mohandass said.

Jasmine Smith, freshman in open option from Kansas City, Kan., said Manhattan water could be better.

"It's nasty. It tastes better than my home, but it's still nasty," she said. "I drink bottled water."

Walter Dodds, professor of biology, said that water in older buildings can have objectionable tastes in it because of deposits in their pipes that build up with time.

"It's not dangerous, but you get stuff growing in the lines over the years," he said.

Dodds said algae, chlorine and conditions related to low oxygen levels can be factors in causing undesirable tastes in water in other cities, but are very unlikely to affect Manhattan's system.

Manhattan's water comes from 16 wells near the junction of the Kansas and Big Blue rivers. McIntyre said the city is fortunate that it doesn't have to take water directly from the rivers.

"It's generally better water quality," he said. "It requires less treatment."

McIntyre recommended consumers who want better tasting water try filling a container with tap water and leaving it in the refrigerator for a few hours to let some of the less-flavorful agents dissipate.

He said filtration systems are also a good option to improve the flavor, especially ones that use carbon or activated charcoal.

Catrisse Orr, sophomore in nutrition science, said Manhattan's water tastes better than in her hometown of Sterling, Kan. Orr said her family uses reverse-osmosis filtration to improve the water they get from their well, but it's still not as good as Manhattan's.

"Well, I guess I'm lucky because my hometown water's not all that great," she said.

What's in the water

Arsenic- Erosion of natural deposits; runoff from orchards; runoff from glass and electronics production wastes

Barium- Erosion of natural deposits; discharge from metal refineries; discharge of drilling wastes

Chlorine- Water additive used to control microbes

Chromium- Erosion of natural deposits; discharge from steel and pulp mills

Fluoride- Water additive that promotes strong teeth

Nitrate- Runoff from fertilizer use; leaching from septic tanks, sewage; erosion of natural deposits

Selenium- Erosion of natural deposits; discharge from petroleum and metal refineries; discharge from mines

Residents, businesses upset about new tax policy

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some Manhattan residents and local businesses were upset after a discussion of a new tax policy for the city. But they, along with city representatives, addressed the policy concerns at the City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

City officials want to set up a tax increment finance district, where taxes are gathered in particular business districts in Manhattan. Then, TIF would allocate a percentage of those taxes toward projects like the $140 million downtown redevelopment.

TIF, as City Manager Jason Hilgers explained, provides the process necessary to give private and public partnership in the downtown redevelopment project.

"Tax increment financing is an incremental tool to allow the city to participate in the redevelopment project," Hilgers said. "Currently, each entity receives $80,000-$120,000 annually in property taxes. The TIF fund will capture the incremental increase of property taxes ... the TIF fund will also capture the local sales tax at 1.3 percent."

Hilgers said money collected through TIF is guaranteed to stay within the city, distributed toward relocated businesses, tenants and owners, public sidewalks, plazas and trails.

The proposal includes two major TIF districts, one enclosed by Pierre Street, Fort Riley Boulevard and Fourth Street, and the second bound by Bluemont Avenue, Tuttle Creek Boulevard, Leavenworth and Fourth Street.

Robert Green, real estate council for O'Reilly Auto Parts, 324 Fort Riley Blvd., said adoption of TIF is inappropriate for business.

"We've heard a lot of benefits in the TIF district, yet O'Reilly Auto Parts, which has been here since 1995 has not been contacted once," he said. "There are significant issues that need to be addressed."

O'Reilly Auto Parts is included in the TIF districts. However, Green said other competitors are not a part of the districting, which puts competitors at an advantage. The current redevelopment proposals will force the O'Reilly Auto Parts store to relocate, Green said.

"If we move, it will give this market a benefit to our competitors, blocks away," Green said.

Congressman speaks to political science class

By Tessa French
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Rep. Jerry Moran, R-Kan., was on campus Tuesday.

Moran spoke to assistant professor of political science Seok-Eun Kim's political science class on alternative fuel sources, gas prices, education and the war.

"Congressman Jerry Moran was amazing to hear in class today," Matt Elder, sophomore in finance, said.

Moran told the class about his background.

He was raised in Plainville, Kan., and now resides in Hays, Kan., with his wife and two daughters. He is serving his fifth term as a congressman.

Moran discussed several pieces of legislation he has voted on in Congress and the research and development of alternative sources.

"The need for oil has grown, and domestic production and refining capacity have not kept up," Moran said.

Moran attributed high gas prices for Kansans to the lack of domestic refineries.

Moran's stance that the No Child Left Behind act turns teachers away from the profession and that teaching should be done in a classroom, not through standardized tests, was a point that Elder and Stefan Burrell, sophomore in sociology, said they thought was well-made.

"Education should be left to the locals," Burrell said. "I have friends who want to be teachers, so it is great to see he is looking out for their future."

Elder said Moran commented on the war as well, saying the United States should try to stabilize the Iraqi government and help Iraq become a self-sufficient democratic society.

At the same time, Moran said the United States needs to leave Iraq soon and let Iraqis run the government.

Moran has been to Iraq and Afghanistan twice.

"The troops do not necessarily agree with being there," he said.

But Moran said the soldiers he spoke with said they believed they were making a difference.

"On a personal level, congressman Moran seems to be very in touch with his constituents, and he proves himself to be a valuable asset in our national government," Elder said.

"Hopefully his 10-year tenure in the House of Representatives will continue on."

Rep. Jerry Moran talks to political science class about his career Tuesday. Moran answered students' questions about gas prices and education. Moran said he wanted to meet the needs of every Kansan from Johnson County to Johnson City.

U. Texas has 25th annual bed races

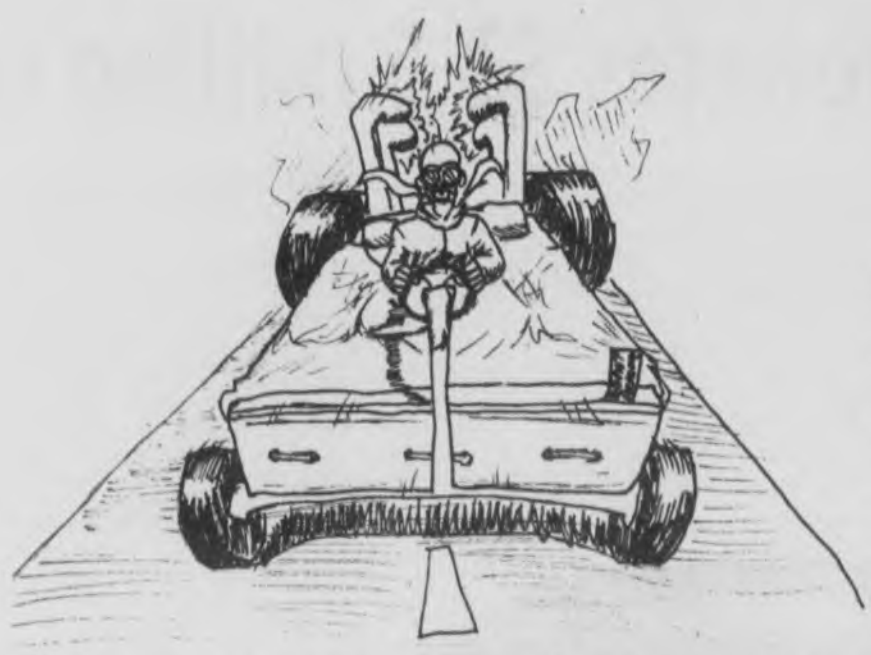

Illustration by Bennie Green | COLLEGIAN

ARLINGTON, Texas – A brightly-lit Maverick Stadium at the University of Texas at Arlington was center stage for students and spectators as the 25th annual Bed Races took place from 9 p.m. to midnight.

Participants raced in three divisions: men's, women's and coed. Winners received $100. Teams were also judged for best costume, both individually and as a group, and received $50.

The Punt, Pass and Kick contest was from 7 to 9 p.m. The event tested participants on their football skills.

Around 10 p.m., students dressed in pajamas and sneakers attempted to break the State University of New York at Albany's pillow-fight world record. Recorded on April 17, 3,648 people at the New York school used the fluffy objects against each other to secure the Guinness World Record crown.

Hot air balloon rides were originally planned, but EX.C.E.L. program coordinator Patrick Kelly said lack of communication caused the company to schedule another event at the same time in another state. He said that as a replacement an artist drew caricatures.

Bed Races, which were first held at Maverick Stadium in 1980, were originally suggested by the Counsel of Traditions to the Student Activities Board as a way for students to participate in a campus-wide event.

The first beds were built with caster wheels from shopping carts. With the excessive amount of pushing that the beds went through, a sturdier style was adapted and is currently used.

The event has moved through the years as the campus has changed. Members of EX.C.E.L. said they believed holding the event at night would entice more students to attend.

Interdisciplinary studies senior Georgette Talley, co-chair for the Bed Races, said she hoped for a good turnout.

"A lot of students are pumped up, and it's at night," she said. "There are a lot of people excited about the event."

GOOGLE CATERS TO STUDENTS' NEEDS

EUGENE, Ore. – Google, the Internet search engine that started as two Stanford University students' research project and became a household name, has launched a campaign to make its services more useful and accessible to college students.

On Sept. 4, Google made accounts for Gmail, its e-mail service, available to anyone with a college or university e-mail account – that is, any e-mail address ending in .edu.

Gmail accounts were previously available only through an invitation by a current Gmail user.

Debbie Jaffe, product marketing manager for Google Inc., says Gmail accounts work well with school e-mail accounts because school-related e-mail messages can be forwarded to a Gmail account, enabling students to take advantage of Gmail's storage and search capacities.

Because Gmail accounts have more than 2.5 gigabytes of storage space, there is no need to delete old messages. University e-mail accounts currently have 250 megabytes of storage space.

All of Google's user services are offered for free. The company stays afloat through advertising revenue.

"Sponsored links" alongside Google search results earn money for Google every time a user clicks on them

Computer algorithms scan Gmail messages for key words and run sponsored links next to e-mails that correspond with the e-mail's content. For example, an e-mail from a friend about getting together to make pancakes might pop up with sponsored links about pancake recipes.

But privacy is maintained.

"No human individuals or third parties ever look at private e-mails," Jaffe said.

'Missionary Positions' shown to help pornography addicts

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Beth Knetter, junior in family studies, watches a film about pornography issues in society Tuesday evening in Forum Hall at the K-State Student Union.

A documentary about pornography was shown to more than 300 students from Manhattan Christian College and K-State Tuesday night in the Union.

The showing of "Missionary Positions" was sponsored by the Manhattan Christian College in relation with the National Porn Sunday Campaign.

"Porn affects everyone – people who are Christians, people who are not Christians, men and women and children.," said Eric Sanford, director of student development at MCC.

The National Porn Sunday Campaign was started by pastors Mike Foster and Craig Gross and over the past weekend, more than 75 churches from the United States and overseas, participated in the national campaign by showing the documentary.

The documentary shows the ups and downs of the start of the online church, www.xxxchurch.com, founded by Foster and Gross. The site is for people addicted to porn and offers places for such people to get help and find support groups.

Foster said they wanted to let people decide for themselves if porn was good or bad.

The documentary starts at the beginning of the Web site idea, where Foster has a revelation in the shower.

"God said one word to me – 'porn,'" he said.

From that point, he started the Web site. Throughout the documentary, both Foster and Gross try to promote the site.

They finally hit a break when porn director Jimmy D offers to make a commercial for their Web site.

"We want to educate and warn about the other side of the porn industry," Foster said. "It's not just about porn, it's about loss of innocence and the hurt."

Former corporate criminal lectures about ethics during Integrity Week

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Patrick Kuhse worked for more than 20 years as a financial planner, stockbroker and entrepreneur before a run-in with the law forced him to flee the country.

He surrendered to the American embassy in Costa Rica after almost four years as an international fugitive in Central America. He was incarcerated in the San Sebastian Prison and remained imprisoned for four years in various foreign and federal prisons.

Upon his release in 2001, he began lecturing to fulfill his sentence of 208 hours of community service and he has been traveling the country ever since.

Kuhse is the ethics fellow-in-residence for the Eller College of Management at the University of Arizona and an ethics fellow for Suffolk University's Sawyer School of Management in Boston.

He will deliver a speech titled "Ethics 101: A Street-Smart Guide to Maintaining Ethics in Business" at 9:30 a.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium. His speech is part of the College of Business Administration's Business Ethics Lecture Series.

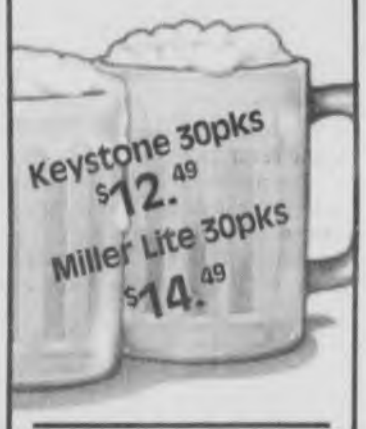
Kuhse is a former corporate criminal, so his lecture will provide a personal account of one man's ethical journey and where it's taken him, said Brian Niehoff, department of management head.

"It's going to be fairly riveting, from what I understand," Niehoff said. "I hope (students) walk away with a little bit deeper understanding and perspective on business ethics. That's the best you can hope for, to change someone's behavior so in the future they make an ethical choice rather than an unethical choice."

Kuhse's lecture is a part of the sixth annual Integrity Week, which takes place this week and includes various activities for students, faculty and the public.

Students can visit an information table from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Food Court and two lectures on ethics in the business world will be on Oct. 13.

"Anything they say will apply to everything we do in our lives – academic, business, anything we do in our careers," said Loni Jensen, assistant adviser for Honesty and Integrity Peer Educators. "It's not just following the rules, but following the rules because it's the right thing to do. It's the spirit of the law."



Bernie Hayen, instructor of management, will deliver the lecture, "What American Business is Doing Right," at 7 p.m. Thursday in the Union Flint Hills Room.

Integrity Week is organized by HIPE, a student organization started in 1999 and known as the educational component of K-State's Honor System.

"Students need to realize and understand their role within the community," Erin Erhart, senior in English literature, said. "Working with the honor system and hearing cases, words you hear over and over again are 'It doesn't affect anyone but me,' or 'It was just a little quiz. I don't understand what the big deal is.' The thing is, it is a big deal."

TO THE POINT

Residents can improve water quality

Manhattan's city water may taste a little funky, but city officials have assured us any chunks in it are perfectly harmless.

Honestly.

That said, residents have plenty of options if they aren't completely convinced their tap water is potable.

Jerry McIntyre, deputy director of the Manhattan Department of Public Works, recommended filling a container with tap water and leaving it in the refrigerator for a few hours. As the particles settle, the water will clear up and the taste should improve.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Another option is using filtration systems, such as those that attach directly to faucets or pitchers with built-in filters. They are available at most department stores and are relatively inexpensive. For the true water connoisseur, buying bottled will assure you the cleanest water straight from some obscure glacier in a remote locale.

The city pumps up to 17 million gallons of water every day, and the system currently in place has to cleanse it of a slew of pollutants from farms and city waste. It is inefficient and downright whiny to complain about something as trivial as the water's taste.

The problem, which likely lies in the city's pipe system, would require costly upgrades and replacements. That money could be better spent elsewhere.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Xanga: Rambling or release?

Blog site serves no purpose, should have restrictions for users, should be wiped out

GRANT REICHERT

It was once said, given enough monkeys at enough typewriters, the complete works of Shakespeare would eventually be produced. But I think it's safe to say Xanga has finally disproved this theory.

First, some necessary background: Xanga, despite sounding like something Tom Cruise might worship, is actually a popular blog community. And a "blog," for those of you who have been living in isolation for the past 10 years, is a mixture of mucous, dirt and germs that forms in your nasal cavity to prevent infection.

As such, you'd think a blog would be a private thing. But Xanga mashes all these blogs together into one giant blogger and then lets the masses have a lick.

Xanga blogs are hideously garish creations, like some high school web design class fired up Dreamweaver, dropped a tab of lysergic acid, and just let the colors flow to the soundtrack of Fantasia.

Lime green text on a pink background? Whoever told you that looked good is not your friend; kill them immediately. I had to wear a welding mask just to read it, and it still permanently fried the image of your poorly narrated drunken escapade into my retinas.

For research, I forced myself to travel Xanga, a journey that took me deep into the heart of darkness, and let me tell you, Xanga is like hell.

I mean, Xanga is like hell if hell were run by a depressed, wine-cooler-addicted 15-year-old, just dumped by her 22-year-old boyfriend, Keith. Xanga just screams unicorn obsession and sleeping pills.

Okay, that's the fourth drug-abuse insinuation, but that's only because I'm giving Xangans the benefit of the doubt and assuming their posts were written under the influence of some powerful intoxicant.

If not, if these bloggers operate only under the influence of their own narcotic egocentrism, then Xanga truly is the Internet's open sewer of unabashed narcissism.

Worst of all, Xanga isn't even interesting. Every post falls under one of two categories, either "this is what I had for dinner last night" or "look how sullen/introspective/enigmatic I am." If someone ever ate a goth and posted about it, Xanga would probably implode.

Some people say Xanga is a good way to share thoughts with friends. Don't get me wrong; I have friends. I just don't care what they think. Thinking is a sign of weakness.

I grew up with four brothers, and if you ever gave any indication you were anything more than a flatulent, emotionless robot, your carcass would be out on the open plains, picked apart by vultures and coyotes, faster than you could say "I don't understand this metaphor."

Jaci likens Xanga to democracy, but even democracy requires sensible restrictions, such as fewer rights to minors, and only giving Siamese twins one and a half votes.

Likewise, we need sensible restrictions on Xanga, such as if you start an account, we saw off your hands and solder your eyes shut.

Democracy requires information. But with Xanga, when you get that many monkeys at keyboards, don't be surprised when the Shakespeare-to-thrown-fecal-matter ratio is less than you'd like. There's a reason a pre-Xanga Madison wrote about the dangers of faction rather than "OMG thomas jefferson <3 sally hemings lol. BLUSHES."

Cleanse yourself of Xanga; wipe that blog on the bottom of a desk in Eisenhower where it belongs and never look back.

Online diaries give everyone chance to speak their minds, meet like-minded people

JACI BOYDSTON

After millennia of wars, oppression and other atrocities caused by societal inequalities, an innovation has finally come along that will equalize the playing field and may even bring world peace.

Its name? Xanga.

As us newspaper folks know, the ability to publish is the ability to control information and information is power.

In the past, only those wealthy enough and important enough to control a printing press or a government propaganda machine could publish.

Xanga, a Web site that lets people create free, user-friendly online journals, has provided a soapbox from which everyone with access to a computer can spout their ideas.

Yes, Xanga is annoying.

Yes, it's narcissistic.

And it's loud and garish and filled with far too many 14-year-old goth kids bragging about how often they cut themselves.

But then, so is our society.

Because Xanga is free and easy, it's the most democratic medium available, and that means that everyone is welcome to participate – even those self-involved, annoying teenyboppers that the more elite media would exclude.

As a democratic society, the idea that everyone has a voice is something we should celebrate.

If you disagree with this, you are a communist.

Even more important than the fact that Xanga is a democratic forum that welcomes even people who TypE lIkE tHis, there's also a lot of good stuff on Xanga.

Looking through a Xanga blogring composed of 305 K-State students' diaries, I found plenty of interesting reading.

One student documented his frustrations with writer's block, one discussed the recent loss of a loved one, one wrote a joyful account of Saturday's winning football game and one posted photos to share with friends.

To be fair, I also found angst-ridden break-up poetry, accounts of drunken shenanigans and five-paragraph entries lacking punctuation or capital letters, but hey – putting up with idiots is the price we pay to live in a democratic society.

To make blanket statements like, "Xanga is ugly" or "Xanga is self-involved" is to forget all the useful applications of having a free and easy online diary.

Xangans (as they are officially called) can join groups to meet like-minded people around the world.

They can get cheap therapy by writing about their problems and receiving feedback (in the form of comments and "eprops") from friends and strangers.

They can get the word out about parties, events and other important things to a large group of people quickly.

They can also use Xanga to keep up with old friends and stalk people without their knowledge.

Just because a bunch of whiny 14-year-olds use Xanga to gossip about their crushes and destroy the English language doesn't mean you should assume you're too cool to have a Xanga of your own.

So, give it a try – catch up with old friends, read what other people are writing about and share some ideas of your own.

And if you want to obsess over your crush or massacre the English language, that's OK, too.

That's the beauty of Xanga – everyone can publish exactly what they want to, no matter how worthless or asinine it may be.

Long live democracy.

Fast Facts on SGA voter registration drive

- In presidential election years between 1972 and 2000, the voter turnout rate had declined by 16 percent among young citizens before rebounding by 11 percent in the 2004 election.
- In 2004, 47 percent of 18- to 24-year-old citizens voted and 66 percent of citizens 25 and older voted.
- Single young people, particularly women, are more likely to vote than married young people. The turnout among single women ages 18 to 24 increased by 12 percent, to about one third, since 2000.
- In 2004, much of the surge in youth voting was driven by an increase in voting among African-American youth. African-American turnout fell off in the 1988 election and remained relatively stable until the 2004 election, in which African-Americans experienced a jump in turnout of more than 11 percent over that in 2000, the greatest increase in turnout of any racial or ethnic minority group during the recent election cycle.
- About nine out of 10 local party leaders said youth political engagement is a serious problem.
- Nearly 93 percent of local party leaders said they feel local parties can make a big difference in getting young people involved in politics.

Army National Guard location may move from airport to Levee Drive

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Army National Guard might soon have a new home.

After the Manhattan Urban Planning Board approved the proposal on Monday, the City Commission had the first public meeting regarding the new ordinance on Tuesday.

If approved, the ordinance would move the Kansas Army National Guard from its current home at Manhattan Regional Airport to 721 Levee Drive. The move between facilities might be as soon as November, pending approval of the city ordinance.

City and Kansas Army National Guard officials have been working out a plan to where the city would buy the new building and parking lot for $2.8 million. The guard would then pay back the debt to the city over three years.

Col. Fred Peck, chief of staff of the Kansas Army National Guard, said the move would be of greater benefit to the military group.

He also said the proposed facility will include training logistics, military vehicles, maintenance, fuel storage, manufacturing and warehousing," Peck said.

He said the site will also have a small amount of weapons storage.

While storing explosives might be a concern, Peck said the Kansas Army National Guard plans to increase security for the new site.

"The facility is all in place," Peck said. "They are just proposing to move in and do some partition walls in the facility and add some fencing for additional protection."

Other additions to the site include a small manufacturing plant, recreational facility and daycare center. These extra add-ins are what make the site a strong part of the community, Manhattan mayor Ed Klimek, said.

The new guard home would be open to the public, and with the fitness facilities and more family-based features, Peck said he hopes the proposal will draw in community support.

Chamber campaign wins honorable mention

By Annette Lawless

Manhattan is looking for a makeover.

So the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce has made significant efforts to change the face of the city through its "Retire to the Flint Hills" campaign.

Last month, the International Economic Development Council awarded the campaign an honorable mention at its annual conference in Chicago.

Campaigns like the one in Manhattan make a significant contribution to a community, Steven J. Budd, IEDC chairman, said in a report.

"Economic development pursuits have always played an invaluable role in strengthening the nation's economy one locality at a time," Budd said. "And as our country faces challenges, ranging from an elevated national debt to a declining yet still significant unemployment rate, these efforts take on an even greater importance."

With nearly 45,000 residents in the Manhattan area, the local chamber of commerce wishes to attract an older population back into the community.

Bringing in an older population draws in families and businesses, stimulating population growth, said Christy Seele, marketing and program coordinator for the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

Seele said being recognized for the "Retire to the Flint Hills" project is only a sampling of what the chamber has planned in the future.

"In terms of enhancing the marketing, we continue working with our advertising agency and (expanding) advertising through different avenues – magazines, newspapers and the web," Seele said.

Throughout the retirement campaign, the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce has mailed a series of targeted newsletters to more than 25,000 Kansas State University alumni.

The target age group, those 45-65 years old, have received a series of postcards mailed in three to four week intervals.

Thus far, the chamber has received more than 500 inquiries about the retirement campaign.

By the year 2010, the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce said they wish to increase the population of people 45 and older by 3,000.

Seele said the numbers of the campaign will be released in the federal 2010 Census Bureau report.

Wildcats seek redemption against Buffaoles in Boulder

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State volleyball team didn't feel a rocky mountain high last year when Colorado defeated the Wildcats 3-0 in Boulder.

But when the Wildcats (14-3, 5-2 Big 12) take the court at 8 tonight in Boulder, they will look to redeem themselves, and feel increasingly confident about competing on the road.

Heading into tonight's match, the Wildcats' "choke," as junior middle blocker Joy Hamlin calls last year's loss at the Coors Events Center, is a thing of the past.

"At KU, we proved that we could bring the same fire and intensity and competitiveness on the road," Hamlin said of the Cats' victory in Lawrence on Oct. 5. "We have a more positive road mentality that will help us in Colorado."

In K-State's last three victories, the players have managed to right many of their wrongs, sophomore libero Angie Lastra said.

"We are on track right now," Lastra said. "They (Colorado) are a very good team, and they'll be playing in their own house. We just need to create our own environment there and play hard."

A win tonight against the Buffaloes would mark K-State's fourth consecutive victory. Despite Colorado's 6-7 overall, 2-6 Big 12 record, the Wildcats can't underestimate the Buffs' ability, coach Suzie Fritz said.

"They are better than their record reflects, for sure," Fritz said. "I'm a little bit surprised they're not having more success this season."

Fritz said Colorado is capable of being a threat because they are a balanced team.

Shooting for the green, K-State's Helene Robert competes in the Marilynn Smith/Sunflower Invitational at Colbert Hills Golf Course Monday morning. Robert earned a first place finish in the tournament at 1-under-par 215.

Robert wins Sunflower Invitational

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Little things like pouring rain and cool temperatures didn't bother Helene Robert on Tuesday.

"When you're playing golf, you want to have a rhythm," the junior from Lac Brome, Quebec, said. "It's going to be hard to go back out there and play and keep your focus."

Robert finished first in the Marilynn Smith/Sunflower Invitational with a score of 1-under par 215. After Monday's play, Robert was tied for seventh with a 1-over-par 145.

During Tuesday's round of 18, Robert shot a 2-under-par 70, to beat Nebraska's Stephanie Ruiz and Texas Christian's Camille Blackerby, who were in the top two spots after Monday's play.

The field of 12 teams was forced to suspend play Tuesday because of rain within an hour of the 8:30 a.m. shotgun start at Colbert Hills.

"I just wanted to play or go home," sophomore Kali Quick said. "Obviously, I want to play, but it was terrible out there. The greens were puddled up so it was not even worth playing.

"It's not fun when it's like this, and it's hard to play it. It's also hard to grip the club."

Coach Kristi Knight said Quick and sophomore Hailey Mireles were having problems adjusting to the weather conditions.

"Kali and Hailey got off to a tough start," she said. "After the delay, they settled in and had good rounds."

Play resumed at 11 a.m., but the course continued to be challenging. The greens were slow and many of the players lost their rhythm.

In spite of the weather, the team finished with a score of 19-over-par 893. The Wildcats finished third behind TCU and Nebraska.

On Monday, the first day of play, the Wildcats shot 19-over par for a team score of 595. They were in third place behind TCU, who shot a 6-under-par 570, and Nebraska, who shot 6-over-par 582.

Knight said third place was very good, considering the field.

"I know they wanted to win and we came up a little bit short," she said. "If they look at the big picture of how they played, they played good golf and got beat by two teams who played better golf over the last two days.

"There's no shame in getting beat by TCU and Nebraska, who are two good teams."

Overall, the team was pleased with Monday's performance.

"I think we played really good," Quick said. "We gave away a shot here and there, but everybody played really solid and we had some really good rounds."

Mireles said she can see good things happening with the team.

"We're improving in every single tournament," she said. "There's still a lot of golf left to be played."

Evridge is the right answer at quarterback spot for Wildcats

Jermaine Moreira and Allan Evridge walked off the field together Saturday afternoon after the Wildcats' 12-3 win over Kansas.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Evridge, who replaced starter Allen Webb in the first quarter, put his arm around the K-State receiver, leaned in and told Moreira, "Good job and way to step up. We got to keep this thing going. This is a nice start off, and hopefully we can get a nice little thing going for the next couple of years.

"Keep doing your thing, and I'll keep getting you the ball."

It was not a glimpse into the future for the Wildcats, but what the present state of the team is.

This is now the other Allan's team.

Coach Bill Snyder made that evident, moving Evridge to the No. 1 spot on the depth chart, securing Evridge the starting spot against Texas Tech.

Webb was given every chance to be the man at quarterback this year, and he held up well until Big 12 Conference play began.

In two conference games, one word can be used to describe Webb's play in the pocket: sporadic.

Webb is not comfortable behind a patchwork offensive line that has given up eight sacks in the past two games, and his poor pocket presence, unlike that of Evridge, is why Webb should be on the sidelines, with a baseball hat and headset against Texas Tech.

Snyder said Webb was not out of the quarterback picture, "by any stretch of the means" after Saturday's game, but you have to believe that with his quick hook of Webb in the first quarter, that Snyder had Webb on a very short rope.

Webb made Snyder's decision a bit easier by fumbling a snap and then throwing an interception while in scoring position on consecutive plays in K-State's second series of the game.

It's time to make the move.

Forget about what Webb did against Nebraska last year, because that was last year.

Quit thinking of what Webb can do and what-ifs, and go with a solid, fundamentally sound quarterback like Evridge.

He's not as flashy as Webb, but he does have what Webb is lacking in the pocket and in the huddle – confidence and composure.

"He has to get his swagger back," wide receiver Yamon Figurs said about Webb. "He's got to calm down in the huddle and take control of the offense."

Evridge is the opposite of Webb on the field.

Very rarely does the play clock wind down to nearly zero for Evridge as it does for Webb as he signals for yet another audible.

There is a calmness about him in the huddle that a freshman should not have.

"Like always, he always takes control of the offense," Figurs said. "He gets in the huddle and tells everybody to calm down; it's going to be okay. More like Dylan (Meier)."

Calmness and control are two things K-State needs in the insane Big 12 North division that only has Colorado, which ripped up Texas A&M last Saturday in Boulder.

But can you really believe in them, either?

That is why Evridge will be making his first career start Saturday in a hostile environment on the road against Texas Tech. Where the team will need a calming presence as tortillas fly at K-State players from the stands.

NBA | Stoudemire has knee surgery, out for four months

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Suns will be without all-star forward Amare Stoudemire for about four months after he underwent surgery to repair damage to his injured left knee Tuesday.

Stoudemire

The injury turned out to be far worse than the Suns expected when they announced Monday that team doctor Thomas Carter would perform what was termed "diagnostic" surgery.

Stoudemire, who turns 23 next month, signed a five-year, $73 million contract extension last week, the maximum allowed under the NBA's collective bargaining agreement with the players union.

In a news release, the Suns said Carter repaired a joint surface defect roughly one centimeter in diameter on the inside of his left knee.

NFL | Steelers' QB has hyperextended knee, could play

PITTSBURGH — Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger has a hyperextended left knee and a bone bruise sustained during a game-winning field goal drive at the end of a 24-22 victory over San Diego on Monday night, but hasn't been ruled out of Sunday's game against Jacksonville.

Roethlisberger

The injury isn't as severe as it initially appeared to be.

Roethlisberger, 16-1 as an NFL regular-season starter, was injured with 1:05 remaining when Chargers defensive end Luis Castillo's helmet collided with his left knee as Roethlisberger was completing a 9-yard pass to Antwaan Randle El.

MLB | Pittsburgh Pirates hire Jim Tracy as manager

PITTSBURGH — Former Los Angeles Dodgers manager Jim Tracy was hired Tuesday as the Pittsburgh Pirates' manager, The Associated Press learned.

Tracy

The Pirates will make the announcement at a news conference later Tuesday, according to a source close to the team who requested anonymity.

The move sends Tracy from a team that traditionally has one of baseball's highest payrolls to one with one of the lowest.

SPT | Chinese lifter breaks world lifting records

SHANGHAI, China — Olympic champion Chen Yanqing broke all three world records in the 127-pound weightlifting class on Tuesday, one of two Chinese women to set new marks this week at China's national games.

Chen hoisted 248 pounds in the snatch, beating compatriot Wang Li's 2-year-old world record by 5.5, according to the games' Web site.

She then lifted 314.2 pounds in the clean and jerk to beat the 2002 record of 293.2 set by China's Sun Caiyan. Chen's combined total weight of 562.2 pounds was 33 more than Wang Li's record.

The 26-year-old Chen has had a career revival since winning gold in the Athens Olympics, her first major title since taking the 1999 world championship in Athens.

HFB | 15-year-old girl throws three touchdowns

ORRANCE, Calif. — When the Bishop Montgomery High School quarterback went down with a fractured leg, his replacement stepped in and completed four of five passes for three touchdowns.

There's nothing too unusual about that, except that the replacement quarterback was a girl.
